

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Nov. 8, 1844, and Dec. 20, 1845.

MATHEW v. BATES.

Investment of trust funds—Breach of trust—Deposit of trust securities—Indemnity clause.

A trustee is bound not to entrust any person with the possession of trust property, so as to enable it to be misapplied, to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary, including in that term the ordinary course of business. Thus, where Exchequer bills had been left by a trustee in the hands of the brokers, who also acted to some extent in the capacity of bankers, pending a treaty for a mortgage, and had been sold by the brokers, who had applied the money to their own purposes, it was held, upon the failure of the brokers, that the trustee was liable to make good the loss to the trust estate.

William Mathew, who died in 1834, by his will devised certain real estates in the county of Suffolk, and also bequeathed his personal estate to the defendant, S. R. Brice, and another trustee who died in the testator's lifetime, upon trust, to pay the income to the testator's widow for her life, and after her decease to divide the principal amongst his younger children. He also appointed the trustees executors of his will. The testator empowered and directed his executors and trustees to sell the real estates either by public auction or private contract, and either altogether or in parcels, and to buy in the same as often as occasion should require, without being answerable for any loss which might happen from such buying in; and he directed that the receipts of his trustees should be discharges to purchasers. And after giving a contingent annuity of £600. to his wife, payable in part out of the money to arise from such sales, "gave all the stock and moneys to arise as aforesaid, and all his personal estate, of whatever nature or kind, upon trust for the equal benefit and participation of all his younger children as tenants in common at 21 years of age;" and he directed his said executors and trustees, from time to time, as any moneys should come to their hands, to manage the same at interest by investing the same in a competent share or competent shares of the Parliamentary stocks or public funds of Great Britain, or on real securities in England, in their names, or in the name of the survivor, his executors or administrators; and he gave them the power, at their discretion, to vary such stocks, funds, and securities. The will contained the following clause of indemnity: "It shall be lawful for my executors and the survivor of them, his executors, &c. out of the moneys which, by virtue of this my will, shall come to their hands, to reimburse themselves, &c. all the costs which they shall incur or sustain in the execution of the trusts of this my will; and that they shall not be charged and chargeable with, or answerable or accountable for, any sum or sums of money other than such as shall actually come to their respective hands, or with or for any loss or damage which may happen by depositing any moneys to be received by them as aforesaid, in any bank or banker's hands, or elsewhere, for safe custody, or by laying out or investing the same, or any part thereof, in any real or government securities, or any of the public funds, or by any alteration or transposition thereof, respectively, nor with or for any loss or damage which may happen in or about the execution of this my will, or any of the trusts therein declared, without their respective wilful neglect or default." The defendant Brice sold the real estates, and in March 1840 the purchase-money was paid into his account with Messrs. Oakes, of Bury St. Edmunds, his bankers, by Mr. Almack, the testator's family solicitor, who had conducted the sales. In April the defendant ordered the principal part of the money, amounting to 8,000l. to be invested in Exchequer bills, by Messrs. Wakefield, of Broad-street, the brokers and bankers. This was done in order to make the funds productive during a treaty for a mortgage security which was going on. The Exchequer bills were left in the hands of Messrs. Wakefield. The mortgage negotiation was protracted and eventually went off, so that part of the Exchequer bills, to the extent of 4,000l. remained in the hands of Wakefield until the 6th of April, 1841, when they failed. Then it was discovered that they had sold the Exchequer bills and applied the produce to their own use, and their estate paid a dividend of only 6d. in the pound. Under these circumstances, the widow and younger children of the testator filed a bill for the administration of his estate, and to make the defendant, Brice, liable for the loss which had been sustained by Wakefield's failure. The cause was heard at the Rolls, upon bill and answer, and a correspondence which had taken place between the defendant and Mr. Mathew and Mr. Almack, her solicitor, was admitted and read, for the purpose of shewing that the defendant had consulted and apprised them of all his dealings with the trust funds, and that he had been anxious to do what was most for the benefit of his cestui que trusts. The Master of the Rolls decreed that the defendant was liable to make good the loss which had been sustained by the trust fund, with costs. (5 Beavan, 239.)

From that part of the decree the defendant appealed.

Bethell, Wigram, and Shee, for the appellant, contended that the defendant had done all that reasonable prudence dictated, and that he was not liable for the loss occasioned by the felonious act of the broker. They cited and referred to Knight v. Lord Plymouth (3 Atk. 480); Ex parte Belcher (1 Ambler, 218); Jones v. Jervis (2 Ves. sen. 240); Harvey v. Aston (1 Eden, 114); Routh v. Jones (3 Ves. 565); Mossy v. Banner (1 Jacob & Walk, 241); Langford v. Gascoigne (11 Ves. 333); Shipbrook v. Hinchinbrook (11 Ves. 252); Underwood v. Stevens (1 Mer. 712); Clough v. Bond (2 Myl. & Cr. 496); Hanbury v. Kirkland (3 Simons, 265); Ex parte Griffin (2 Glynn & Jameson); Drever v. Maudslayi (1 Ver. Real Prop. Cases, 183).

Russell and Chandless, for the respondents, the plaintiffs, contended that the defendant, by leaving the Exchequer bills in the hands of the Messrs. Wakefield, without any check or control, had enabled them to commit the misappropriation which had caused the loss of the trust-fund. They cited and referred to Dawson v. Clarke (18 Ves. 254); Bacon v. Bacon (5 Ves. 331); Salway v. Salway (4 Russell, 60; 2 Russ. & Myl. 215); Shipbrook v. Hinchinbrook (16 Ves. 472), and the cases mentioned by the counsel for the appellant.

Bethell, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

Saturday, Dec. 20.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant, who acted as the sole executor of the will of William Mathew, was directed from time to time, as any money should come to his hands, to manage the same at interest, by investing the same in a competent share or shares of the Parliamentary stocks or public funds of Great Britain, or in real securities in England. He entered into an engagement to lend a part of this money on mortgage, and in the meantime, until the mortgage securities should be completed, he directed his brokers, the Messrs. Wakefield, to lay it out in the purchase of Exchequer bills. These Exchequer bills he left in the hands of his brokers, who acted also, to some extent, as bankers, and occasionally as the bankers of the defendant. Considerable delay took place in settling the mortgage securities, and the Exchequer bills were allowed to remain with Messrs. Wakefield from 4th March, 1840, to April 1841, when they became bankrupts. It was then found that they had sold a part of the bills to the amount of 4,000l. and applied the money to their own purposes.

The question is, whether the defendant is bound to make good this loss? It is very painful to be called upon to decide cases of this description.

As it was necessary to be prepared with the money when the mortgage should be completed, and as some time might elapse before that could be effected, the purchase of the Exchequer bills for this temporary purpose might perhaps be a proper and prudent act, in order that the money might not be unproductive to the estate in the interval; I feel compelled, however, to come to the conclusion, after much anxious consideration, that the defendant was not justified in leaving these Exchequer bills to so large an amount, and for so long a period, in the hands of the brokers. It was, in effect, substituting the brokers for himself as guardians and trustees of this property. It was transferring his duty to them. The circumstance of their acting to a certain extent as bankers, and occasionally as his bankers, does not, I think, make any difference. They were allowed to mix these bills with the general mass of securities in their possession—securities in which they dealt—and to exercise an unlimited control over them. I think in this he acted inconsistently with his duty as executor and trustee of this fund. There was the obvious danger that if the Wakefields were at any time much pressed for money, they might not easily resist the temptation of making use of the bills, perhaps, at first, for a temporary purpose, and afterwards be unable to replace them. He was not justified in incurring this risk. It was his duty either to have kept the bills in his own possession, or, if they were entrusted to any other custody, they should at least have been so secured as to separate them from any other property in the possession of the person or persons with whom they were placed.

I am compelled to say, under these circumstances, that the defendant is responsible for the consequences of the insolvency and misconduct of the Messrs. Wakefield.

"Necessity," Lord Cottenham observes, "which includes the regular course of business, in administering the property, will, in equity, exonerate the personal representative; but if, without such necessity, he was instrumental in giving to the person failing possession of any part of the property, he will be liable."

The judgment must, therefore, be affirmed with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Friday, Jan. 23, 1846.
MINTON v. CAVE.

Will—Construction—Bequest—Tenancy in common. T. M. by his will gave to his five daughters, M. S., E., J., and C. a sum of money, and directed the interest to be paid to them in equal parts or shares during their lives, and the principal to be vested in the funds in trust for them, or the survivors or survivor of them. After their deaths, the principal in equal parts to the surviving children, as they should arrive at the age of twenty-one. E. one of the daughters, died without having been married. Held, that the daughters who survived took the whole for their lives, as tenants in common.

The testator, Thomas Minton, by his will bearing date 7th April, 1832, bequeathed as follows: "I give and bequeath to my daughters, Mary (now Mary Campbell), Sarah, Elizabeth, Julia (now Julia Cave), and Catherine, 12,500l. chargeable on my real estate at Shelton alias Snape Marsh, and on my personal money in the funds of the stock of England, or elsewhere, the interest of the above sum, to be paid them in equal parts or shares during their lives, and the principal to be placed in the funds, or Bank of England, in trust for them, or survivors or survivor of them, and nothing but their receipts shall be a release or discharge to my trustees; nor shall any bankruptcy of themselves or their husbands, have any power over them or their said trustees, but solely for their maintenance; the principal, after their deaths, in equal parts to the surviving children as they arrive at the age of twenty-one."

The testator died in the year 1836, leaving his above-named five daughters heirs, surviving him. The bill was filed for the purpose of having the trusts of the will declared and carried into effect, and a decree was accordingly made in the year 1838, whereby the testator's five daughters were entitled to life interests for their separate use in the said sum of 12,500l. with liberty to any person to apply upon the death of any of the above-named daughters. Elizabeth Minton, one of the said testator's daughters, died in September, 1845, without having ever been married. Two of the other daughters were married, several of their children were now living, but two of them had died in their infancy. The question to be decided was, therefore, to whom Elizabeth's share in the trust fund was to go in consequence of her death.

On the behalf of the residuary legatee it was contended that none of the daughters were to take by survivorship, for that "after their deaths," was to be taken after their respective deaths; the meaning of the testator being to give the share of each one of his daughters to her children. Consequently the share of Elizabeth who died without leaving issue must go over to the residuary legatee.

For the surviving children of one of the daughters,

It was submitted that the testator's daughter took an absolute gift to them as tenants in common for life, and to the survivors of them; and that the expression "after their deaths," was a general one, signifying nothing more than after their interests were determined, which interpretation would shut out the residuary legatees.

For other parties who represented the deceased children of a daughter, it was contended that "surviving" was confined to the period of the testator's death.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this case the testator has, in the first place, given a joint tenancy in the fund to his daughters, and then a tenancy in common during their joint lives. I say as tenants in common, for he directs as follows: "nothing but their receipts shall be a release or discharge to my trustees," &c. Now, he must be presumed to have intended that this bequest should continue so long as any of his daughters should require maintenance—that is, during their lives. He then goes on to declare that the principal, after their deaths, shall be given in equal parts to the surviving children as they arrive at the age of twenty-one. When, therefore, is the principal to go over? The expression is "after their deaths"—that is, after the deaths of all. There are no words of severance: after the death, therefore, of all of the daughters, the fund is to go to the surviving children, which I think is intended to mean the aggregate class of children. My opinion is, that as the testator gives the money to his five daughters during their lives, with a clause directing their receipts and the gift over, it makes those four daughters who survived their sister Elizabeth tenants in common during their lives. When another daughter dies, another question may arise in respect to an accrued share.

Saturday, Feb. 7.

RE BRISTOL AND EXETER RAILWAY COMPANY.
Ex parte CRESSWELL.

Master's office.—Costs of purchase by public company. Under the Railway Act for the above-mentioned company money was directed to be invested in land; and there had been two references to the Master relating to the purchase of two separate pieces of land, and an account had been taken of the amount due on certain mortgages of the said pieces of land. Held, that the costs of the proceedings must be borne by the railway company.

The 9th section of the Bristol and Exeter Railway Act reciting that the said railway was intended to be formed in or on a part of the pleasure grounds and orchards belonging to the vicarage of Creech St. Michael, as therein mentioned, enacts that the whole or any part of the compensation to be payable to the vicar in respect of the vicarage-house, pleasure-grounds, &c. taken from such vicarage for the purposes of the Acts, might, on petition to the Court of Exchequer, be laid out and disposed of in purchasing other property as therein mentioned. The 39th section provides for the payment and investment by order of the Court of purchase or compensation money, payable under the Act, to corporations and persons under disabilities. By the 44th section it was enacted that where by reason of any disability or incapacity of any party entitled to any lands to be taken or used, or in respect of which any satisfaction, recompense, or compensation should be payable, under the authority of that Act, the purchase money for the same, or the money paid for such compensation, should be required to be paid into the Bank of England for the purpose of being invested in the purchase of Consolidated or Reduced Bank Annuities, or in government securities, to be applied in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the like uses, in pursuance of that Act; it should be lawful for the said Court to order all the costs, charges, and expenses of or which might be incurred in consequence of the purchase, or taking, or using of such lands by the said company, under or by virtue of that Act; and also of the investment of the purchase and compensation money in Consolidated or Reduced Bank Annuities, or other government securities, or of the re-investment of such purchase and compensation money in land, together with the necessary costs and charges of obtaining the proper orders for such purposes, and for the payment of the dividends, interest, and annual produce of such Consolidated or Reduced Bank Annuities, or other government securities, to be paid by the said company out of the moneys to be received by virtue of that Act; and the said company should from time to time pay such sums of money for such costs, charges, and expenses as the said Court should direct.

Subject to the provisions of the above Act the railway company took the dwelling-house and certain lands, part of the vicarage and glebe lands, and paid a sum of money by way of compensation, which was invested in 2,748l. Consols.

The Master, by his report dated 13th November, 1844, made pursuant to a previous order of 18th April, 1843, found that the Rev. Henry Cresswell, the vicar, was entitled to an estate in fee-simple to a dwelling-house, &c.; and that the purchase thereof at the price of 1,606l. was a fit and proper purchase, and that a good title had been made thereto. By an order of the Court bearing date the 6th December, 1844, this report was confirmed, when it was referred back to the Master to ascertain what was due to certain mortgagees of the said dwelling-house, &c.; and by his report of 22nd April, 1845, found that 908l. was due to the said mortgagees. The sum of 1,624l., part of the said 2,748l. Consols, was accordingly sold out for the purpose of raising the said sum of 1,608l., leaving the sum of 1,124l. Consols remaining. The Master also, by a report of 23rd December, 1845, made in pursuance of an order of 15th March, 1845, found that it would be fit and proper that so much of the said sum of 2,748l. Consols should be sold as would be sufficient to raise the sum of 900l., and that the sum when raised should be laid out and invested in the purchase of certain lands and hereditaments comprised in an agreement of the 1st March, which had been entered into by Mr. Cresswell for the purchase of this land and hereditaments, for the sake of having the benefit of it transferred to the vicarage; and the Master was of opinion that a good title could be made thereto. The present petition was now presented by Mr. Cresswell, stating, among the foregoing matters, the existence of a mortgage on the last-mentioned property, then vested in the Rev. R. Shuttle, and praying that the report of 23rd December, 1845, might be confirmed, and that it might be referred back to the Master to ascertain what was due to the Rev. R. Shuttle for principal and interest on the said mortgage security, and praying a sale of a sufficient part of the said sum of 1,124l. Consols to raise the said sum of 900l., and praying that it might be referred to the Master to tax all parties their costs, charges, and expenses which might have been incurred in consequence of the investment of the said purchase or compensation-money, in purchasing the said dwelling-house, lands, and hereditaments, and in obtaining the said order of 15th March, 1845, and consequent thereon, and that such costs, charges, and expenses, when so taxed, might be paid by the said Bristol and Exeter Railway Company.

Stuart and Stevens, on behalf of the petition. Bethell and Osborne, on the part of the railway company, contended that it was unfair that the company should be called upon to pay all the costs of the different orders, amounting altogether to 408l., inasmuch as the dwelling-house and the land might have been included in the first petition in April, 1843, after Mr. Cresswell had obtained his contract for the land. Moreover, the costs of taking the various accounts due on the mortgages being very complicated and expensive, it was against all principles of justice that the company should be fixed with those costs. As to the second purchase, the rev. gentleman having agreed to purchase it, he ought to have completed his contract, and paid off the mortgages; in that case, it would have come to the railway company free of the present expense. The Act is not imperative as to costs, but makes it optional for the Court to deal with them according to its own principles of equity.

Stuart, in reply, contended that the title of which the mortgages formed a portion had been approved of by the Master, and that as Mr. Cresswell had entered into the agreement of the 1st March to purchase the lands in question for the benefit of the vicarage, he was entitled to call upon the company, under the 44th section of the Act, to pay all the costs incurred.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR thought that the two purchases ought not to be included in the same report; for until it were properly ascertained that the dwelling-house were fit for the vicarage, it could not be determined whether the purchased land was so situated in respect to locality as to be a proper purchase. The company must, therefore, pay all the costs.

Costs to be paid in pursuance of the terms of the Act of Parliament.

ROLLS COURT.

Monday, Dec. 16, 1845, and Monday, March 2, 1846.
HITCHCOCK v. JACOBS.

Practice.—New Orders of 8th May, 1845—Order of course to amend—Replication.

After filing a replication, it is irregular to obtain an order of course to amend by adding parties; the old practice in that respect being altered by the New Orders.

The bill in this case was filed in April, 1844, and the answer was put in on the 22nd July following. On the 13th June, 1845, the plaintiff applied for an order as of course to amend by adding parties; and the defendant now moved to discharge that order for irregularity, the plaintiff having obtained it after filing a replication.

Dickenson, for the motion, contended that the common order to amend by adding parties was irregular, and that the old practice in that respect was now altered by the effect of the New Orders. The 65th Order is positive, giving leave to amend at any time for the purpose of rectifying a clerical error; but the 66th is negative, declaring that no further Order of course is to be obtained after replication except in the case provided for by the previous Order. Then the 67th Order provides generally for the granting of a special Order, and the 68th for the case of a special Order after replication. These Orders, therefore, do alter the old practice, and that consistently with the 39th Order of the 26th August 1843, under which a plaintiff might amend by adding parties, setting down the cause on that objection only if taken by the answer, as it was in this case. There are merits, but the cause being before the Vice-Chancellor of England, they cannot be gone into here, the mere question of irregularity being the only point that can be discussed.

Turner (with him Tennant), contra.—It is conceded that the Order of course is regular, unless the New Orders have altered the practice. Now the language of the Orders of 1841 was just as strong as that of the New Orders, and notwithstanding the Order of course to amend by adding parties was not restricted to any particular time or state of the cause. (Brattle v. Waterman, 4 Sim. 125.) Besides, an order to amend by adding parties does not affect a plaintiff who has answered.

Dickenson, in reply.—The cases under the old practice do not apply. So far as the Order is affirmative the language is no stronger than before; but the negative clause is applicable to all cases without exception.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It comes to this, whether or not a special application must be made for leave to amend. I shall consider.

March 2.—The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said he would grant the order asked, but without costs.

Taxation.—Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Specific items—Special circumstances—Retaining money in payment.

A mortgagor having sold the mortgaged premises under a power of sale, his solicitor retained out of the surplus moneys, after satisfying the mortgaged debt, the amount of his own bill of costs, and paid over the balance to the mortgagor, who received it without at the time making any objection. There was nothing to show that the solicitor had used any pressure, or that the mortgagor had not time enough to examine the bill; and there were no specific items complained of. A month after the retainer by the solicitor, but within the year, the mortgagor applied to the court for an order of reference to tax, which was refused. The retainer of a sum in payment of a bill of costs may or may not be proper, according to the circumstances.

This was a petition by a mortgagor, praying for an order of reference to tax the bill of costs of the solicitor of the mortgages. He had sold the mortgaged premises under a power of sale, and his solicitor had retained the amount of his bill of costs out of the surplus, after satisfying the mortgage debt, and had paid over the balance to the mortgagor. The sale of the premises took place in June, 1844, and a settlement between the parties was come to in May, 1845, on which occasion there was nothing to show that any pressure had been used by the solicitor, or that the mortgagor had not had abundant opportunity to examine the bill. In October 1845, the mortgagor presented a petition for taxation, and the case now came on to be heard.

Winstanley, for the petitioner, complained that the charges were excessive. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Does the petitioner complain of any specific item? Is there any specific charge stated to be improper?} No; the petition is within the year. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Yes, but the petition is not therefore to be granted as a matter of course.] There was a correspondence between the parties, which will show that there was an understanding between them that the question should be left open. Besides, there was no actual payment, but only a retainer by the solicitor of the amount of his bill out of our moneys; and we took what we could get. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—That retainer may or may not be correct. The only question is, whether on the ground of the negotiation, and discussion which has taken place, I can let the petition stand over to amend.] The letters and the affidavits shew that there was an understanding that there should be a discussion as to the items.

Kindersley, for the respondent, was not heard.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This is a petition praying for the taxation after payment of a solicitor's bill of costs, but containing no allegation of any special circumstances on which to ground the order asked. It is stated, that the payment of the bill was by the solicitor retaining the amount out of a balance in his hands; but it is not alleged that the bill was then delivered, or that any pressure was used; so that there is nothing in the special circumstances of the payment to make out a case for the petitioner. Now is there any specific error alleged; but it was not quite clear whether the correspondence might not afford ground for giving leave to amend the petition. When, however, we come to the affidavits, and find no specific item mentioned even in them—not one—I must dismiss the petition with costs, but without prejudice to a new one being presented.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, March 7.

JOHNSON v. JOHNSON.

Will—Construction—Conversion of residue.

A testator gave the remainder of his property, of whatever nature it might be, to his wife, after payment of his debts and legacies, for her use and benefit during her life, and at her decease to be given to his children, &c.—Held, that the property was not to be enjoyed specifically by the wife.

The Rev. W. R. Johnson, by his will, dated the 10th of July, 1844, after certain bequests, gave as follows: "And as to the remainder of my property, of whatever nature it may be, I give it to my dear wife, after payment of my debts and legacies, for her use and benefit during her life, and at her decease, to be given to my children, to be equally divided among them, and in case of my wife intending to enter into any second marriage, then, before such marriage take place, I direct that she appoint trustees of my property, for the benefit of my children, so that the same be not wasted or made away with;" and the testator then appointed his wife executrix of his will. The testator died on the 27th of October, 1844, and the will was proved on the 19th of December, 1844. This suit was instituted by the children of the testator against the executrix, and a question arose as to the right of the widow to enjoy the residue specifically. The residue consisted of bond debts, leasehold property, and shares in public companies.

Chancellor, for the plaintiffs.

Rolt, for the defendant, cited Collins v. Collins (2 Myl. & K. 703); Pickering v. Pickering (4 Myl. & Cr. 289).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that he had no doubt that this was a residue accompanied by all the consequences of a residuary gift.

Monday, March 9.

DALTON v. LAMBETH.

Practice—Costs of puisne incumbrancer in a foreclosure suit.

This was a foreclosure suit, and some discussion arose as to the costs of one of the defendants, a puisne incumbrancer, who had by his answer disclaimed, but had not stated that he never had claimed any interest in the subject-matter of the suit.

Russell, Mallins, Faber, and Proul, for the several parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In a foreclosure suit, a puisne incumbrancer has a right to disclaim; and unless there be any thing special—any thing more—I think it is the right of the plaintiff (the first incumbrancer) to bring the cause to a hearing, and have his disclaimer at the bar, paying his costs and adding them to his own, unless there is any thing special. This applies only to foreclosure suits.

ROEBUCK v. HABERSHON.

Will—Construction—Deferred annuity.

A testator, by his will, gave to J. H. all he had in the world, he paying to M. S. the sum of 50l. per year for life; and at her death to pay to C. S. her son, 500l. and W. S. her son, 100l. and M. R. 20l. per year for life, and 100l. in money, twelve months after his (the testator's) death, and J. C. to have 100l. paid him twelve months after the testator's death, and 20l. a year for life, &c.: Held, that the annuity given to M. R. was to be deferred until the death of M. S.

Matthew Habershon, late of Handsworth Hall Gate, in the parish of Handsworth, in the county of York, yeoman, made his will in the following terms:—"In the name of God, Amen. March 3rd, 1830. This is my last will and testament of Matthew Habershon, or Habershon, or Haberman. First, it is my just will and pleasure that all my just debts and funeral expence be paid, the charge of my will proofing, and probate, &c. &c. I give and bequeath to my brother, Joseph Habershon, all I have in this world, he paying to my sister, Mary Shimeids, the sum of fifty pounds per year for life, and at her death to pay Charles Shimeids, her son, five hundred pounds, and William Shimeids, her son, one hundred pounds, and Mary Rawbuck twenty pounds per year for life, and one hundred pounds in money twelve months after my death, and John Crawthorn to have one hundred pounds paid him twelve months after my death, and twenty pounds a year for life; and Mary Crossland, wife of John Crossland, daughter of George and Hannah Crawthorn, to have one hundred pounds in money paid at twelve months after my death, the death of Matthew Habershon, and twenty pounds paid every year for life. Matthew Habershon, or Habershon, or Haberman."

The testator died on the 26th of February, 1831, and his will was proved on the 16th of March, 1832, by the testator's brother, Joseph Habershon. Joseph Habershon died on the 11th of September, 1842, having, by his will, dated the 7th of February, 1839, appointed his sons, John Habershon and Matthew Habershon, the defendant, his executors, and on the 14th of September, 1843, the said Matthew Habershon alone proved the will. The question which arose in this suit was, whether the annuity given to the plaintiff, Mrs. Roebuck, was contingent, and to take effect from the death of Mrs. Shimeids, her mother, or was payable from the testator's death.

Russell and Daniell, for the plaintiffs.

Cooper and H. Nichols, for the defendant.

Russell in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Whatever the testator intended to do with his pen, I am of opinion that he has been disappointed in his intentions. I now have nothing to do but to construe the will. According to this, I do not think myself at liberty to separate and withdraw either the words "and at her death to pay Charles Shimeids, her son, 500l." or the words "and at her death to pay Charles Shimeids, her son, 500l., and William Shimeids, her son, 100l." from the general course and current of the testator's language, for the purpose of avoiding a break, which, if read parenthetically in that way, would be avoided. As I assume that the testator did not make any parenthetical marks, I think myself not at liberty so to treat it. Not being at liberty so to treat it, and looking at the language that the testator has used in every other place where he has given legacies of 100l., I am of opinion that the legacy of 100l. to William Shimeids must be read as a postponed legacy of 100l., and that, being read as a postponed legacy of 100l., I believe, I am sorry to say, I am not at liberty to read this annuity to Mary Roebuck otherwise than as a postponed annuity. I must consider that the expression "after my death" is used ungrammatically, insufficiently, or obscurely, or elliptically (that is, perhaps, the more correct expression); but this was a very proper claim to raise, and therefore I shall give the costs to all parties.

Wednesday, March 11.

EARLY v. BENBOW.

Will—Construction—Legacy duty.

Where a testator by his will directed the legacy duty on the legacies therein given to be paid out of a certain fund, and by a codicil, which was directed to be considered and taken as part of his will, the testator gave other legacies; it was held that the duty on the legacies given by the codicil was not to be paid out of the fund provided by the will.

In this case, which is reported, ante p. 498, the following question was brought under the attention of the Court upon a motion to vary the minutes. The testator had, by his will, created a trust for the payment of "all his just debts, funeral, and testamentary expences, and the several legacies thereinbefore by him bequeathed, together with the whole of the legacy duty and duties payable in respect of the several legacies by him therein given, it being his will that such several legacies and annuities should be paid to such legatees and annuitants free of all deduction." By a codicil (which was stated to be a codicil to the will, and which the testator desired might be considered and taken as part of his will) certain other legacies were given, but nothing was said as to the legacy duty thereon.

Beck, for some of the legatees, contended that the codicil being desired to be taken as part of the will, the legacies given by the codicil were subject to the direction contained in the will concerning the legacies given by it. He cited Sherer v. Bishop (4 Bro. C. C. 55); Hall v. Severne (9 Sim. 515); and Bonner v. Bonner (13 Ves. 379).

Shebbear, for other parties, in opposition to the legatees, was not heard by the Court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I cannot hold that the word "herein" meant more than the particular instrument in which it was used, and therefore I cannot extend it to this codicil.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

March 12 and 23.

LISTER v. TURNER AND OTHERS.

Voluntary settlement—Fraud—Creditors—Deposit of title-deeds.

A voluntary settlement by a trader is void against creditors, although the settlor may, at the time of executing the settlement, have property three times the amount of his debts.

This was a suit by equitable mortgagees to set aside a voluntary settlement.

Wm. Slater married in the year 1830, without having executed any settlement upon his wife or future family, and was then, and after his marriage, a draper by trade until the year 1841, when he was embarked in business as a salt manufacturer; and in the year 1842, being possessed of property in value three times the amount of his debts, and twice the amount of his debts and liabilities, he executes a voluntary settlement whereby he conveys and assigns certain freehold property, mining, and railway shares, to trustees upon trust for the benefit of himself for life, remainder to his wife and children. He retains possession of the title-deeds, and certificates of the mining and railway shares, notwithstanding the settlement, and in July following the execution of the settlement, he deposits the title-deeds, and mining and railway certificates, relating to the property comprised in the settlement, with the Union Bank of Liverpool, in consideration of advances made, and to be afterwards made, by the bank not exceeding 2,000l. to his order. In Feb. 1843, Slater was declared a bankrupt; the amount claimed by the Union Bank was 1,000l.

In June 1843, the solicitor for the trustees of the settlement gave the Union Bank notice of their claim under the settlement; whereupon the Union Bank, by their registered officer, filed the present suit against the assignees of Slater, the trustees of the voluntary settlement, the bankrupt, his wife and children to have the voluntary settlement declared fraudulent and void, and the property comprised therein sold, and the produce applied in payment of their claim.

Anderton and James, for the plaintiff, cited Russell v. Hammond (1 Atk. 15); Walker v. Burrows (1 Atk. 93); Lord Townsend v. Wyndham (2 Ves. sen. 10).

Parker and Craig, for the defendant, cited Richardson v. Smallwood (Jacob, 552); Kerrison v. Dorrien (9 Bing. 76); Leach v. Wilkinson (5 Ves. 384); Norent v. Dodd (1 Craig & Phill. 100); Townsend v. Westmacott (2 Beavan, 340); Buckland v. Mitchell (18 Ves. 100).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This case questions the validity of a voluntary settlement as against subsequent mortgagees of the settlor's property, and the object of the bill is that the plaintiff may be treated as a purchaser for a good consideration under the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, by virtue of which it is alleged the settlement must be treated as void, for it is contended that Slater, at the time of executing the settlement, was indebted to the Bank, and other creditors, in an amount exceeding what he was able to pay or secure, and therefore that the deed of June 1842 was void under the statute of Elizabeth. I consider that Buckle v. Mitchell (18 Ves. 100) is a direct authority for holding that an equitable interest in land, entitling a party by contract to clothe it with a legal title, made such party a purchaser in the eye of the Court, and entitled the plaintiff to avoid the settlement and enforce his securities. As to the second question, the plaintiff being entitled under the 27th Elizabeth, it would have been unnecessary to notice the claim for relief under the 13th of Elizabeth, had not the defendant argued that this ground of claim for avoiding the deeds was altogether void, and that the plaintiff must therefore pay so much of the costs of the suit as had been incurred in respect to the claim. Those who contended that the claim could not be sustained under the 27th Elizabeth, could not, with success, urge that argument, unless they could shew that the evidence in the cause was insufficient to sustain the case. If the settlement was to stand, the deposit would become useless. The plaintiff had a direct interest in shewing that the settlement was invalid, and, if he succeeded in doing so, he thereby gave validity to his own security, as the plaintiff, by virtue of his security, had a specific interest in part of the property comprised in the deed. I consider he has an interest sufficient to entitle him to sustain this suit, and that he is entitled to sue for a decree under the 13th of Elizabeth; and that the plaintiff, as representing the Union Bank of Liverpool, is entitled to be considered as a purchaser for a good consideration within the meaning of the 27th of Elizabeth, and that the settlement is void as against the Bank, so far as it comprised the property mentioned in the deposit of July 1841. Let it be referred to the Master to take an account of the principal and interest due to the plaintiff under that security, and to tax the costs of the suit, the assignees to pay the Liverpool Bank what shall be found due for principal, interest, and costs within six months of the Master's report; and in default of payment, the property comprised in the plaintiff's security must be sold, and the proceeds applied in payment of what is due to the Bank; further directions and costs to be reserved.

PARSONS v. MUNTZ AND OTHERS.

Practice—New Orders, May, 1845—Absconding—Service of Subpoena.

This cause first came before the Court upon a demurrer, which was overruled, and reported in the sixth vol. of the LAW TIMES, No. 148.

Hetherington now moved, on behalf of the plaintiff, for leave to substitute service of subpoena upon Messrs. Hill and Heald, the solicitors for the company, for Mr. Oliveira, one of the directors, who had absconded; he said the object of the plaintiff was to avoid the exposure consequent upon his taking the course directed by the 31st Order of May, 1845.

The affidavit in support of the motion stated that the plaintiff had called at Oliveira's house to serve him with a subpoena, when his servant said he was in France; he then served the subpoena upon his private solicitor, who returned it to the plaintiff, stating that Oliveira was abroad. Heald, the solicitor for the company, stated by his affidavit that at the conclusion of one of the meetings of the directors of the company, as one of the directors was leaving the room, he was served with a sub-penna in this cause, whereupon he returned and stated the fact to the directors, who thereupon passed a resolution whereby Messrs. Hill and Heald were directed to enter an appearance for all the directors, and defend the suit for the company. Oliveira was not present at that meeting, but it was stated in the affidavit that the majority of the directors could at any meeting bind the minority in all acts relating to the company.

Robinson, by his affidavit, stated that Oliveira was in Paris.

The case of Hobhouse v. Courtney (12 Sim. 140) was cited in support of the motion.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I cannot make the order asked for; a solicitor for general business is not a solicitor for every suit which may be instituted against a client; this is a mere co-partnership, and must be treated as such: the parties are here attacked by a stranger; a general power to manage a co-partnership is not sufficient to do away with the necessity of serving each party personally.

Hetherington then moved, in the same cause, for leave to serve a subpoena upon Fowler, another defendant, in the manner directed by the 31st Order of May 1845, whereby in case it appears to the Court by sufficient evidence that any defendant, against whom a subpoena to appear to, or to appear to and answer a bill, has issued, has been within the jurisdiction of the Court, at some time not more than two years before the subpoena was issued, and that such defendant is beyond the seas; or that, upon inquiry at his usual place of abode (if he had any), or at any other place or places where at the time when the subpoena was issued he might probably have been met with, he could not be found, so as to be served with process, and that in either case there is just ground to believe that such defendant is gone out of the realm or otherwise absconded to avoid being served such process, then and in such case the Court may order that such defendant do appear at a certain day to be named in the order, and a copy of such order, together with a notice thereof, to the effect set forth at the foot of the order, may, within fourteen days after such order made, be inserted in the London Gazette, or be otherwise published as the Court shall direct. The affidavit stated that the plaintiff had called at defendant's house in Manchester-square, London, to serve him with a subpoena, when he was told by the servant who opened the door that Fowler was not at home, and that he could not say when he would be at home; whereupon plaintiff returned without leaving the subpoena, and called again some days after at Fowler's house to serve him, when the person who opened the door informed plaintiff that Fowler had gone away, and that the house was to be let, which was apparent from bills being upon the windows to that effect; and when plaintiff inquired where Fowler was to be found, he was told by the servant that he could not exactly say, for that he had sent a deed to him at Ostend which required his signature, and it had not been returned. An affidavit by Waddy stated that Fowler was staying out of the way at Ostend.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—These proceedings should be bond fide; you might have served the party the first time you called, as service then upon the servant would have been sufficient; you missed your opportunity, and delayed effecting a service until you are able to proceed under this order; I shall make the order, directing publication at Ostend, as well as in The Gazette, for this is a case in which the party ought to be compelled to find out where the defendant is, as he lost his opportunity when he might have effected personal service; but in this case, as there is a company there are other persons who have a common interest with the defendant, and who appear, I make the order that the defendant do appear in 14 days after publication of the notice, and that such notice be published within 14 days from the date of this order.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Monday, Jan. 12.

MAYER v. WARD.

Bill of particulars—Architect's commission.

In this case, which was tried at Westminster at the sittings after Michaelmas Term, the plaintiff claimed the sum of 511l. 3s. as the balance due to him for work and labour as an architect. The bill of particulars set forth the work which the plaintiff had done, and the estimated expenditure for the buildings of which he had superintended the erection, and distinctly claimed five per cent. commission thereon, as the proper and customary reward of such professional services. Proof having been given of the sum on which the commission would be chargeable if the plaintiff was entitled to charge it, it was insisted by the plaintiff's counsel that he was entitled to charge five per cent. commission, according to the custom of the profession.

LORD DENMAN, C.J. said that such a claim could only be established by proof of an express contract to pay such a commission.

The plaintiff's counsel then proposed to call witnesses to shew the value of the work.

LORD DENMAN, C.J. permitted him to do so, saying that, although the particulars claimed a commission on the amount expended, it was open to the plaintiff to prove the value of his services, for that the statement of the services was the essential portion of the list of particulars, and all that was said about the commission was an unnecessary specification of the mode in which it was proposed to calculate the value of the work and labour. Ultimately the jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount to which he would have been entitled had there been an express contract to pay him five per cent. commission; but expressly rejected a finding of that amount as commission.

The Attorney-General now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and on an affidavit of the attorney for the defendant, complaining of surprise, and stating that he could have shown a less sum to be due, had he not thought that the plaintiff was confined to proof of his right to commission. He cited Davenport v. Davis (M. & W. 507); Roberts v. Elsworth (10 M. & W. 653); Breckon v. Smith (2 A. & E. 488).

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—We have looked to the bill of particulars, which was delivered by the plaintiff in this case; we have also looked to the affidavit of the defendant's attorney, and we think there is no ground for a new trial; although the particulars are mentioned in the commission as to the mode of estimating the services which the plaintiff puts forth, yet we do not think that could be reasonably supposed to bind him in his decision. We think they did not bind him as to that mode of calculation, and that he was at liberty to shew the value of his services, and he did so; we think, therefore, there is no ground for a new trial.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Nov. 14 and Dec. 23, 1845.

HINTON v. ACRAMAN.

Declaration on a bond given by the defendant, a trader, with sureties, under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, to pay such sum as the plaintiff should recover, in any action brought or to be brought, or to render, stated a judge's order for the defendant to render within a time certain, and two other judge's orders, enlarging such time, and a rule nisi in the Court of Exchequer for further time to render, and alleged as a breach that the defendant did not render according to the practice of the Court, or within the time mentioned in the judge's orders. Held, 1st, to be a good plea thereto that no writ of ca. sa. was sued out; 2nd, to be a bad plea that the first of such judge's orders was made before the time for rendering had expired, and was made ex parte; 3rd, that a plea that the rule nisi in the Exchequer was obtained before the expiration of the enlarged time, and that afterwards, on shewing cause, the Court of Exchequer directed the defendant to have further time to render, and that within such further time the defendant did render, was a good plea; 4th, that a certificate in bankruptcy, obtained after recovery of judgment, in the action brought for the original debt, but under a fiat issued before such judgment, was no bar of the debt on the bond; and, 5th, that the pendency of an action for the recovery of the debt commenced before giving the bond was a bad plea, as the bond was not given only for a sum to be recovered in an action already brought.

Debt on a bond for 2,700l. entered into by the defendant and his partners in trade, Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, together with James Oxley Bridges and Joseph Arthur Ballantine, as sureties, under and pursuant to the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, subject to a condition, which was declared to be that if the defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, James Oxley Bridges, and Joseph Arthur Ballantine, or any or either of them, their, or his heirs, executors, or administrators, should well and truly pay, or cause to be paid to the plaintiff, his executors, administrators, or assigns, such sum or sums as should be recovered in any action or actions which then had been or thereafter should be brought for recovery of the said alleged debt, together with such costs as should be given in the same; or if the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan should render themselves to the custody of the gaoler of the court in which such action or actions had been or might be brought, according to the practice of such court or courts, or within such time and such manner as the said court or courts, or any judge thereof respectively, should direct after judgment should have been recovered in such action or actions, then the said writing obligatory to be void and of no effect, otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue, &c.

The declaration then alleged that afterwards, and after the making of the writing obligatory and condition, to wit, on the 15th day of July, in the year aforsaid, a certain action was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, in her Majesty's Court of Exchequer at Westminster, for the recovery of the said debt in the said condition mentioned, together with such costs of the plaintiff as should be given in the same. The declaration then set forth a judgment recovered in such action, against the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, for the sum of 1,698l. 5s. being 1,650l. for debt, 38l. 11s. 6d. for interest, and 14l. 13s. 6d. for costs; and the declaration alleged that the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, did not, nor did any or either of them, or any or either of their heirs, executors, or administrators, nor did the said James Oxley Bridges and Joseph Arthur Ballantine, or either of them, or any or either of their heirs, executors, or administrators, at any time before the commencement of this suit pay, or cause to be paid to the plaintiff, the said sum of 1,698l. 5s. so recovered, as aforsaid, or any part thereof, according to the form and effect of the condition of the said writing obligatory. And the plaintiff further saith, that afterwards, and after the recovery of the said judgment in the said action by and at the suit of the plaintiff against the defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, in the said Court of Exchequer, to wit, on the 19th day of August, 1845, a certain order was duly made in the last-mentioned cause, on the application of the plaintiff, by the Honourable Sir John Taylor Coleridge, knight, one of the justices of the Court of Queen's Bench, by which order the said Sir John Taylor Coleridge, so being such justice as aforsaid, ordered that the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan should surrender themselves to the custody of the marshal of the Queen's prison within ten days after service of a copy of that order on the defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, and on the said James Oxley Bridges and Joseph Arthur Ballantine, a copy of which order of the said Sir John Taylor Coleridge, so being such justice as aforsaid, was afterwards, to wit, on the 20th day of August, 1845, duly served on the defendant and the said Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, and the said James Oxley Bridges and Joseph Arthur Ballantine, and a copy of which order was afterwards, to wit, on the 23rd day of August, 1845, duly served on the said Daniel Wade Agraman. And the plaintiff further saith, that ten days after service of a copy of the said order on the defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, and the said James Oxley Bridges and Joseph Arthur Ballantine had, before the commencement of the suit, long elapsed. And the plaintiff further saith, that afterwards, and after the recovery of the said judgment, to wit, &c. the Honourable Sir Creswell Creswell, knight, one of the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, did make a certain order in the said last-mentioned cause, by which last mentioned order the said Sir Creswell Creswell, so being such justice as aforsaid, did order that the time for the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, to render in that cause should be enlarged for a week, and that the further hearing of a certain summons to set aside the said order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Coleridge, for the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, to render, should be adjourned until the 2nd day of September, A.D. 1845. And the plaintiff further saith, that on the 2nd day of September, A.D. 1845, a certain order was made in the last-mentioned action by the said Sir Creswell Creswell, so being such justice as aforsaid, by which last mentioned order the said Sir Creswell Creswell did order that the time for surrendering the defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, should be enlarged until the fifth day of the then next Michaelmas term, without prejudice to the right of the bondsmen to render the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Agraman, Alfred John Agraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, in the meantime, or to the right of the said plaintiff to recover the bond as forfeited. And the plaintiff further saith, that afterwards, and after the recovery of the said judgment, to wit, on the 4th day of November, in Michaelmas Term, A.D. 1845, a certain rule was made by the Court of our Lady the Queen, before the Barons of her Exchequer, in the said last-mentioned action, by which rule it was ordered that the plaintiff should show cause on Wednesday, the 9th day of November, then instant, why the said order of the said Mr. Justice Coleridge, and all proceedings thereupon had, should not be set aside with costs to be paid by the plaintiff, together with the costs of the proceedings before Mr. Justice Creswell in relation to the said order, being the proceedings had before in that behalf mentioned, and of that application, or why the defendants, thereby meaning the defendants in the said last-mentioned action, should not have a fortnight after judgment pronounced on that rule, or such other time as the court should order in that behalf, to render themselves in custody as to the said last-mentioned action in discharge of their bail, and why all proceedings upon the bond should not be set aside with costs, and that in the meantime all proceedings in the last-mentioned cause, and against the defendant's bail, should be stayed upon notice of that rule to be given to the plaintiff, his attorney, or agent. And the plaintiff further saith, that neither the now defendant, nor the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, nor any nor either of them, rendered themselves or himself to the custody of the gaoler of the said Court of Exchequer, according to the practice of the same Court, or within the time mentioned in the said orders, or any or either of them after judgment had been so recovered as aforesaid, or within any other time or in any manner lawfully directed by the same court or any judge thereof, after judgment had been so recovered as aforesaid, according to the form and effect of the said condition of the said writing obligatory, but wholly neglected, omitted, and refused so to do, and the condition of the writing obligatory is and remains wholly unperformed contrary to the form and effect of the said writing obligatory, and of the said condition thereof.

The defendant pleaded, secondly, that after the recovery of the judgment in the declaration mentioned, and before the commencement of this suit, no writ of capias ad satisfaciendum was sued or prosecuted out of the said Court of Exchequer against the defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, or any or either of them, upon the said judgment, and returned in the said Court. Verification.

Fourthly. That the said order so made by the said Sir John Taylor Coleridge, as in the declaration mentioned, was made before the time for rendering the said defendant, the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, in the said action so commenced against them, as in the declaration mentioned, according to the practice of the said Court of Exchequer had expired or elapsed, and that the said order was made ex parte, on the application of the said plaintiff, and without any previous summons of, or any previous notice to, the said defendant, the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, or any of them, or any agent, attorney, or solicitor of them or either of them. Verification.

Fifthly. That the said order was so made by the said Sir John Taylor Coleridge, as aforesaid, before the time for rendering the said defendant, the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, in the said action according to the course and practice of the court in which the same was so brought as aforesaid had expired or elapsed, and that after the making of the said order by the said Sir John Taylor Coleridge, as in the said declaration mentioned, and before the said ten days after the service of the said copy of the said order, as in the said declaration mentioned, had expired or elapsed, the said order stated in the declaration to have been firstly made by the said Sir C. Cresswell, was made by the said Sir C. Cresswell as in the said declaration mentioned, to wit, on &c. and that afterwards and after the making of the said last-mentioned order, and before the expiration of the time, to wit, the said week, given and appointed in and by the said last-mentioned order for the making of the said surrender as therein and in the said declaration mentioned; the said order stated in the said declaration to have been secondly made by the said Sir C. Cresswell, was made by the said Sir C. Cresswell, then being such justice as aforesaid as in the said declaration mentioned, to wit, on &c.; and that afterwards and after the making of the said last-mentioned order, and before the fifth day of Michaelmas Term in the said last-mentioned order, mentioned the said rule so made by the said Court of our Lady the Queen before the Barons of her Exchequer, as in the said declaration mentioned, was made by the said Court, to wit, on &c. And the defendant further saith, that afterwards, and after the making of the said last-mentioned rule by the said Court as aforesaid, and within a reasonable time for that purpose, to wit, on &c. notice of the said rule was given to the said plaintiff as in and by the same directed, and according to the course and practice of the said Court; and that afterwards, in Michaelmas Term, A.D. 1848, to wit, on the 24th day of November, in the year aforesaid, cause was shown against the said rule, and the said rule and matters therein contained were argued and discussed before the Court aforesaid, according to the course and practice of the last-mentioned order; and the said Court did thereupon, by a certain other rule then duly made according to the course and practice thereof, among other things order and direct that the said now defendant, the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, and their bail or sureties, James Oxley Bridges and Joseph Arthur Ballantine, should have ten days from the day of the making of the rule now in recital to render the said now defendant, the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, in the said action so brought against them as aforesaid. And the defendant further said that, afterwards, and after the making of the said last-mentioned rule, and before the commencement of this suit, and before the expiration of ten days from the day of the making of the said last-mentioned rule and within the time for that purpose therein limited and appointed as aforesaid, to wit, on the 28th day of November, in the year aforesaid, the said now defendant, the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, did and each and every of them did respectively render themselves to the custody of the gaoler of the said court, as in and by the said last-mentioned rule was directed and ordered, and according to the form and effect, true intent, and meaning of the said condition. Verification.

Sixthly. That, after the making of the said writing obligatory in the declaration mentioned, to wit, on &c. and from thence continually until the issuing of the fiat in bankruptcy thereafter mentioned, the defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Acraman and Alfred John Acraman were dealers, chapmen, and co-partners and traders, according to and within the true intent and meaning of the statutes concerning bankrupts then in force. The plea afterwards set forth a fiat and proceedings in bankruptcy, under which the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Acraman and Alfred John Acraman were adjudged, and became bankrupts, and that, after the recovery of the judgment in the declaration mentioned, certificates of conformity of the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Acraman and Alfred John Acraman were duly signed by the creditors, and afterwards allowed and confirmed. The plea then stated that the several events in that plea before mentioned happened and took place, and the said certificates were obtained, allowed, and confirmed, as aforesaid, before the commencement of this suit, and before the issuing and return of any capias ad satisfaciendum at the suit of the plaintiff against the said defendant, and the said Daniel Wade Acraman and Alfred John Acraman, or any or either of them, upon the said judgment, and before any render of the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Acraman and Alfred John Acraman, or any or either of them, at any time or in any manner had been directed or ordered by the said Court of Exchequer or any judge thereof, and before the time for the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Acraman and Alfred John Acraman, or any or either of them, to the custody of the gaoler of the said Court of Exchequer, according to the practice thereof had elapsed, and before any breach or non-performance of the said condition of the said writing obligatory, or any part thereof. Verification.

Seventhly. That before the making of the said writing obligatory in the declaration mentioned, and long before the commencement of the action in the declaration mentioned, to wit, &c. a certain action was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant and the said Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, and William Morgan, in her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, at Westminster, for the recovery of the same identical debt in the said condition mentioned, together with such costs of the plaintiff as should be given in the same and the said action, then and from thence, until and at the time of the making of the said writing obligatory was and from thence hitherto hath been and is still pending in the said Court of Exchequer, and the plaintiff could and might have recovered said may recover in the said last-mentioned action the said debt in the said condition of the said writing obligatory mentioned. And the said defendant further saith, that at the time of the making of the said writing obligatory the said action in the declaration mentioned had not been commenced, and the said writing obligatory was then meant and intended by the several parties thereto to apply and did apply to the said action so commenced by the plaintiff, as in this plea mentioned, and was not by the said parties or any of them meant and intended to apply, and did not apply, to the said action so commenced, and in which judgment was so obtained, as in the declaration mentioned. Verification.

The eighth plea differed only from the sixth plea in setting forth the bankruptcy and certificates of the defendant and Daniel Wade Acraman, Alfred John Acraman, Thomas Holroyd, William Morgan, and James Norrway Franklin, instead of the bankruptcy and certificates of the defendant and Daniel Wade Acraman and Alfred John Acraman.

The plaintiff demurred specially to all the above pleas, and the same was argued in last Michaelmas Term by Sir Thomas Wade (Manning, Serjt. with him), for the plaintiff.—The first question arises upon the second plea. The defendant says that the bond declared on was not forfeited unless a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum was issued; but that is not so; this bond is not a proceeding in the cause, and in that respect differs from a recognizance of bail. The Courts moreover have put a particular construction on the condition of the recognizance, and have said that it creates only a qualified obligation to render in discharge of bail when the plaintiff has, by suing out the ca. sa. given notice to the bail that he requires such render to be made, and therefore as the ca. sa. arises out of the obligation itself, and is not merely a matter required by the practice of the Court, the not suing out a ca. sa. is a good plea to an action upon a recognizance of bail. This distinctly appears in Sanden v. Proctor (7 B. & C. 800), which is an express authority that a mere matter of practice cannot be pleaded, and that it was bad, therefore, to plead that the ca. sa. did not lie in the sheriff's office four days exclusive of the day it was lodged and the return day. Cherry v. Powell (1 D. & R. 50) is to the same effect. The present is an action on a bond given by the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8. The bond is to be construed with reference to the terms it employs, and therefore it differs from the recognizance which has had given to it a particular construction by the Court. The statute says to render "according to the practice of such Court, or within such time and in such manner as the said Court or any judge thereof shall direct." The power so given to the Court or any judge is evidently different from what they would ordinarily possess. The legislature did not know how the party was to render, there being various things required in practice to be done before the exoneretur on the bail-piece can be entered, and therefore the mode of rendering is left to the practice of the Court, but the necessity of a ca. sa. to call on the defendant to render is not required in the case of this bond as in the proceedings on a recognizance. It is plain that this statute contemplated a render being made in a different manner from that pursued under a recognizance of bail. It would not have been necessary to have said in such time and manner as the Court or judge shall direct, if it was intended to confer only a power of extending the time to render, for that might always have been done before in exercise of the practice of the Court; but this is something different from the practice of the Court. This differs from a recognizance, as here the sureties cannot, after judgment, render so as to discharge themselves. [MAULE, J. referred to Owston v. Coules (10 Ad. & E. 193); there no ca. sa. was necessary, but that was before judgment.] A judge's order, with notice, is a much more important means of giving information than the lodging of a ca. sa. of which no notice is given. Next as to the fourth plea. This involves partly the same question as the last, if the plea means that the time made by the order of the judge to render expired before the return of the ca. sa. As to the order being ex parte, it was for the plaintiff to call for the render when entitled to do so, which, if no ca. sa. was required, would be when the judge might order. If the order, however, was irregularly obtained, that is not a matter which can be the subject of a plea. As to the fifth plea. The time to surrender expired on the fifth day of Michaelmas Term. The rule nisi did not extend the time for the surrender, it only called on the plaintiffs to shew cause why the order of Coleridge, J. should not be set aside, or why the defendant should not have such further time as the Court should order to render. If, therefore, the order of Cresswell, J. was broken, the Court of Exchequer had no power to extend the time—a right of action had accrued, and there was nothing on which that order could take effect. The seventh plea is, that another action in another court is pending for the identical debt. That is only a plea in abatement, and is bad in bar. The remaining pleas demurred to are the sixth and eighth pleas. These pleas state the certificate to be signed after the recovery of the judgment in the declaration mentioned, but they do not state whether the fiat was or not issued after such judgment; the fiat must be taken, therefore, to have issued before. The original debt was discharged by the certificate; but the plaintiff had also a statutory security, which did not arise until after the judgment, and was not, therefore, barred by this certificate. James v. Campbell (5 B. & Ad. 286), which was on the stat. 4 Geo. 3, c. 33, and the present statute is an extension of the former. Here no right of action existed on the bond until after the bankruptcy, and the debt so created by the bond was, therefore, not discharged by the certificate.

Tuford, Serjt. (Keating and Dowdell with him), contra.—In the first place, it is submitted that no right of action accrued on the bond until a writ of ca. sa. had been returned non est inquisitum; in the next place, that no such action accrued until the expiration of the utmost time given by the Court of Exchequer to render in, and that the ex parte order of a judge can only extend, but not limit the time for rendering, according to the practice of the Court. Thirdly, supposing Mr. Justice Coleridge had the jurisdiction to make the order he made, Mr. Justice Cresswell and the Court of Exchequer had power to enlarge the time for rendering, and that this Court cannot review the power of the Exchequer to make the order it made as being a matter relating to the practice of the Court; also that as the action on the bond in the Court of Exchequer is pending, there has been no forfeiture of this bond; and, lastly, that the certificate was a good discharge, supposing the bond to be forfeited. With respect to the first, the legislature intended to assimilate the proceeding in the bond to those on the recognizance of bail, for which it is a substitute, the object being to create an act of bankruptcy instead of remaining the twenty-one days in prison, as given under the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. The same construction should, therefore, be put on this bond as had been on the recognizance, the terms of the condition in this bond being the same. The terms of the recognizance differed in this court from those of the recognizances in the Queen's Bench, but still the ca. sa. was required to be issued. (South at the suit of Griffith, Cro. Car. 345). The construction put on the word "render" in Weddall v. The Mancaptors of Jocar (10 Mod. 267), and Wilmore v. Clerk (1 Lord Raym. 156), and other authorities, shew that as a matter of right the bail are not bound to render the principal until the return of the ca. sa. and the same might be pleaded in bar. The recognizance is a bond of record, and there is no reason why that should be differently construed than a bond given by a statute. It is submitted that Mr. Justice Coleridge had no jurisdiction to render the order to be made, as a judge has not the power to limit the time for the render, and still less to make the order ex parte. As to the fifth plea, the rule and order of the Court of Exchequer being made according to the practice of that Court, this Court will not inquire into its propriety—even in a Court of Error it will not. (Mellish v. Richardson (1 Clarke & Fin. 224)). With respect to the seventh plea, it is submitted that the bond did not apply to any number of actions that the plaintiff might think proper to bring. The words in the Act are, "in any action which shall have been brought," and therefore the bond is not forfeited unless the plaintiff recover in that action; and since there is an action on the bond now pending, there is not a forfeiture, and the plea is good in bar. Lastly, as to the sixth and eighth pleas. The claim is barred by the certificate. Jameson v. Campbell was before the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, and the law has been altered since that case. This, it is submitted, is a contingent debt, and might have been proved under the fiat. The case of Dinsdale v. Eames (2 Brod. & Bing. 8) is in favour of this view, and is supported by the case of Littlewood v. Crouther (3 D. & R. 533), which takes away the ground on which Jameson v. Campbell was decided—namely, that the surety might have sued the principal to such a bond.

Sir Thomas Wilde replied, citing Hayward v. Heffer (5 Q. B. 398); Donnelly v. Dunn (1 B. & P. 448); and Attwood v. Partridge (12 Moore, 431).

Cur. ad. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. This was an action on a bond entered into in pursuance of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8. The declaration set out the bond and the condition, by which, after reciting that the plaintiff made an affidavit that a debt of 1,650*l.* was due to him by the defendant and his partners, who were traders within the bankrupt laws, and further reciting that the plaintiff had on the 23rd and 24th of March, 1843, caused the defendant and his partners to be served with a copy of the affidavit, and by this required the immediate payment of the debt; and further reciting that James Oxley Bridges and Joseph Arthur Ballantine had agreed to join the defendant and his partners in the said writing obligatory (subject to a condition for making the same void), as sureties for the defendant and his partners. The condition was declared to be, if the defendant or his partners, or the said Bridges and Ballantine, or any or either of them, should pay such sum as should be recovered in any action which should be brought for the recovery of the said debt; or if the defendant and his partners should render themselves to the custody of the gaoler of the Court in which such action had been or might have been brought, according to the practice of such Court or Courts, and in such time and in such manner as the said Court or Courts, or any judge thereof respectively, should direct, after such judgment should have been recovered in any action or actions, then the said writing obligatory was to be void. The declaration then stated that, after the making the said writing obligatory, an action was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant and his partners in the Court of Exchequer, in which the sum of 1,698*l.* 5*s.* had been adjudged to the plaintiff for the damages and costs; to wit, the sum of 1,650*l.* as the debt in the declaration mentioned, 33*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* for interest, and 14*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* costs of the suit, of all which the defendant had notice. The declaration further states that neither the defendant, nor his partners, nor his sureties, paid the sum recovered, or any part of it. Further, it states that, after the recovery of the said judgment by the plaintiff, Coleridge, J. made an order by which it was ordered that the defendant and his partners should render themselves to the custody of the marshal of the Queen's prison within ten days after service of a copy of the order; a copy whereof was afterwards, to wit, on the 23rd of August, served on the defendant and his partners, and that ten days after such service had then elapsed before the commencement of the suit. The declaration further states that on the 26th of August, Cresswell, J. made an order by which it was ordered that the time for the defendant and his partners to surrender should be enlarged for a week, and that the further hearing of a summons to set aside the order of Coleridge, J. should be adjourned to the 2nd of September, 1842. The declaration further states that on the 2nd of September, 1842, an order was made by Cresswell, J. by which it was ordered that the time for surrendering should be enlarged to the 5th day of Michaelmas Term, without prejudice to the right of the bondsmen to render the defendant and his partners, or to the right of the plaintiff to treat the bond as forfeited. The declaration further states, that afterwards, and after the recovery of the said judgment, to wit, on the 4th day of Nov. in Michaelmas Term, by a rule of the Court of Exchequer, a rule was made in the said last-mentioned action, by which it was ordered that the plaintiff should shew cause, on Wednesday, the 9th day of Nov. why the order of Coleridge, J. and the proceedings had thereon should not be set aside, with costs to be paid by the plaintiff, together with the costs of the proceeding before Cresswell, J. in relation to the said order; or why the defendants in the said last-mentioned action should not have a fortnight after judgment pronounced in that rule, or such other time as the Court should order in that behalf, to render themselves into custody as to the said last-mentioned action in discharge of their bail, and why ~~the proceedings on the bond should not be set aside~~, with costs, and that in the meantime all proceedings in such last-mentioned cause against the defendant should be stayed. The declaration further states that neither the defendant nor his partners, nor any or either of them, rendered themselves to the custody of the gaoler of the Court of Exchequer, according to the practice of the said Court, or within the time mentioned in such orders, or any or either of them, after judgment had been so recovered as aforesaid, or within any other time, or in any manner lawfully directed by the said Court, or any judge thereof, after judgment had been so recovered, as aforesaid, according to the form and effect of the said condition. To this declaration the defendant pleaded, secondly, that after the recovery of the judgment, and before the commencement of this suit, no writ of capias ad satisfaciendum was sued or prosecuted out of the Court of Exchequer against the defendant and his partners, or any of them; and the plaintiff having demurred to this plea, the first question in the case is, whether this plea furnishes an answer to the declaration. It has been settled by various decisions as to a scire facias on which a recognizance is given, it is a good plea that there was no writ of capias ad satisfaciendum issued against the principal. Sandown v. Proctor (7 B. & C. 800); South v. Griffith (Cro. Charles 345); Weddall v. The Mancaptors of Jocar (10th Modern); and some others. The necessity for the capias ad satisfaciendum did not rest on the mere rule of practice, but was a construction put by the Courts on the terms of the recognizance, as was said in the case of Wilmore v. Clerk (1 Lord Raymond, 156), the condition of the recognizance is, that if the defendant is condemned in an action in which payment is enforced, and do not pay, or render his body as a prisoner, the question will then be at what time the render ought to be? and the law says it ought to be when the plaintiff in the original action has signified that he will sue out execution against the bond, which he does by suing out the capias ad satisfaciendum. But it was contended on the behalf of the plaintiff, that although the rule was established with reference to the recognizances of bail, it ought not to apply to a bond under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, that the recognizance of bail was an instrument peculiarly under the control of the Courts, which have put a particular construction on it, not entirely consistent with the natural import of its terms. But even if this were admitted to be so, still such is the established construction of the recognizance, and as the bond, as directed to be given under the statute of Victoria, is clearly made, if not in analogy with, yet nearly in the terms of, the recognizance of bail, and as the terms of the latter have obtained a judicial signification, we see no reason to doubt that the words of the bond were intended to bear the same sense; nor are the words which follow, "according to the practice of the Court," so immaterial as they were represented by the plaintiff's counsel, for although the necessity for issuing of the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum is not strictly speaking a mere matter of practice, but is required by the rule of law, yet the render made on the issuing of such a writ may be within the description of a render to the custody of the gaoler of the Court according to the practice of the Court. The words quite obviously refer to some recognised course of practice, though it is not easy to say what practice they relate to or intend to refer to, or whether they actually limit it to the recognizance of bail. We therefore think this plea is an answer to the action. The defendant further pleaded, fourthly, that the order of Mr. Justice Coleridge was made before the time of rendering the defendant and his partners, according to the practice of the Court, had expired, and was made ex parte without any previous summons. The plaintiff has demurred thereto, and we think this plea is bad. It seems to be pleaded to the order of Mr. Justice Coleridge on two grounds; first, because the time for rendering had not elapsed when the order was made; but it was quite consistent with the plea that the time for rendering would have expired before the time limited by the order for the defendant and his partners to render, and if any order was made which operates to extend the time for rendering, such an order ought to be made before the time has expired for rendering. The second ground of objection is, that the order was made ex parte without a summons. It appears there was time to rectify any defect in the order, if any existed, by application to the Court to set aside the order, and until it is set aside the order cannot be treated as a nullity. There is also a further objection to the plea, that if the order of Mr. Justice Coleridge left the defendant without any justifiable cause in the plea for not surrendering pursuant to the practice of the Court on Mr. Justice Cresswell's order, the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed on this demurrer. The defendant has further pleaded, fifthly, that the order of Mr. Justice Coleridge was made before the time for rendering the defendant and his copartners had expired, and before the expiration of the ten days before the service of the order of Mr. Justice Coleridge, the first order of Mr. Justice Cresswell was made; and before the expiration of the time mentioned in the last order, the second order of Mr. Justice Cresswell was made; and before the 5th day of Michaelmas Term, the rule of the Court of Exchequer in the declaration mentioned was made; and that before the making of the said last-mentioned rule, and within a reasonable time of the former notice of the said rule was given by the plaintiff as by the Court directed, and according to the practice of the Courts; and that afterwards cause was shewn according to the practice of the Court, and thereupon the Court did, on the rule and according to the practice of the said Court, order and direct the defendant and his partners and their bail and sureties, within ten days from the day of the making the said rule, to render the defendant and his partners; and that within the time so limited the defendant and his partners rendered themselves to the custody of the gaoler of the court. The plaintiff demurred to this plea, on the ground that the order of Mr. Justice Cresswell only gave time to render till the fifth day of Michaelmas Term, and that the rule nisi of the Court did not give any extended time for the render; and it was contended that on the 5th day of Michaelmas Term the condition was broken, and the right of action vested in the plaintiff. But it appears to us that when the rule nisi was granted it was competent to the Court, under the Act of Parliament, to grant an extended time to render; and the Court, in granting the rule to shew cause why the time should not be extended, reserved its jurisdiction entire, and maintained the order for the extension of the time in the same state as when they granted the rule nisi. It seems to us, therefore, the defendant is entitled to judgment on this plea. The sixth plea sets forth a fiat in bankruptcy against the defendant, and that the certificates of conformity under the fiat issued after the making of the writing obligatory; but the plea does not allege that the fiat was issued after the recovery of judgment on the action brought for the recovery of the original debt. The plea not stating the fiat to have been issued after the recovery, in deciding on the validity of the plea, it must be assumed it issued before the recovery. The original debt in this case is undoubtedly barred; but it will not follow, as a consequence, that the bond given to secure the payment of the debt will be also barred, for which the case of Jameson v. Campbell (5 B. & Ald.) is in point. We must look, therefore, to the provisions of the statute, 6 Geo. 4, to determine this point. The certificate is, by section 126 of that Act, a bar to all debts and demands that may be proveable under the fiat against the bankrupt. The question will be whether this bond is proveable under the fiat. The only sections under which it can be so are the 51st and the 56th. By the 51st section, persons who have given credit to the bankrupt for any money, or other matter or thing, that shall not have become payable when the bankrupt committed the act of bankruptcy, whether such credit shall have been given, on any bill, bond, note, or other negotiable security or not, shall be entitled to prove such bill, bond, note, &c. as if the same was payable presently, and receive dividends equally with the other creditors, deducting only the usual rate of interest, to be calculated from the declaration of the dividend to the time when such debt would have become payable. This section, as far as relates to bonds; is to the same effect, and nearly in the same terms as the statute, 1 Geo. 1, c. 11, s. 1, by which bonds, though not presently payable, were admitted to be proved, and it has been decided on the construction of that Act that a bond conditioned for the payment of money on the happening of an event before the happening of that event could not. This appears by ex parte Barker (9 Ves.). It seems to us that the rule must apply to the 51st sect. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. In the present case it is not only uncertain at what time any debt can be due on the bond, but also whether any debt will ever become due, and it is uncertain whether the condition of the bond will be broken. Therefore this debt is not maintainable by virtue of the 51st section. The 56th section provides, "that if any bankrupt shall, before the issuing of the commission, contract any debt payable on a contingency that shall not have happened before the issuing of such commission, the person by whom such debt has been contracted may, if he think fit, apply to the commissioners to set a value upon such debt, and the commissioner is required to ascertain the value thereof, and admit such person to the proof; and if the value shall not be ascertained before the contingency happened, then such person may, after such contingency has happened, prove in respect of such debt, and provided such person had not, when such debt was contracted, notice of any act of bankruptcy by the bankrupt committed." On the construction of this section a distinction is taken in the case of Ex parte Marshall (Montague and Ayrton, cited and relied upon by Mr. Justice Erskine, in Abbot v. Hicks (7 Scott) between contingent liabilities that may never become due, and debts payable on contingencies, and it has been held that it is the latter only that are maintainable under the statute. In the present case, though in form a case of debt on a bond, it being dependent on the performance of a contingency, is in substance not a case of contingent debt, but a contingent liability. At the time the fiat issued, it was quite uncertain whether any debt would ever arise on the bond; it was at the time a liability that could not become a debt unless the condition was broken. It appears to us, therefore, judgment should be for the plaintiff on the demurrer to the 6th plea, and also to the 8th, which does not raise any other question than that raised by the 6th. The 7th plea states, that before the giving of the bond, an action was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant and his partners for the recovery of the same identical debt in the condition mentioned, and that the said action, at the time of making the said writing obligatory, and from thence hitherto hath been and still is pending; that the plaintiff could and might have recovered in the said action the said debt, and at the time of making the said writing obligatory, the said action in the declaration mentioned had not been commenced; that the said writing obligatory was meant and intended by the parties thereto to apply to the said action so commenced by the plaintiff as in the said plea mentioned, and was not by the said parties or any of them meant or intended to apply, and did not apply, to the said action so commenced, or to the judgment so obtained as in the declaration mentioned. The plaintiff has demurred to this plea, and it seems to us the plea is bad. What the parties meant or intended as to what action it was meant to apply, must be collected from the terms of the condition, and no averment can be taken on that which does not appear on the face of the instrument. The condition is to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which had been or thereafter should be brought for the recovery of the debt, and it is a direct contradiction of the terms made use of to aver that the bond was only given for a sum to be recovered in an action already brought. We think, therefore, this plea is bad, and judgment should be given for the plaintiff on the demurrer thereto.

Judgment for the defendant on the second and fifth pleas, and for the plaintiff on the others.

Practice—Costs.

Where a trader is summoned by a creditor under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 11, and makes an affidavit under s. 12, that he verily believes he has a good defence to the whole of the demand, the Court will, as a matter of course, grant him the costs of his attendance.

Goldsmit, a trader, had been summoned by a creditor under an affidavit of debt filed in accordance with sec. 11 of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, and had made a deposition upon oath in the form prescribed by the statute, that he verily believed he had a good defence to the whole of the sum demanded. Application was now made by his attorney for the costs and charges of his attendance, which, by the 18th section of the statute, the Court in its discretion is empowered to grant. It was submitted that the other commissioners had laid it down as a general rule that where, as in the present case, a party was prepared to swear that he believed he owed no legal debt to the party summoning him, he was entitled to have his costs.

On the other side it was urged that both the defendant and the trader made their depositions upon oath, and that the affidavit of the defendant was more likely to be true, because it entered into a particular statement of the nature of the claim, its various items, &c.; while the oath of the trader was a mere general assertion of a supposed non-liability.

Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.—Undoubtedly the Act of Parliament leaves this matter to the discretion of the Court. But, as I understand it is now become an invariable rule to allow the trader his costs in cases of this kind, I shall not think it my duty to depart from such a rule. The costs will be ascertained in the usual way.

Re JOHN WARREN.

Third fiat—Certificate.

Where two fiats have already issued against a bankrupt, and 15s. in the pound have not been paid under the second, and where the act of bankruptcy upon which the third fiat is founded is the filing of the bankrupt's own declaration of insolvency, the Court has still the power of granting the certificate, if the bankrupt, upon the facts of the case, appear to deserve it.

This was a sitting for the allowance of the bankrupt's certificate. It appeared that the bankrupt had already been a bankrupt twice previously—once in the year 1835, and the second time in the year 1840. No dividend had been paid under either of those bankruptcies, and the fiat, in the present instance, had been issued upon the bankrupt's own petition.

Cooke, for a creditor.—In this case the Court is bound to refuse the certificate. This is the third time that Warren has become a bankrupt, and no dividend has ever been paid under either of his former bankruptcies. It was said, by the Court of Queen's Bench, in Fowler v. Coster (10 B. & C. 427), that a third fiat against a bankrupt whose effects have not paid 15s. in the pound is void; and although in Ex parte Welsh (Mon. 378), Lord Brougham questioned that position, and declared that he could not bring his mind to say that the Great Seal had not the power to issue a third commission, yet the reasons he gives for his opinion, and the arguments employed by Sir George Rose, who was counsel in the case, proceed upon the supposition that there may be something for a Court of Bankruptcy to administer under a third fiat, and that it will be for the benefit of the creditors that the fiat should issue. That supposes, therefore, the case of a hostile creditor making a trader a bankrupt, not the case of a person making himself a bankrupt solely for his own advantage. Formerly, if a commission issued, for the bankrupt's own benefit exclusively, it used to be annulled as collusive. Undoubtedly the question of collusive bankruptcies is now at an end. But the power of making one's self a bankrupt was only allowed for the benefit of creditors, in order that something might be saved from the wreck of the bankrupt's property by a speedy application to the Court. In Ex parte Chambers (3 Dea. 494; 3 Mon. & A. 294, S. C.) Mr. Commissioner Holroyd refused to open or adjudicate upon a fiat issued against an uncertificated bankrupt, upon the ground that such a fiat was void in law. Now, this is virtually the same case. Under the statute, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 127, as this man's estate paid no dividend at his second bankruptcy, the certificate then obtained does not hinder his future estate and effects from vesting absolutely in the assignees under the second fiat. With reference to his property, he is therefore an uncertificated bankrupt, and, as it was now too late for the Court to pursue the course pointed out by the case referred to, the certificate ought, at once, to be refused.

Sturgeon, for the bankrupt, was not heard on this point.

Mr. Commissioner FANE.—After the decisions that have been come to it is a matter of doubt whether a third fiat is properly issued. Perhaps the leaning is in favour of its being issued. In this case, indeed, the bankruptcy is of the party's own creation; still I cannot visit upon the bankrupt the doubts of the different decisions. I have really nothing to do with the legal objection. If the Court above thinks fit to issue a fiat, I am bound to act upon it.

The merits were then gone into, and ultimately the certificate was allowed. Certificate allowed.

REYNOLDS v. PARKER.

Small Debts Act.

A debtor who veraciously defends an action, whereby the costs are increased, and who, at the time of giving instructions to his attorney to plead, has no reasonable prospect of being able to pay the costs incurred by the creditor, is, after judgment obtained, and on being summoned under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, liable to be committed under the 1st section of that Act, for having wilfully contracted that part of the judgment debt which consisted of the costs, without reasonable prospect of being able to pay it, notwithstanding there was no evidence before the Commissioner that the original debt had been improperly contracted.

Samuel Parker, resident in Gloucestershire, was summoned to this court under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, on the application of Richard Reynolds, a creditor, for 32l. 15s. 6d. by force of a judgment obtained in the Court of Exchequer of Pleas. The debt amounted to 15l. and the taxed costs (a trial having taken place before the sheriff of the county, in consequence of the defendant's pleading the general issue) to 17l. 15s. 6d.

Wilkes, solicitor, of Gloucester, appeared on the part of the summoning creditor, and examined the debtor, who admitted that after he had been served with the notice of declaration in the action, he took it to an attorney, and instructed him to plead, telling him, at the time, he thought the creditor could not prove the debt plain against him; that at this time he knew perfectly well he owed the whole of the money, and that he had no means whatever of paying the costs which might be incurred in consequence of his pleading, if the creditor proceeded and obtained a verdict. The writ of trial was in court to prove the plea, verdict, &c. He then submitted that the debtor had wilfully contracted that part of the judgment debt which consisted of the costs, without having reasonable prospect of being able to pay it, within the meaning of the first section of the Act in question.

His HONOUR observed, that he doubted whether the statute applied to the costs, but only to the contracting of the original debt.

Where contended that this case was analogous to the case of an insolvent applying under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, who, on being proved to have been guilty of a vexatious defence, was liable to have his petition dismissed, for having incurred a debt (for costs) without any prospect of being able to pay it, under the 24th section of the Act; and that the words of that section, so far as they applied to this point, and the 1st section of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, were nearly similar, and, as he submitted, quite capable of the same construction.

His HONOUR considered the section referred to did apply to the costs (which formed part of the judgment debt), and that the debtor in this case had wilfully contracted the debt for costs without reasonable prospect of being able to pay it within the meaning of the 1st section of the Act; and, observing that it was a gross case, ordered him to be committed for the full term of forty days.

The debtor was required to remain in court whilst the necessary warrant was made out, when he was at once conveyed to prison.

[We would draw the attention of practitioners to this case, and suggest caution in recommending debtors to plead to actions when there is no real defence.]

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

Monday, Dec. 15, 1845.

REG. v. BULL and SCHMIDT.

Where two persons were indicted for making and engraving a plate for the purposes of forgery, and it was proved that one of them gave the order for the manufacture of the plate to an innocent agent, who never saw the other until it was completed—it was held that they were both correctly charged as principals.

The prisoners were indicted under the 1 Wm. 4, c. 66, s. 19, for making and engraving a portion of a plate, &c.

A correspondence was given in evidence between Bull, who resided in London, and Schmidt, who was upon the Continent, from which it appeared that they were jointly engaged in planning the forgery. The order for the plate was, however, given by Bull to an innocent agent before Schmidt came to England. On the arrival of the latter, he was taken by Bull to the house of the manufacturer, and the plate, in the condition in which it was when the indictment was framed, was given into their hands, and they were shortly afterwards taken into custody.

Ballantine, for the prisoner Schmidt, submitted that as both the defendants were indicted as principals, the evidence did not support the charge. It went to show that Schmidt was an accessory before the fact, for until the time when the plate was delivered into their hands in as complete a state as it ever was, he was never brought in contact either with it or the maker.

TINDAL, C.J.—Are not the letters sufficient for that purpose?

Ballantine contended that until something was done in consequence of the letters they only shewed an accessorial act. All the instructions for the plate were given by Bull. It was the making or engraving that constituted the gist of the charge, and to make a party a principal in any crime he must be near enough to render some active assistance in its commission. How could it be said that Schmidt could be thus assisting, when in fact he was upon the Continent?

ALDERSON, B.—How does he differ in this respect from Bull? Neither of them made or engraved the plate.

Ballantine contended that as Bull had acted immediately in the matter, he was to be considered as the maker. The innocent agent was a mere machine set in motion by Bull. Every act done by the former was virtually the act of the latter. It was precisely the same as though Bull had made and engraved the plate, and if he had done so, Schmidt, being absent, could be only an accessory. There was no difference between the principal case and one where a person counsels another to commit a felony without taking any active part in it himself. The learned counsel cited R. v. Davis and Hall (R. & R. 113).

Clarkson (with whom were Badkin and Rew) for the prosecution, cited R. v. Mazon, 9 C. & P. 676, and was stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—It is contended that as Schmidt was on the Continent at the time when the order was given and the plate was made, he should not be indicted as a principal. That reasoning would be good if the actual maker had been a guilty party, because he would stand in a different position to those who had counselled him to the commission of the crime. But it altogether fails where the immediate agent is an innocent one. Then those who have plotted and arranged that he should do the particular act are themselves principals. Suppose the prisoners had been both abroad, and that having planned the forgery, one of them had given the order for the plate by letter; could it be doubted that they would be indictable as principals, and can it make any real difference that one of them is in this country. It seems to me, then, that the circumstance of the immediate agent in this forgery being an innocent person renders the rule of law as to principal and accessory inapplicable.

ALDERSON, B.—If a person does an act with a guilty intent, he is not the agent of any one. If he does it innocently, he is the agent of some person or persons; and if two have agreed to employ him, he is the agent of both. In this case, therefore, it is a question for the jury, whether the prisoners were jointly acting in the procuring this plate to be made. If they were, then the engraver acts on behalf of both. It makes no difference whether they were in England or elsewhere. When they have once agreed to do the thing, the act of one is the act of all, although the rest be absent at the time.

RE JOSEPH NEWTON, otherwise NUGENT.

Habeas corpus—Invalidity of committal vitiates a good conviction—Liability of party resident in England to penalty for deserting his wife, so that she becomes chargeable upon the poor-rates in Ireland.

J. N. was sentenced by two justices, pursuant to the 1st and 2nd Vict. c. 66, sec. 59, to be imprisoned, and kept to hard labour for three months, for deserting his wife. The committal recited a conviction and sentence, which were in conformity with the statute, but in the mandatory part omitted to direct the gaoler to keep the prisoner to hard labour. The Court holding that the committal was bad, and the conviction thereby invalidated, discharged the prisoner.

Quare, does a man, though resident in England, apart from his wife, from a period prior to the passing of the Irish Poor-law Act, notwithstanding become liable to the penalties imposed by the 59th section, as soon as his wife becomes chargeable upon the rates of any Poor-law union in Ireland?

Joseph Newton, alias Nugent, who had been for upwards of twenty years preceding living in Liverpool, apart from his wife, was there arrested and brought to Dublin, in pursuance of a warrant issued by two justices of the Castle Division of Police, and by them convicted, under the 59th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, of having deserted his wife, so that she became chargeable upon the rates of the South Dublin Poor-law Union, and was committed to the Richmond Bridewell upon the 1st of December last. The committal, which recites as much of the conviction and preliminary proceedings as is necessary to render the case intelligible, was in the following terms:—

"Police District of Dublin Metropolis, Castle Division of Police, and County of the City of Dublin, to wit.

"To William Browne, one of the constables of the said police district, and his assistants, and to the keeper of the Richmond Bridewell, in the county of the city of Dublin:—Whereas, by a certain conviction, bearing date the 1st day of December, 1845, Joseph Nugent, of Liverpool, in that part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, called Great Britain, in said district, was duly convicted before us, Frank Thorpe Porter and James Magee, esqrs. two of the divisional justices of the Castle division of said police district, and justices of the peace in and for said district and division, upon the information and oaths of Elizabeth Waldron, of No. 6, Wood-quay, in the said district, wife of Thomas Waldron, and Thomas

Geraghty, wardmaster of the workhouse of the South Dublin Union in said district, of a certain offence committed by the said Joseph Nugent hereinafter mentioned, for that the said Joseph Nugent, on or about the 7th of April, 1845, at Dublin, in the county of the city of Dublin, and within the said district, did desert and leave his wife named Mary Nugent, whom he is liable to maintain, so that such wife has become destitute, and has been relieved in the South Dublin Union workhouse, at Dublin, to wit, at James-street, in the county of the city of Dublin, and within the said district, contrary to the statute in that case made and provided, whereby, and by force of the said statute, the said Joseph Nugent was, for his said offence, by us adjudged to be committed to the said Bridewell, the same being the house of correction of and for the county of the city of Dublin aforesaid, there to be kept to hard labour for the term of three calendar months from the date hereof; Now we, the said justices, do therefore, in her Majesty's name, require and command you, the said William Browne, to take the body of the said Joseph Nugent, and him forthwith to carry to the Richmond Bridewell, at the South Circular-road, in the county of the city of Dublin, and there to deliver him into the custody of the keeper of the said Bridewell, together with this warrant; and we, the said justices, do hereby command you, the said keeper, to receive into and safely keep in your custody, in the said Bridewell, the body of the said Joseph Nugent, for three calendar months from the date hereof, and for so doing this shall be to you or any of you a sufficient warrant and authority.

"Given under our hands and seals, at the public office of the said division, this 1st December, 1845.

"F. T. PORTER (L. S.)

"J. MAGEE (L. S.)"

Upon the 6th of December the prisoner was brought up by habeas corpus before Mr. Justice Burton in chambers, and sought to be discharged from custody, on the grounds hereinafter mentioned. The learned judge, however, not having the proceedings of the magistrates before him, remanded the prisoner until the ensuing Term, and now accordingly the prisoner, who had in the mean time, by consent, been allowed to stand out on bail, was brought up by habeas corpus, and a copy of the proceedings returned by the magistrates.

J. Chambers moved that the prisoner be now discharged.—He is entitled to his discharge on several grounds; he was, in the first instance, improperly arrested in England; having left this country and become a resident in England more than twenty years ago, he cannot be held to have committed an offence under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, which applies exclusively to Ireland, and was not passed until long after his having become a resident in England. Secondly, it does not appear that the warrant of committal was signed at petty sessions in open court. (a)

Brewster.—That objection is cured by the interpretation clause.

CRAMPTON, J.—The statute does not say that the party shall be committed in open court, but that such person shall, on conviction in open court, be committed.

Chambers.—There is no step in the sentence. This is a highly penal statute, and in favour of liberty; it ought to be construed strictly.

Thirdly. The committal is bad. It does not authorise the keeper of the Bridewell to keep the prisoner to hard labour, which is the punishment prescribed by the statute; and where an offence is created by a statute, and a punishment is prescribed, a committal for a greater or a less punishment is void, and the prisoner must be discharged; for this Court will not give judgment upon the conviction of an inferior Court, though that conviction may be a good one. (Vyse v. Baker, Carth. 6.) The magistrates are bound by the committal. Where the committal is bad, the conviction is rendered void. (Wicks v. Clutterbuck, 10 B. Moore, 84, per Best, C. J.; Rogers v. Jones, 1 Ry. & M. 135.)

PERRIN, J.—Where, under the statute, a magistrate commits a man for three months, but omits the direction to keep him to hard labour, is he liable in an action for false imprisonment?—that is the question in this case.

CRAMPTON, J.—If the sentence is not authorised by the statute, whether it is in excess or diminution of punishment, it is a void sentence; but where the sentence is right, and the conviction is regularly drawn up, is the sentence made void by a defective committal?

Chambers.—It is. If a man were convicted of murder, but was only committed to gaol for three months, could the sheriff execute the sentence of the law upon him?

Brewster, Q. C. for the Crown, contra.—It is an error to say that the Court must either discharge or commit the prisoner; he is now in custody, and all I call upon the Court to do is to refuse to discharge him. The cases cited on the other side are referable to another principle; they were cases of civil actions against magistrates for false imprisonment; in Rogers v. Jones the conviction was framed under one statute and the committal under another (Rex v. Taylor (3 D. & R. Mag. Cases, p. 493); Bailey, J. in that case, says, "there is an old case in Porteus v. R. v. Hawkins, 272 which decides this, that if there is a conviction independently of the committal, the Court will not discharge on any defect in the warrant of commitment unless the conviction is before them;" and Abbott, C. J. observes, "and that is very reasonable, for otherwise there must be as much certainty and length in the commitment as in the conviction, which would be productive of great inconvenience." As to the objection that the prisoner's conduct does not amount to a desertion under the statute, because he had deserted his wife twenty years ago, the Act does not make it penal for a man to desert his wife, but to desert her so as that she becomes chargeable; and the offence only arises when she becomes chargeable upon the rates; therefore this is not, as was contended, an offence committed before the passing of the stat. (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56); as to the objection that the prisoner was improperly arrested in another country, no such thing appears on the face of the conviction, and this Court will say we have got the prisoner here, and having him within the jurisdiction of the Court which convicted him, we will leave him so. (Ex-parte Susanna Scott, 9 B. & C. 446), and cases there cited.)

(a) The 59th sec. of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, provides "That if any person shall desert and leave his wife, &c. so that such wife, &c. shall become destitute and be relieved in the Workhouse of any Union, every such person shall, on conviction thereof before any justice of the peace, at petty sessions, in open court, &c. be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any term not exceeding three months."

PERRIN, J.—What do you say to the want of certainty in that part of the committal and conviction which recites that the prisoner deserted his wife "on or about the 7th of April?" and could the keeper of the Bridewell put the prisoner to hard labour upon this committal?

Brewster.—I think he could with perfect safety.

PERRIN, J.—Suppose the statute gives a form of the committal, how would it do to pursue that form, just leaving out these words?

Fitzgibbon, Q. C. on behalf of the guardians of the poor for the South Dublin Union.—If the warrant had even stopped after the recital of the conviction, and the direction to the keeper of the gaol "to receive the body of Joseph Nugent," it would have been sufficient.

CRAMPTON, J.—It might if it then said, "to undergo the sentence aforesaid." If the warrant had varied from the conviction by directing the gaoler to keep the prisoner for two months instead of three would it have been sufficient?

Fitzgibbon.—That portion might be rejected as surplusage. Rex v. Taylor governs this case. Burn's Just. p. 967.

CRAMPTON, J.—Rex v. Taylor does not go to the same extent at all; it decides that the Court will not discharge a prisoner merely on the ground of the committal being defective, until they have the conviction also before them.

BURTON, J.—The decision in Taylor's case is confined to cases arising under the particular statute.

Napier, Q. C. in reply.—The invalidity of the committal cannot be cured by the validity of the conviction. It is most important that the committal shall be right, as the conviction is not ever sent to the gaoler; he has nothing but the committal to go by. It might as well be said that if sentence of transportation was passed upon a prisoner, and the mandatory part of the commitment directed the gaoler to keep him in custody for two years, such a detention would be legal. This statute (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56) is a highly penal one, and should be most strictly construed, as there is no appeal given by it from the decisions of the justices.

The learned counsel cited the judgment of Best, C. J. in Taylor's case; and being about to address himself to the other objections, was stopped by the Court.

BURTON, J.—The Court is of opinion that your argument upon this part of the case must prevail; and that the prisoner, not being in legal custody, must be discharged.

CRAMPTON, J.—It is the warrant that the keeper of a gaol is to look to as to his authority, and not the conviction.

PERRIN, J.—It is not to be expected that the keeper of the gaol is to look into the Act of Parliament, and then put his construction upon the warrant; he is not to be expected to spell out his authority in that way. The prisoner was discharged.

Brewster applied that he should be put upon terms not to bring any action, but

The Court declined to interfere.

Tuesday, Jan. 27.

CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

R. v. the Prosecution of EDWARD ELLIOT, and the Attorneys, v. JOHN MAHER, one of the Attorneys, and OTHERS.

In this case a conditional order having been obtained last Term (see 6 Law T. p. 189), on the application of the prosecutor, an attorney practising in the county of Kilkenny, for liberty to file a criminal information to a conspiracy against the defendants, who were also attorneys practising in the same county.

Brewster, S.G. on behalf of the defendants, informed the Court that Mr. Maher, who had presided as chairman at the meeting at which the resolutions objected to by the prosecutor (see ante, p. 132) were passed, desired to express his regret at having put his name to them, as they were calculated to give offence to the prosecutor, who was a gentleman with whom Mr. Maher was acquainted in private life, and whose character ranked deservedly high for honour and high respectability. Mr. Maher would have to incur the penalty of paying the costs which had been incurred.

Napier, Q.C. for the prosecutor, was quite satisfied with the explanation which had been offered. He wished, however, to say that a statement which had been made by him when applying for a conditional order in this case, had been at the time questioned by a third party at that time present in court, but the truth of that denial was no longer put forward, and the statement put forward had not been authorised by the defendant.

By the COURT.—Let the conditional order be discharged, on payment of costs.

January 24 and 26, 1846.

(Before BURTON and CRAMPTON, Justices.)

REG. v. CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY, Esq.

Practice.—Dilatory plea in criminal cases—Verification of must be positive—Stat. 6 Anne, c. 10.

To an indictment for a libel, the defendant pleaded in abatement, and annexed to his plea an affidavit stating it to be true in substance and effect, "as he verily believed."

The Court on motion set aside the plea for want of a verification, holding that the stat. 6 Anne, c. 11, analogous to 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16 (English), applied to dilatory pleas in criminal as well as civil cases; and that an affidavit in support of such a plea must be positive.

On the 14th of January an indictment was found against the traverser, charging him with publishing, in the Nation newspaper, a wicked and seditious libel; to this indictment the traverser put in the following plea:—

IN THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Charles Gavan Duffy, at the prosecution of the Queen.—And now on this day, to wit, in the 19th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1846, comes the said Charles Gavan Duffy, by John Mitchell, his attorney, into the court here of our Lady the Queen, and protesting that he is not guilty of the supposed offences in the said supposed indictment specified, or any of them, or any part thereof; for plea in abatement nevertheless saith, that he ought not to be compelled to answer the said supposed indictment, and that the same ought to be quashed, because he says, that the said supposed indictment was not publicly and in open court, by the jurors aforesaid, or in their presence, or in the presence of twelve of them, or of a number of them, sufficient according to law in that behalf, presented to the said court of our said Lady the Queen, as a true bill; but on the contrary thereof the same was heretofore, to wit, on the 14th day of January, in the year of our Lord last aforesaid, presented in open court to the said Court, as a true bill, by one of the jurors aforesaid only, to wit, by John Croker, in the presence of a less number than eleven of the jurors aforesaid, to wit, in the presence of five only of the jurors aforesaid, to wit, at Dublin, in the county of the city of Dublin. And the said Charles Gavan Duffy further saith, that the jurors aforesaid were not, nor were any of them severally or at all called over by his or their name or names in open court in the said court of our said Lady the Queen, by the proper officer in that behalf, or by any other person whatever, or at all, at or immediately before the time when the said supposed indictment was so presented as aforesaid to the said Court by the jurors aforesaid, to wit, at Dublin, in the county of the city of Dublin aforesaid, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid; and this he (the said Charles Gavan Duffy) is ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment of the said indictment, and that the same may be quashed, and so forth.

Annexed to the plea was an affidavit made by the traverser, stating the plea to be "true in substance and effect, as deponent verily believes."

Henn (with whom was Napier) now moved, that the plea pleaded in this case, which has been handed to the officer, should not be received and recorded, the same not having been delivered pursuant to the course and practice of the Court; or that the said plea may be set aside, the same having been pleaded irregularly and contrary to the practice of the Court; and inasmuch as the same has not been verified by a sufficient and proper affidavit of the truth of the allegations therein; nor has such affidavit been annexed thereto, or handed therewith to the officer, as is required by law, and by the course and practice of this Court; and that the said defendant shall plead over immediately on the decision of the Court as to the said plea pleaded.

First.—That this plea should have been filed on the 17th, for being a plea in abatement, it is of a purely dilatory nature, and does not go to the merits of the case, and therefore is to be viewed with strictness. In Reg. v. O'Connell the traverser appeared in person (2 Law T. 193) and not by attorney, and the Court held that the 60 Geo. 3, c. 45, makes no distinction between pleas in bar and in abatement, and that Act only applied where a party appeared in person, and not by attorney; and it has been conceded that before the passing of that statute the four days given to a defendant would have been reckoned both inclusive, and therefore Mr. Duffy, as he appeared by attorney, ought to have pleaded on Saturday; and even if he had appeared and pleaded in person, he ought to have put in his plea before the Court rose on Monday.

Secondly.—This plea in abatement cannot be sustained, for there is not a sufficient affidavit to verify it; by the 11th sec. of 6 Anne, c. 10 (analogous to 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 7, Eng.) no dilatory plea should be allowed unless the defendant makes a positive affidavit of its being true in substance and matter of fact. In Gude's Pract. (2nd vol. p. 131), and in Tidd's Pract. 1st vol. 641, (citing Onslow v. Booth, 2 Str. 706) the form of affidavit is given, which is positive as to the truth of the plea; but here the traverser only swears that the plea is true "as he is informed and believes." In R. v. Jones (2 Str. 1161), a plea in abatement having been put in to an information in nature of a quo warranto, it was set aside for want of a title to the affidavit annexed to it; the Court saying the practice of the Crown Office cannot alter the Act of Parliament.

PERRIN, J.—We have judicial knowledge of the fact stated in the plea, that only a few of the grand jury came into court with the bill of indictment.

Henn.—Could your lordship trust your recollection so far as to say how many jurors were in the box?

PERRIN, J.—I really think I could.

Henn.—Although the attention of the Court may have been in a particular case directed to the circumstances, in nine cases out of ten it might not, and the fact of how many jurors come into the box and hand down a bill is not a matter requiring judicial attention. In Res v. Granger (3 Burr. 1647) Lord Mansfield set the plea aside, and judgment was entered; here the Crown does not ask the Court to give judgment, but merely requires the traverser to plead to the merits, that the case may be investigated. Hughes v. Alvarez (2 Lord Raym. 1469, S. C. Str. 689), and Pearce v. Davy (Say. 293), are strongly in point. In the latter case, Denison, J. says, "It has been said that it is sufficient under the stat. 4 Anne, c. 16, if any matter be shewn to the Court by affidavit to induce them to believe the fact of the plea; but the construction has always been that the affidavit must be positive as to every matter of fact, for that the words 'probable matter' in that statute only extend to a matter of record, or to some other collateral matter, of the truth of which there cannot be a positive affidavit."

Robert Holmes (with whom were O'Hagan and Sir Colman O'Loughlin), contra.—Notice of this motion should have been received earlier; no affidavit has been made in support of this application: to set aside a plea upon motion in this way is a very strong measure. (See case of Bray v. Haller, 2 Moore, 213.) The object of the Crown is to set aside the plea which they are afraid to demur to, and then serve notice of trial the same day; the Attorney-General might take a conditional order, and then the traverser could shew cause against it.

Henn.—Notice of motion was served on the 22nd instant; it could not be done sooner, as the principal law officers of the Crown were engaged at the Special Commission at Mullingar.

Holmes.—We cannot help that; the plea was filed on the 19th instant.

Under these circumstances, the Court, upon consultation, directed the case to stand till the following Monday.

Monday, Jan. 26. (a)—Henn stated that he did not think it necessary to add any thing to what he had stated on the preceding Saturday.

Holmes and O'Hagan, for the traverser.—This is an attempt to get rid of a plea upon motion, which, except upon the allegation of a deficiency in the affidavit, could not be attempted. (Res v. Cooke, 2 B. & C. 618, per Abbott, C.J.) Mr. Duffy was not present when the circumstances alleged in the verifying affidavit took place, so that he could only swear upon his belief to their occurrence. The statute (6 Anne, c. 10) is applicable only to civil, and not to criminal cases (4 Blackst. C.P. 375); and, besides, I would ask the Court, with great respect, was there any judge in court who could doubt the truth of the plea? The circumstances stated therein took place in open court, and I consider that the Court are bound to take judicial notice of those facts, so that there was no necessity for an affidavit at all. In Res v. Granger, there was no verifying affidavit whatever, or probable cause shewn, to induce the Court to believe the fact alleged in the plea. At the trial of the Shewcase (27 State T. 267), five judges presided, a plea in abatement was put in, and a similar objection to the present was taken; but the judges held, that the statute of Anne applied only to civil cases. The Court having cognizance of the fact stated in the plea, there is no necessity for a verifying affidavit.

(a) Perrin, J. was absent during the argument of the case upon the 30th inst.; and the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, the newly-appointed chief justice, did not take his seat on the bench until a subsequent day.

BURTON, J.—Do you mean that the Court is bound to take notice of the fact of how many grand jurors come into court, when the foreman hands in the bill, so as to know whether there are a sufficient number present or not?

Holmes.—There ought to be twelve jurors present, and the Court are bound to take judicial knowledge of the fact.

BURTON, J.—I can only say, for my own part, that I don't know how many there were in the box at the time; it may be inadvertence on my part, but I am totally unaware of the circumstances.

Holmes.—With respect to petit juries, the Court are bound to take cognizance whether they are all in the box or not, when the foreman hands in the verdict to the Court.

BURTON, J.—In that case the judge always takes a note of the fact.

O'Hagan.—Even if a positive affidavit is required, it is not now too late to make it. Onslow v. Smith (2 Bos. & Pull. 386.)

Napier, in reply, cited Foster, C. L. p. 16; 2 Hale's P.C. lib. 2, c. 34, 87; 1 Stark. Cr. Pl. 312; Bacon's Ab. tit. Abatement, letter O; Com. Dig. Abatement, I, 11, plac. 6; 2 Saunders, 210, d, in notes. The Court should not set a precedent of allowing such a plea to remain on the file. They don't pretend at the other side to say that this affidavit complies with the statute. In Pearce v. Davy (1 Ld. Ken. 367) it is said by Denison, J., that the affidavit to verify a plea of this kind "must be positive; and so that, if false, the party may be indicted for perjury; and saying he believes won't do, for the plaintiff must rely entirely on what is sworn." Here they contend that the casual notice of a judge is to supply the place of an affidavit. But it is not because one judge may have looked up and seen the bill handed down that that knowledge is to supply the want of an affidavit. Ought the Crown, as is said, to have demurred to this plea, and leave such a precedent on the file? It is our duty to prevent public time being wasted. Davison v. Chilmann (1 Bing. N.C. 297), and Odell v. Raymond (2 Fox & S. 217) are in point. In the latter case, the Court said, "It must be made appear to the Court that such pleas are true in substance and matter of fact."

BURTON, J.—The affidavit in this case is not sufficient. A very important question has been raised, whether the statute of 6 Anne, cap. 10, is to be acted on in criminal cases? It is a very important question, and if the Court entertained any doubt upon the subject, we should certainly take time to consider it; but we do not think it necessary to do so, because it strikes us as being now too late to raise this question, which has already received the consideration of Courts in several instances, and we are of opinion that this statute does extend to criminal as well as civil cases. The next question raised is, whether the facts which have been put forward by the defendant amount to a dilatory plea? Certainly the plea is a dilatory plea, and the facts it discloses have no application whatever to the merits of the case. I do not think the plea shews any ground upon which the trial ought to be postponed. According to my judgment, if ever there was a case in which the positive assertion of a fact was necessary, and where that positive assertion was avoided and not made, it is the present case. The only thing, then, to consider is, whether there are sufficient grounds to induce the Court to believe that there has been some fatality which has prevented the traverser from making a fuller affidavit. [His lordship read the affidavit.] Nothing of that kind is suggested in the affidavit. No such thing is suggested as that a sufficient number of jurors did not concur in finding the bill. The defect relied on is only a defect in a matter of form. The traverser states in his plea that a sufficient number of jurors did not come into the box when the bill was presented, and in his affidavit he says he believes the plea to be true in substance and in effect. It is said that he was not present in court when the bill was handed down; that in this case he appeared and pleaded by attorney; but then, there is a person who ought to have been present—his attorney—who should have been present to see that not merely matters of substance but of form also were correctly done. Some person, at all events, might be expected to be present who could speak positively to the fact. On all these grounds, I am of opinion that this plea ought to be set aside and quashed.

CRAMPTON, J.—My opinion concurs with that of my brother Burton. This is the case of a dilatory plea, certainly not a case to be favoured by the Court; but, on the other hand, the Court will not take any right from the defendant, or deprive him of any privilege except as far as the statute has not been complied with. Now the question is, whether the statute of the 6th Anne, c. 20, s. 11, applies to criminal as well as civil cases? If the thing were res integra, it might be argued that it only applied to civil cases; but the statute has been passed a great number of years: and it has frequently since received the construction of Crowe. It was considered in Lord Mansfield's time to apply to cases of misdirection. In the case of R. v. Gough 1 Bur. 517 it was so held. In all cases of this kind, with very few exceptions, and in all the books of practice, it has been held to apply to criminal cases, though in some cases the Crown does not choose to avail itself of the provisions of the statute. But there is the case which occurred in the year 1794 Rex v. Smeaton, 2 St. Tr. 267, which is opposed to the practice of the Court of Queen's Bench, both in England and Ireland, since that time; and are we to follow that case now? In Kinloch's case First C. L. 15 the parties were allowed to withdraw their plea of the general issue, to enable the parties to plead to the jurisdiction of the Court, the Attorney-General consenting—frankly consenting, but was consenting, at the suggestion of the Court. Now, whether the case of Rex v. Smeaton arose out of this case or not I cannot say, but the plea in that case was one which the prisoner could not be expected to have verified positively. By the 7th sect. of the statute it is provided, "that nothing in this Act before contained shall extend to cases of felony, murder, or to any indictment." &c. But it has been observed by Lord Mansfield 1 Bur. 517, R. v. Gough, that the 7th sect. of the statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, which is precisely similar to the Irish Act 6 Anne c. 11, does not extend to the 11th section, which requires a verification of the plea, and in the last case of the kind which was before this Court, the traverser's plea was verified by affidavit. In that case Reg. v. Duffy and others, a verification was considered necessary under these circumstances. I agree with my brother Barton, that it is now too late to raise any doubts or difficulties upon this question, and am of opinion that there ought to be a verifying affidavit to sustain a plea of this kind; and the question then is, is that a proper verifying affidavit, or not? Now the statute is very precise; the words of the eleventh section are: "That no dilatory plea shall be received in any court of record, unless the party offering such plea do by affidavit prove the truth thereof, or show some probable matter to the Court to induce them to believe that the fact of such dilatory plea is true." Such an affidavit as was made in the case of Reg. v. Duffy was quite a proper one. Now the party putting in a plea of this kind is bound either to make an affidavit showing the truth of the fact averred in his plea, or to show some "probable matter" to the Court to induce the Court to believe that it is true. The Court is not to make a rule upon its own opinion of a matter of fact, upon the opinion of one, or of all the members of the Court, upon a thing which has passed many days before; it is for other parties to show these things to the Court, and not for the Court to show them to themselves. Then there is no affidavit of the party to verify the plea in this case. I think we should be establishing a most dangerous precedent if we granted such an application as that of the traverser's counsel. We are called upon to establish a new precedent, that all that passes before the eyes of the Court is to be registered in the minds of the Court. Suppose, as has been the fact, the case of one judge seeing what passed and two others not seeing it, what is to be done in that case? Is the rule to be made in conformity with the opinion of the one judge, or the majority? Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that this plea must be set aside.

Green, A. G.—I now apply that the defendant be ordered to plead over forthwith.

Holmes.—Within what time?

Henn.—Immediately.

CRAMPTON, J.—Of course, the defendant must plead immediately; it is just as if the plea had been refused the moment it was offered.

Bills in Progress.

CHELSEA AND GREENWICH PENSIONERS.

By the Bill now before Parliament for amending the Act for rendering effective the services of the Chelsea out-pensioners, and extending it to the out-pensioners of Greenwich Hospital (which Bill, as amended, has been printed), it is proposed that the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 95, for the enrolment of Chelsea pensioners, shall extend to Greenwich pensioners who may have served in the Royal Marines in like manner as if they were out-pensioners of Chelsea Hospital; and that the whole number of pensioners of both hospitals to be enrolled in the United Kingdom is not to exceed 20,000 men, and that the days of inspection or exercise shall not exceed 12 in one year. In the event of any of the out-pensioners of Greenwich Hospital so enrolled volunteering their services to be kept on duty and pay for any period not exceeding six months, they shall only be employed within the United Kingdom, or along the sea-coasts thereof. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland may call out the Irish pensioners to aid the civil power in the preservation of the public peace.

BUILDINGS ACTS.—A bill entitled an "Act to amend an Act for regulating the Construction and Use of Buildings in the Metropolis and its Neighbourhood." The Bill provides that a third official referee in addition to the two appointed under the existing law, shall be appointed by the Secretary of State; that any two of the official referees may act; that certain disqualifications for that office shall be removed, so that an official referee may heretofore be authorized by the Secretary of State to act as surveyor, architect, &c. provided he does not act as official referee, in the case of any building, &c. in which he is so employed; that special referees may be appointed by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests for such particular building or matter; that the salaries of the three referees collectively shall not exceed 2,000l. per annum; and that the sums now paid by the city of London and the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, to the commissioners of works and buildings for the said official referees and the registrar, should heretofore be paid for that purpose into the Consolidated Fund.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE.—The Bill to remove some defects in the administration of criminal justice: has been read in the House of Commons, having passed the House of Lords. It provides that in all cases where a Court is now by law empowered to award a sentence of transportation, it shall be lawful for such Court at its discretion to award such sentence for any term of years, not less than seven years, or to award such sentence of imprisonment with or without hard labour, as shall to the Court in its discretion appear just under all the circumstances. It is proposed to repeal the existing provisions under which for certain offences the party prosecuting is now required, at the Central Criminal Court, to enter into recognizances to prosecute, and to enable the party to go before the grand jury in the same manner as may be done before any other grand jury. It seems that doubts have been raised as to the proper place of trials where indictments have been removed by writs of certiorari from the Central Criminal Court into the Court of Queen's Bench, and in future such writs must specify the county or jurisdiction where the indictment is to be tried.

COUNTY ELECTIONS.—A Bill to limit the time of taking the poll in counties at contested elections of members to serve in parliament to one day:—“Whereas it is expedient that the time of taking the poll at contested elections of knights of the shire be limited to one day; be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that at any contested election of a knight or knights to serve in parliament for any county, or for any riding, parts, or division of a county, the poll shall be kept open during one day only (any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding); and such poll shall commence at eight of the clock in the forenoon of the third day after the day fixed for the election of each knight or knights, and the polling shall continue during such day only, and no poll shall be kept open later than four of the clock in the afternoon. Provided always, and be it enacted, that if such third day after the day of election be Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas-day, then the poll shall take place on the day next following such Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas-day; and if Christmas-day fall on a Saturday, then on the Monday following. And be it enacted, that this Act shall not extend to Ireland.”

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.—The Bill of Mr. Duncombe to amend the Act of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, relating to friendly societies, has been considerably altered in the committee. It was printed on Saturday last, with fifteen clauses, instead of three, as originally issued. It bears the names of Mr. T. Duncombe and Mr. Hawes. Purposes for which friendly societies may be formed are declared, and all existing societies, for which rules have been sanctioned, to be deemed to be within the provisions of the rected Act from the allowance of such rules. Mr. Tidd Pratt is to be paid a salary equal to the net average amount of fees received by him during the last three years, for certifying the rules of friendly societies, after deducting the necessary expenses of his office, &c. He is to be styled the Registrar of Friendly Societies in England, and the registrar hereafter to be appointed in England is to receive not more than 800*l.* a year. In case the fees are insufficient, then the remainder for salary and expenses to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. It is declared that after the passing of this Act the barrister or advocate appointed to certify the rules of friendly societies shall be styled the Registrar of Friendly Societies in England, Ireland, and Scotland respectively. Disputes are to be referred to the registrar; and when a trustee is absent from England, bankrupt, insolvent, &c. the registrar may order the stock of a society to be transferred and dividends paid.

PROSECUTORS, WITNESSES, &c.—Presented by Lord Denman, and intitled, “A Bill for the Punishment of such as shall endeavour to deter Prosecutors, Witnesses, and Jurors from the discharge of their Duty.” Enacts, that every person who shall, in any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, after the passing of this Act, by any threat, either written or spoken, or by giving or offering any bribe or benefit, or in any other manner, endeavour to deter any person from appearing as a witness, prosecutor, or juror on any occasion on which he is by law bound or required to appear, or from honestly discharging his duty as such witness, prosecutor, or juror, and every person who shall wilfully injure the person or the property, either real or personal, of any person who shall have appeared as a witness, prosecutor, or juror, by reason of his conduct as such, shall, on being duly convicted of such offence, be liable, at the discretion of the Court before which he shall be so convicted, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fifteen years, nor less than seven, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

PRACTICE OF CONVEYANCING.

FRIDAY, March 27.—Lord BROUGHAM brought in a Bill—which he should move to read a first time now, and a second time shortly after the holidays—to redeem a pledge he had given to extend the wholesome and salutary provisions of two Acts of last session, for simplifying the conveyance and sale of landed property and the granting of town leases. Those measures had operated to the comfort of those who were really interested, but to the discomfort of certain parties who practised in conveyancing. He did not, however, much care for those worthy counsel and attorneys, but rather regarded their clients, whose time and money had both been saved by the Acts in question. His present Bill extended the former provisions to all sales and exchanges, and to the forms of leases. One of the greatest evils to which landowners in this country were subjected was the expense of conveyancing, and the consequent uncertainty of title. A body of evidence had been given before the committee on burdens on land, which was quite frightful in this respect as shewing the difference between the number of years' purchase in this and other countries, in consequence of the expense here that attended conveyancing. The expense of the conveyance of an acre was as great as that of a large estate, and his measure would give great facility to the commerce in land. There was a reluctance on the part of the profession, he had understood, to use the new forms because they were not compulsory, but he defied any one to make them so, for if a man chose to use the long form of conveyance in preference to the short one, he could not compel him to adopt the latter. But in the present Bill he had inserted a provision giving the Taxing Master power to take the matter into consideration, and not to allow the long form in costs, if it were shown that the short one was sufficient.—Lord CAMPBELL concurred in the Bill. Three years ago he had himself introduced a measure of the kind. He regretted, however, that his noble and learned friend should have expressed an opinion that the profession were hostile to it; for he felt sure that they would be ready to adopt any improvement, and when these forms were promulgated by authority, there was no doubt of their being adopted.—Lord BROUGHAM explained. He did not mean that the profession as a body objected to these forms, but only alluded to certain practitioners of both branches of the profession.—Lord BEAUMONT could not refrain from congratulating those interested in real property that this question had at last been taken up by one of the ability of his noble and learned friend. Any one who had attended to the evidence before the burdens upon land committee, must know that the transfer of property was not only impeded by the present system, but that a great deal of capital which would be otherwise invested in the cultivation of land was prevented from being employed in that way in consequence of the difficulty of raising money on mortgage, and in other transactions.

The Bill was then read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

HIGHWAYS.

THURSDAY, April 2.—Sir J. GRAHAM rose to move for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the laws respecting highways in England. The House was aware that the sum levied for the maintenance and repair of highways in England annually amounted to 1,600,000*l.* In the Act brought in by the Speaker, a permissive power was given to parishes to unite for the purpose of conjointly maintaining highway and other paid officers. This power being permissive and not compulsory, had not been brought into general use; and the principal object of the measure which he sought to introduce was to substitute a compulsory for a permissive power. To make the new enactment perspicuous and perfect, he had thought it better to repeal all existing laws with respect to highways, and to introduce a Bill re-enacting and consolidating the whole. The first important provision was, that districts should be formed throughout England and Wales, generally speaking, co-terminous with the registration districts. He proposed to give to the enclosure commissioners, a body constituted by recent Act of Parliament, the power of forming and regulating the districts. That would reduce the number from 1,400 or 1,500 to 550. The Bill would then provide that, for each district, a surveyor should be appointed, to be a paid officer, with assistant surveyors. The power of appointing surveyors should rest with the local board in each district, the salary being fixed by them, and the choice of the officer subject to the veto of the commissioners; the power of dismissing officers should be with the enclosure commissioners, and concurrently with this power of dismissal should be the power of dismissal on the part of the board. With respect to the election of the board, he proposed that it should be elected for two years by all rate-payers in each parish and township maintaining its own roads. Each parish or township was to be represented at the district board by one or more way-wardens as the enclosure commissioners should determine. No hamlet, having less than four miles of road, had the right of choosing way-wardens. He proposed that there should be two paid officers in each district; one the surveyor, the other the clerk of the board. He proposed that there should be a general annual meeting, in which the accounts for the whole year should be made up, and the estimates of repairs for the ensuing year should be brought under their consideration by the paid surveyor of the district. He proposed that the accounts of the district should be annually audited, and he would suggest, inasmuch as it accorded with the plans of his right hon. friend, that the poor-law auditors should audit annually the highway accounts. These accounts, so audited, should be transmitted annually to the enclosure commissioners, and they should report annually to the Secretary of State, and each report, together with the abstract of accounts, should be laid annually before the two Houses of Parliament. He gave also the power, by the unanimous consent of the way-wardens forming the district board, to convert the charge of the highway district into a union charge instead of a parochial or township charge, with the consent of the parochial commissioners. He proposed that three rates should be made in the district, one district rate for the joint expenses, salary of the surveyor, salary of the clerk, and the general expenses of the board, the proportion for the district to be submitted to the enclosure commissioners in London, and receive their sanction. If the district should come to the resolution to make the charge a union charge, then only one rate would be necessary; but if they should not be so disposed, then there must be two rates levied, one district rate for the district charges; and, as at present, a parochial or township rate for the maintenance of the roads. He proposed to retain the present maximum rate of ten pence a rate; and that there should be no more than three rates in the course of the year, thus making the maximum highway rate per year 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound. He proposed also that the rate should be collected by the collector of the poor rate; and with respect to the remedy in case of non-payment, and also in appeals, that it should be identical with that which at present regulated the collection of the poor rate. He proposed further that power should be given to borrow money for effecting improvement of the highways with the consent of the enclosure commissioners, providing that the principal and interest should be paid within 20 years. And with the view of enabling the commissioners to form a judgment before any outlay of such borrowed money was made, he would give them the power to send down an inspector to make a survey and report upon the condition of the highways, and the expediency of effecting the projected improvements. He reserved all the existing liabilities to repair, and also retained all the principal provisions which were so recently sanctioned by Parliament. With reference to South Wales, he should state that there were particular provisions in the Acts regulating the turnpikes in that part of the principality which would appear to interfere with the extension of this bill to the highways there; therefore, he should suggest that South Wales should be exempted from the operation of this amended Highway Act. The right hon. baronet concluded by moving for leave to bring in his bill.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

The usual summary of cases in the last term is completed below.

A reference to our report of such portion of the parliamentary debates as affects or interests our readers, will afford an outline of the Bill brought in by Sir JAMES GRAHAM, and read a first time on Thursday, to repeal all existing laws with respect to highways, and to reconstruct and consolidate the whole. We reserve comment on this important measure until the Bill shall have been printed, and a full opportunity thus afforded of canvassing the merits of its proposed enactments.

THE NEW POOR REMOVAL BILL.

ANOTHER, and still another, we involuntarily exclaimed, when we took up this; and, as we suppose, —since three weeks only have passed—the latest attempt at patching that system of settlements and removals which, stamped as it is in every part with proofs of legislative carelessness and incompetency, is yet, by dint of much litigation, tolerably well understood. As we hastily glanced over the sections, we naturally felt somewhat pleased that the very absurd dictator-barrister scheme (see 6 Law T. 43, 67) had been nipped in the bud. But our next question was,—Is there any necessity for the present Bill? As it is more than probable that a few years will see the abolition of all removals, would it not be far better to add a few clauses which embody positive amendments, such as section 22, abolishing the right to go to the sessions for costs, than do away with an existing system, and substitute, as the present Bill proposes to do, a system just sufficiently resembling it, to render the old decisions analogous, and yet sufficiently different to open the flood-gates of doubt and difficulty, and give new vigour to parochial litigation? For instance, 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 79, as to sending a copy of examination, will no longer be in operation; but ss. 14 and 16 require a copy “of the grounds upon which the warrant was made.” Why this difference?

This is our general view as to the expediency of the alterations in the practice. The enactments as to non-removability stand upon a different footing altogether. We shall discuss them hereafter; but we first propose to consider the alterations in practice.

The Bill opens with repealing “so much of the following Acts, and of all Acts to amend or continue the same, as relates to the removal of poor persons settled in England." It then specifies the titles of 17 statutes, beginning with 13 & 14 Car. 2, and ending with 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 79; but in the margin are given the sections supposed to be repealed, which may be considered the framer's commentary upon the words "so much as relates to," &c. At the very threshold of this Bill we may say that there is great obscurity. It is easy to say "so much as relates to," but not so easy to sift relevant from irrelevant words. That this is no imaginary difficulty will at once be seen, when we observe that we differ entirely from the view taken by a writer in the columns of a learned cotemporary, The Justice of the Peace. (See Nos. for March 21 and 28.) He there assumes that the Act repeals the whole of every section specified in the margin, just as if each had been numerically mentioned in the body; and hence argues "that settlement by apprenticeship; by rental of a tenement, under the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, s. 1; and 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 11; by payment of rates; and by acknowledgment by certificate," will thereby be abolished; and that the settlement by estate will be restored to what it was prior to 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, s. 5; "so that a person may gain a settlement by any estate purchased under, at, or over 30l." Now, if this were the effect of the statute, it would be a paltry subterfuge, almost amounting to a fraud, to foist off a Bill for abolishing certain settlements and suspending others, as a Bill to amend the law of removal of persons settled. But we do not thus charge Sir James Graham, for we know of no principle or authority upon which those marginal notes can have the effect given to them by our learned cotemporary. We shall not go through each statute to ascertain whether there is or is not any thing "relating to the removal of poor persons," but merely observe that, besides the absence of authority, or principle upon which the marginal notes could be called part of the statute, the addition of the words "settled in England," clearly shews that the effect as well as the aim of the statute is to leave all existing settlements untouched, and to add no new ones, although the operation of the existing ones may be suspended, or destroyed by the non-removability clauses. Then to take one or two instances only, it is clear the repealing clause can operate without repealing the sections specified in the margin, and probably it is so in every case. Thus 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3—10 inclusive are in the margin, and hence it is said settlement by payment of rates is abolished, because it owes its origin to the 6th section. But is that section repealed by the words "relating to the removal of poor persons?" They can operate, if not upon the section continuing the 13 & 14 Car. 2, certainly upon s. 9, which gives an appeal in the cases of the settlements created by that Act, and for which the 25th section is substituted in the new Bill. So, again, sec. 7 is mentioned in the margin, although the settlement by hiring and service thereby created was destroyed by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 64, which expressly enacted "that no settlement should thereafter be gained by hiring and service, or by residence under the service, or by serving an office." We are ready to admit that the far more simple method would be to specify in the body of the Act what sections or parts of sections are to be repealed, and that also that the difficulty of clearly harmonising these half mutilated Acts with the present, and, above all, with the Poor-Law Amendment, which is incorporated with this by sec. 37, will be great. Still, we cannot see that this Bill either intends, or, what is much more to the purpose, that it effects the destruction of any existing settlement. That a different view has been already taken, renders it quite certain that, if the Bill passes as it stands, there will be many litigated questions upon this single section alone. This, therefore, must be remedied by a declaratory clause that nothing herein contained shall alter or destroy any of the existing settlements, or any of the modes of acquiring a settlement. Having thus explained what we believe is the effect of the first section, we shall hereafter proceed to set forth both the alterations that are made in the practice of removals, and the defects which may be apparent in the different clauses.

We omitted last week the case of Reg. v. Great Western Railway, being desirous of giving it a separate notice, commensurate with the importance of the questions there litigated and decided. We have been prevented from doing this at the length we intended, but rather than delay, for a further period, we shall now give a brief view of the points involved in it, referring our readers to the elaborate report of it (supra, p. 316), for the full statement of the facts, and the mode in which the sessions arrived at the several amounts.

The Great Western Railway Company being the sole occupiers and owners of a trunk line, and the sole occupiers and lessees of two branch lines, carried on a large trade upon all three lines. The branch lines were worked at a loss, because thereby the main line was benefited. The different stations and buildings on all were rated separately.

The main line passed through the parish of Tilehurst, and was rated in that parish in an amount ascertained by taking the gross receipts of each mile in that parish, and deducting therefrom various expenses, including maintenance of way, rates and taxes, other than the property tax, and the annual depreciation of the plant or moveable stock, together with interest on the plant and tenant's profits. Against that rate the Company appealed, and upon that appeal they claimed the following, in addition to the above deductions. 1st. The depression and wear and tear of rails, sleepers, &c. (not including the above item for maintenance of way). 2nd. The buildings, stations, &c. rated or rateable, separately from the railway. 3rd. A per centage on the outlay in forming the Company, obtaining the Act, and other original expenses. 4th. Income tax. 5th. Additional parochial assessments, not actually paid, but which would be payable in consequence of the recent decisions of this Court on the rating of railways. 6th. The annual total loss on the two branch lines. It was held, on a case reserved, that the 1st and 4th deductions were proper, the 3rd, 5th, and 6th were improper, and that the second deduction, though correct in principle, could not be made in this case because no annual fund had in fact been appropriated for the purpose. From the time that this case has remained under the consideration of the Court, even after the deliberation which preceded their judgments in the South Western Railway (1 Q. B.) and the Grand Junction Railway (4 Q. B.), the principles of these cases may be regarded as finally established. The main point in all is, that while the profits first of trade, gain, or profits are not rateable, yet that to ascertain the value of the occupation, the only proper subject of the rate, all must be included that forms part of it at the time, whether permanently or not; and, further, that in fixing the sum which it would, after due deduction, be supposed a tenant would give, all concomitant circumstances are to be considered, or, to use the words in the Grand Junction case, not merely what a lease would give the tenant a legal title to, but all that which it would give him the means of doing or enjoying. It followed from this, that land upon which a railway is, must be rated according to its actual value in the rating parish, although such value arises in a great measure from station-houses and other works not within the parish.

In considering the deductions to be made in any case, the question is, whether they arise upon the ordinary occupation, exclusively of trade; or, if referable to trade, whether they are referable to trade only, and do not enhance the value of the occupation. In either of these cases the deductions are to be made. The amount is to be settled by the sessions. Going back, then, to the proposed deductions in this case, it will be seen that two were contested, which previously had been conceded. 1. The depreciation and wear and tear of rails and sleepers (being the solid timber and iron work of the lines) over and above the annual repairs, or maintenance of way, which are directly distinguishable from each other.

The deduction itself was objected to; first, because there was no actual outlay; and next, because there was not even any fund created as a reserve for the purpose, which might be equivalent to an outlay. The Court decided that the deduction was right in principle, as being quite as certain an increase of expenditure as actual repairs; but that the second ground of objection was fatal, and that, in order to establish such a claim, the company must set apart an actual sum for the purpose.

The same analogy which decided its correctness in principle decided its incorrectness in this instance. For if repairs, however much needed, be not made, no deduction in respect thereof can be allowed.

The other contested deduction was in respect of the rateable value of the buildings appurtenant to the main and branch lines, and separately rated in their respective parishes. This point was not discussed in the Grand Junction case, but the Court now decided that the appellants were entitled to the deduction, and as the respondents properly treated the whole line, and the whole profits, and the whole outgoings as entire, it was indifferent whether the stations so rated were in the same parish or elsewhere. The income-tax was also allowed as a deduction, because it would affect the amount of rent a tenant would be willing to pay.

The other deductions claimed were not supportable upon any principle hitherto recognised, although something could be urged in favour of the sixth. The third was in respect of interest upon the expenses incurred in obtaining the line. This is absent, as much connected with the existing rateable value as the expense of litigating the title to land bought fifty or a hundred years ago. The fifth claim was in respect of such parochial assessments as should become payable in consequence of recent decisions. This was very summarily disposed of in the judgment, and we apprehend the principle that rating always proceeds upon the facts as they are found, is decisive upon it, for no information whatever was given as to when or how these payments were to be made, or even what they were.

The sixth claim was, in respect of the loss upon the branch lines. This was disposed of also upon an old principle, viz. that the terms "beneficial" and "profitable" are not convertible terms.

The Court further declared that in ascertaining the deduction for tenant's profits, the per centage should be calculated, not upon the original value of the plant and stock, but upon the existing value, however depreciated. But they declined to answer a question put by the sessions as to the mode of ascertaining the tenant's profits, whether as claimed by the respondents, the original value of the plant should be taken, and ten per cent. thereon taken, or as the appellants said, a per centage (fifteen per cent. in this case) upon the gross receipts. This they considered was solely a question for the sessions, and not a question of law. E. W.

THE PRACTICE OF SUMMARY CONVICTIONS.

By T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

PART III.—CHAPTER II.

The formal conviction and order—continued.

BEARING in mind the distinctions pointed out in the last chapter as existing between convictions and orders, it will be convenient to consider these documents in future as identical, and without, therefore, distinguishing the rules hereafter to be laid down as applicable peculiarly to the one species of instrument or the other, to assume that they apply equally to each, subject to the exceptions which have before been mentioned.

The general form of conviction.—In modern Acts of Parliament, which confer on magistrates a power to hear and determine summarily, a form of conviction is usually inserted for their guidance. To provide, however, a safe and convenient precedent for adoption in cases in which no particular form is given, the Legislature has supplied a form, which may be filled up and used as circumstances may warrant. The statute referred to is the 3^d Geo. 4, c. 23, entitled "An Act to facilitate summary proceedings before justices of the peace and others," and commences as follows:—

"Whereas great inconveniences often arise in summary proceedings before justices of the peace, deputy-lieutenants, and others, from the want of a general form of conviction: Be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this Act, in all cases where a conviction shall have taken place, and in any particular form for the record thereof hath been directed, the justice or justices, deputy-lieutenant or deputy-lieutenants, or other person or persons duly authorized to proceed summarily therein, and before whom the offender or offenders shall have been convicted, shall and may cause the record of such conviction to be drawn up in the manner and form following, or in any words to the same effect, suitable thereto (that is to say):—"

"County (or as the case may be) of } Be it remembered, That on the } day of } in the year } of our Lord } at } in the county of } A B, of } the county of } labourer (or as the case may be), personally came before me (or, before us, &c.) C D, one (or more as the case may be) of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said , and informed me (or, us, &c.) that E F, of , in the county of , on the day of , at , in the said , did (here set forth the fact for which the information is laid), contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided; whereupon the said E F, after being duly summoned to answer the said charge, appeared before me (or, us, &c.) on the day of , at , in the said , and having heard the charge contained in the said information, declared he was not guilty of the said offence; (or as the case may happen to be) did not appear before me (or, us, &c.) pursuant to the said summons, (or, did neglect and refuse to make any defence against the said charge); whereupon I (or, we, &c. or, nevertheless I, or, we, &c.) the said justice (or, justices) did proceed to examine into the truth of the charge contained in the said information; and on the day of aforesaid, at the parish of aforesaid, one credible witness, to wit, A W, of , in the county of , upon his oath deposeth and saith (if E F be present, say, in the presence of the said E F) that within months (or as the case may be) next before the said information was made before me (or, us, &c.) the said justice by the said A B, to wit, on the day of , in the year , the said E F, at , in the said county of , (here state the evidence, and as nearly as possible in the words used by the witness; and if more than one witness be examined, state the evidence given by each); (or, if the defendant confess, instead of stating the evidence, say) and the said E F acknowledged and voluntarily confessed the same to be true; therefore, it manifestly appearing to me (or, us, &c.) that he the said E F is guilty of the offence charged upon him in the said information, I (or, we, &c.) do hereby convict him of the offence aforesaid, and do declare and adjudge that he the said E F hath forfeited the sum of of lawful money of Great Britain for the offence aforesaid, to be distributed (or, paid, or as the case may be) according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided. Given under my hand (or, our hands, &c.) and seal, the day of , in the year of our Lord "

The second section enacts—

"That in all cases where two or more justices, deputy-lieutenants, or others, are authorized and required to hear and determine any complaint, one justice, deputy-lieutenant, or such other person, shall be competent to receive the original information or complaint, and to issue the summons or warrant requiring the parties to appear before two or more justices of the peace, deputy-lieutenants, or others, as the case may require; and after examination upon oath into the merits of the said complaint, and the adjudication thereupon by any such two justices, deputy-lieutenants, or other persons being made, all and every the subsequent proceedings to enforce obedience thereto or otherwise, whether respecting the penalty, fine, imprisonment, costs, or other matter or thing now enacted or to be hereafter enacted, may be enforced by either of the said justices, deputy-lieutenants, or other persons, or any other justices of the peace or deputy-lieutenant for the same county, riding, or place, in such and the like manner as if done by the same two justices, deputy-lieutenants, or other persons who so heard and adjudged the said complaint; and where the original complaint or information shall be made to any justice or justices of the peace, deputy-lieutenant or deputy-lieutenants, or other person or persons, different from him or them before whom the same shall be heard and determined, the form of conviction shall be made conformable and according to the fact."

The third section enacts—

"That in all cases where it appears by the conviction that the defendant has appeared and pleaded, and the merits have been tried, and that the defendant has not appealed against the said conviction, where an appeal is allowed, or if appealed against the conviction has been affirmed, such conviction shall not afterwards be set aside or vacated in consequence of any defect of form whatever, but the construction shall be such a fair and liberal construction as will be agreeable to the justice of the case."

When the statute empowering the justices to convict says that "the conviction shall be in the form following," or uses other words, shewing that the form prescribed is not to be departed from, such form only can be used, unless, indeed, the words "to the like effect" be added. (R. v. Jeffries, 4 T. R. 769; R. v. Priest, 6 T. R. 538.) In which case also care must be taken that the conviction is precisely according to the intent and meaning of the Act. (Griffiths v. Harries, 2 M. & W. 335.) (s) Where, in any given case, the form of conviction prescribed by the statute cannot literally be followed so as to show the real facts and circumstances, it should be departed from so as to be made to apply with greater perspicuity. (R. v. Hasell, 13 East, 139; R. v. Ridgway, 5 B. & Ald. 527.)

The several parts of a conviction.—Venue.—Information.—The statement of the venue in the margin indicates only the place at which the conviction was made, and not where the offence was committed, so that it in no way supplies the want of the allegation of place in the body of the conviction. (R. v. Austin, 8 Mod. 309.)

The conviction then recites the information or charge, and this usually in the past tense; and where the information has previously been taken in writing, it should be followed as nearly as possible, otherwise it may be stated shortly, according to the facts. The legal requisites of an information have before been fully described, and it will, therefore, be unnecessary here to repeat them.

The summons; appearance or non-appearance of defendant.—The conviction should set out that the defendant was summoned to answer the charge, except in those few cases in which justices have jurisdiction to convict on view of the offence, (which, when they arise, must be specially referred to); but when the defendant appears, by the conviction, to have been present during the proceedings, and to have heard all the witnesses, and not to have asked for time for his defence, the statement of the summons may be dispensed with. R. v. Stone (1 East, 649.) It is sufficient, under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, s. 1, as before observed, to state generally that the defendant was duly summoned; and this form of statement is now sufficient in all cases except where a different mode of statement is not prescribed. R. v. Stone (1 East, 639); R. v. Hall (6 Dow. & Ry. 84); Mason v. Barker (1 Car. & Ker. 107, n.) The statement of the summons is not, however, conclusive upon the defendant, and he may, in an action against the convicting justice, shew that he never was, in fact, summoned to answer the charge. Mason v. Barker, supra.

The statement of the appearance or non-appearance is prescribed by the form of conviction given in the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, s. 1. Unless where it is rendered necessary by the terms of the Act, the defendant need not appear in person, but may appear by counsel or attorney, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 114, s. 2. Where, however, he thus appears, the fact should be so stated. Where the information is taken by one justice, and the conviction takes place before another, or others, as it may do under the provisions of the second section of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, care should be taken that the statement in the conviction is in accordance with the facts.

Confession of defendant.—If the defendant appear and confess the charge, the conviction should be made conformable to the fact, and then, instead of stating the evidence, which in such case is unnecessary, it should proceed at once to the statement of the conviction itself, and the adjudication. This, however, is to be understood only as applicable to cases where the entire charge is admitted; for if the confession merely goes to a particular fact, which is but a single ingredient out of several of which the offence is made up, the conviction, after stating the confession in the terms of the defendant, should proceed to state the evidence as to the other facts constituting the offence. (R. v. Gage, 1 Stra. 546; R. v. Hall, 1 T. B. 320; R. v. Little, 1 Burr. 613.) The statement of a confession is provided for by the form given in the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23. The confession cures any defect in the manner of the taking of the evidence. (R. v. Hall, supra.)

The statement of the evidence.—As a general rule, the whole of the evidence adduced in support of the charge should be stated in a clear and perspicuous manner, and as nearly in the words of the witnesses as possible. In Rex v. Warnford (5 D. & Ry. 489), which was an application for a mandamus to justices to amend a record of a conviction on the Game Laws, by setting out the evidence on which it was founded as nearly as possible in the words used by each witness, it being suggested that, as the record stood, it made the witnesses swear in the technical language of the statute, and not in the words actually used by them, Abbott, C. J., said,

"All that is required of them is, to set out the evidence as nearly as possible in the words used by the witnesses; that is, the substance and effect, but not every word. Here it is suggested that the witnesses are made to speak in the language of an Act of Parliament. No illiterate witness, nor, indeed, any witness, would say that the defendant 'did use a certain engine called a gun, and a certain dog called a pointer, to kill and destroy the game.' The conviction must set out the language used by the witness, in order that it may be seen whether a right conclusion is drawn from it." The rule was made absolute. So, too, it is the duty of the justices to set out all the material evidence adduced on the behalf of the defendant; and in the case of Rex v. Ris (4 D. & Ry. 332), which was a similar application to that in R. v. Warnford, Abbott, C. J., observed, "I am clearly of opinion that the direction in the statute (3 Geo. 4, c. 23) embraces the evidence both in support of the information and for the defendant. The justices are not bound to set out all the irrelevant matter which may happen to be given in evidence before them; they are to state the evidence, as nearly as possible in the words used by the witnesses, but this must be understood to mean such evidence as is relevant to the charge contained in the information. The justices must use their discretion in this matter, but it is quite clear that it is their duty to attend to the general directions contained in the statute. * * * There was a similar application to this made last Easter Term, in the case of a game conviction, and we were of opinion on that occasion that it was the duty of the magistrates to set out the evidence on both sides, where it was relevant to the matter in issue."

Must be on oath in the defendant's presence.—The name of each witness should be mentioned, and it should be stated that he was examined upon oath; nor is this allegation dispensed with by the insertion of the words "having duly examined into the allegations and the proofs." Re Jones (1 New Sess. Ca. 3); Re Tordoff (1 Ib. 171, 1 New Mag. Ca. 17 s.c.); Reg. v. Wroth (1 New Sess. Ca. 494); and this whether the statute expressly requires such statement to be made or not. Reg. v. Lewis (13 L. J. M. C. 46); Re Gray (1 New Sess. Ca. 354, 1 New Mag. Ca. 116 s.c.); in which latter case Mr. Justice Patteson said, "Then what am I to understand by the words 'duly examined' into the allegations and proofs? Does that mean that the witnesses were examined on oath? Certainly that is not proved by the term 'allegations,' and I do not think that I can assume that 'proof' must mean legal proof given upon oath. The conviction, therefore, is bad, because it does not appear on the face of it that the witnesses were examined on oath." According to Reg. v. The Justices of Buckinghamshire, (14 L. J. M. C. 45, 1 New Mag. Ca. 192), where the witness makes an affirmation, the statement in the conviction should be conformable with the fact.

The evidence should be stated to have been given in the defendant's presence, to the end that he may be shewn to have had an opportunity of cross-examining, (unless the conviction shew that the defendant did not appear). (Reg. v. Tordoff, 5 Q. B. 933, 1 New Sess. Ca. 171; 1 New Mag. Ca. 17 S.C.; Rex v. Vipont, 2 Barr. 1163; R. v. Crowther, 1 T. R. 125.)

Evidence should be set forth at length.—It is a general rule that in a conviction the evidence should be set out, that the Court may judge whether the justices have done right, Rex v. Killett (4 Burr. 2062), and this though the defendant may have neglected or refused to have attended, R. v. Read (Doug. 469); and the form given in the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, requires this to be done in cases within that Act. Some modern Acts of Parliament which prescribe a form of conviction, as the Game Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32, s. 39, omit all statement as to evidence: in such cases it is of course sufficient to follow the form given. But, although it is the duty of the justices to set out the whole of the evidence which is relevant, both on the part of the complainant and the defendant, their decision will not be questioned if there be any evidence, however small, to justify their decision. Upon this point, Lord Kenyon observed, in Rex v. Davis (6 T. R. 177), "With regard to the other objection (viz. that the evidence was not sufficient to support the conviction), here was evidence tending to prove the offence. That being the case, we have no authority to examine further and see whether the conclusion drawn by the magistrate be or be not the inevitable

(s) Although, as a general proposition, it is sufficient to follow the form of conviction given to the statute, yet there are cases in which it is not; as, where the facts do not shew some of the ingredients necessary to make up the offence. (Fletcher v. Callthorpe, 1 New Sess. Ca. 542, where all the cases are collected.) And in a later case, Reg. v. Johnson (2 New Sess. Ca. 174), Lord Denman observed, "It might be supposed, that when a statute gives a form of conviction, that form, when adopted, must necessarily be good; but the Court has found itself bound to impose some restrictions on that general proposition; for if an Act contains a description of an offence, and of the circumstances which are required to constitute it, and if the form given in the statute does not contain all the particulars which, by the provisions of the statute, go to make out the offence, it becomes impossible for the Court to say that the offence has been committed."

conclusion from the evidence. It is sufficient in convictions if there were such evidence before the magistrate as in an action would be sufficient to be left to a jury: here we cannot say that there was no evidence of the fact for the consideration of the magistrate." (R. v. Smith, 8 T. R. 588; Res. v. Reason, 6 T. R. 277; Reg. v. Bolton, 1 Q. B. 66; R. v. Glossop, 4 B. & Ald. 616.)

The information and the conviction being in their natures distinct, no statement in the former can be referred to for the purpose of supplying a deficiency in the latter. Notwithstanding, therefore, the information may have been taken upon oath, and contain a perfect description of the offence, yet if any particular necessary to make up the charge be wanting in the conviction, this instrument will be bad, and will not in any way be assisted by a reference to the information. (R. v. Stone, 1 East, 639; R. v. Crisp, 7 East, 389.) It will be unnecessary to instance the various particulars in which the evidence may be insufficient, as these will altogether depend upon the requirements of the Act of Parliament upon which the proceedings are founded. It may, however, be here observed that every ingredient which the statute points to as essential to the offence must be developed clearly by the evidence, and be made apparent upon the face of the conviction. The rules applicable to informations, which have before been considered, may equally be applied to convictions.

A warrant of commitment under an Act such as the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, which by section 3 treats the conviction and commitment as one matter, must be construed as a conviction, whether it recites a conviction or not. (Re Gray, 1 New Sess. Ca. 354; 1 New Mag. Ca. 116, s. c.; Reg. v. King, 13 L. J., M. C. 43.) In the former of these cases Mr. Justice Patteson, in answer to the argument that the commitment must be construed as an order, merely said, "I cannot be told that because the Act of Parliament has been drawn imperfectly, that is, in general terms, this must be considered an order and not a conviction; for if magistrates are to have power under an Act of Parliament over an offence, then any instrument by which they convict parties under such Act is a conviction." So, in conformity with this position, it was held, in Reg. v. Tordoff, 5 Q. B. 933; 1 New Sess. Ca. 171; 1 New Mag. Ca. 17, S. C. that a warrant of commitment under that Act should show that the witnesses were examined upon oath in the presence of the defendant. (In re Copestick, 1 New Sess. Ca. 181.) It would seem from this that it is necessary to the validity of such an instrument that it set out the evidence, as in the case of a formal conviction, in order that the Court may see (as no other conviction in fact exists) that the defendant has been convicted upon legal and sufficient evidence; indeed, in the case of Gray (supra), Mr. Justice Patteson expressed a strong opinion that this was necessary, though a decision upon the point was not necessary for the determination of that case.

Of stating the evidence of the defendant.—It is the duty of the justices, as before has been seen, not only to state the evidence in support of the complaint, but that also, if material, produced by the defendant, particularly since if it appear from his evidence that the act was committed in the bona fide assertion of a claim of right, the jurisdiction of the magistrate ceases. (See ante, p. 40.) Res. v. Love, 17 T. R. 153, n.; R. v. Rix, 4 Dow. & Ry. 332. So, also, if the defendant could show a former conviction for the same offence.

Of stating an adjournment.—If an adjournment have taken place at the instance of either party, that fact also should be stated upon the conviction, in order that it may appear not only that the conviction is a faithful record of all that has actually taken place, but that it may be seen that the conviction has taken place within the time limited.

(From the Athenæum.)

In discussing the subject of juvenile reformatories, reference has been repeatedly made lately to the French Institution of this description at Mettray, near Tours. It may gratify our readers, therefore, if we communicate to them a few particulars regarding this, which we have obtained from an intelligent and benevolent friend recently returned from the continent, and who devoted two days to its inspection.

The Colonie Agricole et Pénitentiaire de Mettray, was founded in 1826, chiefly by private subscription; one individual, the late Count Léon d'Ourches, having bestowed on it no less a sum than 140,000 francs in his own lifetime. The King, the Royal Family, and the principal public boards and officers also contributed. Its object is to receive youth who have committed offence, but been discharged from the central prisons under a benevolent law, which in France places criminals below a certain age, not under punishment, but under what is called discipline correctionnelle. It is, thus, only one of many similar institutions; but it has become remarkable by certain peculiarities of construction and discipline, and by extraordinary success in attaining its object. It is calculated to receive 400 boys; who are not housed in one great building, but are distributed into ten small ones,—the inmates of these being further divided into four parties of ten each, who are trained together, and taught by every means possible to consider themselves members of a family and interested in the conduct of their companions equally with their own. It is to the "social," or it may be also called the "domestic," principle thus involved that M. Demetz, the benevolent director of the establishment, who, we believe, also originally suggested its plan, attributes his great success; but its other arrangements seem equally judicious.

The object aimed at being to give especially a rural education, a considerable extent of land is annexed to the establishment, which is entirely cultivated by the "colonists," as they are termed; and while they are thus taught husbandry practically, their minds are opened to its theories by lectures on all its principal departments. Workshops are also maintained, in which all the principal rural trades—common shoemaking and tailoring included—are taught and exemplified. Reading, writing, and arithmetic, and linear drawing are superadded; and the whole is crowned by very careful religious instruction.

The forms of discipline are, as much as possible, persuasive, not coercive. There are no walls,—no stripes; but a list of honour is kept, into which continued absence of offence for three months gives a title to admission; and cells are attached to the chapel, and thus specially within the persuasive influence of the priest, for the refractory. The whole influence of the families is further enlisted in the cause of order and punctuality. These vie with each other in having the names of their partners exhibited in the approving list; and offences is found to be more checked by being thus rendered unpopular in the community than by any form of restraint proceeding from superiors.

These are the general principles of the Institution at Mettray; but let us now mark their results. According to its last Report, now before us, 521 boys have been admitted into it since its foundation,—of whom 105 were received in the course of last year: 12, having been found incorrigible, have been returned to the central prison from which they were transferred; 17 have died,—of whom 6, strictly speaking, never joined, having been originally received into the Infirmary and never left it; 144 have been discharged to places—7 of these have been re-convicted; 9 are but indifferently conducted; but 128 are without reproach, and promising to do well.

In the interior of the establishment, the success, and, by consequence, the excellence of the management are not less manifest. During the last year, three-fifths of the inmates maintained their name on the list of honour; and the religious feelings of all appear powerfully developed. According to the rites of the Catholic Church, a greater degree of solemnity is given to the religious exercises, even of the very young, at different seasons of the year; and a considerable diminution of petty offences is always found to precede these occasions and characterise the preparation for them.

The object being to rear labourers, not scholars, only one hour per day is given to instruction purely intellectual,—but, possibly through this very circumstance, the progress made is very rapid. Of the entire number who have been received, 137 were previously able to read, and 84 to write; but in a very short time after entering, all are made to read, write, and cipher easily and readily; and in mental arithmetic especially their proficiency is even remarkable. Very many draw well; and all study music as a recreation. In church music they are especial proficient. An air of intelligence and good purpose pervades the whole establishment; with a remarkable look of trust and affection towards their benevolent chiefs, M. Demetz and Viscount Breteignières de Courtaillies,—the latter of whom originally bestowed the ground on which the establishment stands, and, residing in its near neighbourhood, shares the labours of M. Demetz as resident director.

The revenues of the institution proceed partly from private subscription, partly from an allowance made to it by Government of what each boy would cost per day were he detained in prison; and, exclusive of the cost of new buildings and other permanent improvements, the expense, we are assured, does not very much exceed this latter sum, and is likely to fall below it when the land attached to the institution is brought into full cultivation.

There is a striking resemblance between some of the principles which M. Demetz has here so happily exemplified and those contended for by Captain Maconochie in his various writings on secondary punishment; and the combined testimony of two men who have been each so favourably placed for observation, and who could neither have borrowed from the other, is otherwise valuable than from its mere intrinsic weight. We are obviously on the eve of a great change in the whole tendencies of our criminal treatment. Everything seems to point to this, even the errors made in regard to it; and we may observe, in reference to that branch of the subject in which Captain Maconochie is a labourer, that the prejudices against the prisoner's return to society will be half removed, and the efforts of those who are seeking to promote it greatly assisted, when the prison shall, under a system of judicious discipline, have become a place in which men are supposed to be made better, instead of worse.

STATISTICAL SOCIETY, Dec. 22.

Lord MONTAGLE, President, in the Chair.

The Rev. Whitworth Russell, Inspector of prisons, at this meeting, brought to a conclusion the subject which interested the society at its first sitting for the session in November—"the statistics of crime in England and Wales from 1839 to 1843." The philosophy of crime—that science which investigates the causes, traces the extent, and inquires into the proper remedy of crime—states Mr. Whitworth Russell—may be said to be almost in its infancy. But already has it attracted a widely-extended attention, by the beneficence of its aim, by the rapidity of its advance, by the acknowledged success which has attended its exertions, and by the certainty of its ultimate triumph. By the term "crime" is meant a violation of the law of the land, and not a violation of the Divine law; such transactions as Mr. Locke, in his "Human Understanding," observes are sins; in the same way that a violation of the philosophical law, or the law of opinion, would be a vice. Hence it is plain, that in attempting to exhibit the amount of crime in any country, its moral character and condition is not estimated, because the sins and vices of the people are not taken into account. This is mentioned by Mr. Whitworth Russell to guard against a misconception of the design of his paper, which is to approximate as closely as possible to an estimate of the amount of ascertained crime in England and Wales during each of the five years which the inquiry embraces. Doubtless a vast amount of crime will at all times elude human detection; but this is no impeachment of the law or police of the country, which aims not at impossibilities. Mr. Russell demonstrated by tables the amount of committals for crime at a given time; the variations in the numbers in the same place at different times, or in different places at the same time; the prisoners classified according to age, according to sex, according to the nature of the charge or sentence, according to the number of recommitments; the numbers committed, convicted, or acquitted, together with the ground of acquittal in special cases; the proportion which the total numbers of criminals bears to the several classes of criminals and to the population; and finally, the amount and degree of education, or the total absence of education, intellectual, moral, or religious. The tables laid before the meeting were the result of vast research, and eleven in number, and particularized as follows:—

1. Prisoners tried at assizes and sessions during each year of the series.
2. Prisoners under summary convictions during each year of the series—a very numerous class, exceeding 70,000 per annum, of whom no information is to be obtained, except in the criminal tables published by the home inspectors of prisons.
3. The result of the proceedings respecting the prisoners tried at assizes and session—i. e. the prisoners convicted, acquitted, &c.
4. The prisoners recommitted.
5. Terms of imprisonment before trial.
6. Terms of imprisonment after trial.
7. Terms of imprisonment under summary convictions.
8. Prisoners sentenced to transportation and terms of transportation.
9. Game law convictions.
10. Vagrant Act convictions.
11. State of instruction of prisoners.
- 12 and 13. Comparative view of the increase or decrease of crime in certain counties where there is a constabulary force and where there is none.
14. Comparative view of the statistics of crime in France and Belgium with those of England and Wales.
15. View of the increase and decrease of the two classes of crime, assizes and sessions, and summary convictions in the several years between 1839—43.
16. Tables showing the increase or decrease per cent. compared with the population, among military prisoners, repeated thieves, and a miscellaneous class, in assizes, in the want of surties, and under the following laws:—Malicious Trespass Act, Larceny Act, Police Act, Revenue Laws, Bastardy Laws.

To ensure general accuracy, Mr. Russell has constructed a table of population calculated on the basis of the census of 1841, taken according to the ascertained rate of the annual increase of the female lives during the period 1831—1841. The value of such a table is at once apparent.

The results arrived at by Mr. Whitworth Russell, in his elaborate work, are, in his opinion, far from satisfactory. He finds that a considerable increase has taken place both of those for trial or tried at assizes or sessions, and of those committed under summary convictions.

The increase of assize and session prisoners is 13.5 per cent.
That of summary convictions 20.8 "

Total increase 34.1
He also finds that the year 1842 exhibits the greatest amount of increase, namely:—
In the assize and session prisoners ... 13.5 per cent.
In summary convictions 9.9 "

Total increase in that one year 23.4

Whereas in the following year there is a decrease of 5.7 per cent. on assize and sessions, and only an increase of 2.4 per cent. in summary convictions, which shows a total decrease of 3.3 per cent. on the year. The great increase of 1842 is attributed by Mr. Russell to the general distress which then prevailed, and that the decrease of crime in 1843 was to a great degree caused by returning prosperity. In 1842 assaults increased—males, 17.3 per cent.; females 6.4 per cent. In 1843 assaults increased in males 1.1, and in females decreased 3.4. Want of sureties in 1842 increased—males, 11.9; females, 5.2. In 1843 increased—males, 6.9; females, 26.5. Malicious Trespass Act in 1842 increased—in males 24.1; females, 29.1. In 1843 increased—males, 6.3; females, 6.2. The main increase in 1842, with a corresponding decrease in 1843, was in thefts, resulting, probably, from distress. In 1842 increased—males, 24.1; females, 29.1. In 1843 decreased—males, 73.3; females, 5.5 per cent. No estimate could be formed by Mr. Russell of the proportion which the acquitted bear to the convicted under summary jurisdiction. No return of any kind is made by magistrates either of the number or nature of the cases dismissed by them, either when administering justice at their own houses, or when acting in petty sessions. This, under many points of view, and for many reasons which might be assigned, is an important and extraordinary omission, and is deserving of serious attention. The vast disproportion in different counties both in the amount of crime and in the amount of convictions and acquittals demands careful consideration, and manifests serious defects in the existing systems. The long terms of imprisonment before trial is a serious evil, and should be diminished in every possible manner, whilst the extremely short terms of imprisonment under summary convictions (89.2 per cent being under three months) are any thing but calculated to repress crime and to deter the first offender from pursuing the fatal career upon which he has unhappily entered. Game-law convictions go on increasing in a most serious manner, and in a degree beyond all other classes of crime, and are neither checked by prosperity or distress; but, perhaps, the least satisfactory feature of the whole of the inquiry is the lamentable state of ignorance which prevails throughout all classes of offenders. Mr. Russell interested the meeting with highly valuable observations on the bearing of intellectual, moral, and religious influences upon the prevention and repression of crime, which, we regret from want of space, we are unable to notice. We may briefly state, however, that Mr. Russell found, after a most careful and laborious investigation among the prisoners, there were on the annual mean of the five years:—

Those who could neither read nor write, 9,530, or 34.9 per cent. assizes and sessions; 26,924, or 38.1 per cent. summary convictions.

Those who could read only, 6,329, or 22.5 per cent. assizes and sessions; 13,932, or 20.6 per cent. summary convictions.

Those who could read or write badly, 9,596, or 33.3 per cent assizes and sessions; 22,278, or 33.2 per cent summary convictions.

Those who could read and write well, 2,627, or 9 per cent. assizes and sessions; 2,667, or 4 per cent. summary conviction.

A very animated discussion followed the reading of the paper, and it was not until eleven o'clock that the meeting adjourned.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE legal events of the week have been very unimportant. We hear that, in consequence of the verdict in the case of Woodmer v. Tobby, many of the companies have resolved to enforce the payment of deposits by allottees, and that actions will be immediately commenced against those who refuse to contribute the small sum required of them as their share of the preliminary expenses. No doubt this will be generally adopted, and it will be the duty of the legal advisers of allottees to recommend their clients to pay, rather than incur the cost and anxiety of a struggle, where success is so doubtful; that is, provided they are satisfied that the demand is a fair one; that the expenses are not unreasonable; and the quota apportioned to each share its proper proportion of the expenses, and that it will be honestly applied. In such cases the first loss is always the least.

A great effort is being made by the shareholders to put a stop to many of the railway Bills now passing through Parliament, on the plea that they create liabilities which, in the present state of the market, cannot be met. The course is clear enough. Let the shareholders petition against their own Bill, which, it seems, they may do at any stage, and Parliament will accede to their prayer; and if they find any difficulty in settling, let the company be placed under the Joint Stock Companies' Bankrupt Act.

THE PRACTICE OF WILLS.

By G. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

BOOK I.

CHAP. III.—ON THE EXECUTION OF WILLS.

This branch of the subject is one not requiring many remarks, so far as the duty of the solicitor attending the execution of a will is concerned, as the course to be pursued is very clearly stated by the 1 Vict. c. 26. Several cases have, however, occurred where, through the ignorance or carelessness of testators, the precise form required has not been adopted; and, consequently, questions have arisen whether the execution of such wills was or was not valid; and it may be useful to mention some of these cases, for the guidance of the solicitor as to wills which may come before him, whether for probate, or to consider the propriety of having them re-executed.

By the 9th section of the 1 Vict. c. 26, it is enacted "That no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing, and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say) it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator or by some other person, in his presence, and by his direction; and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses, present at the same time, and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary." These directions are clear and precise, but a few remarks may be made upon the solicitors' duty under this section, as the chief object is to place the circumstances of the due execution of the will beyond the possibility of a doubt.

Attesting witnesses.—In the first place, it is desirable that the attesting witnesses should be persons of competent education fully to understand the nature of what they do; and also of such a station in society as to obviate any doubt which might arise as to the bona fides of the transaction. It is too often the practice to employ menial servants as attesting witnesses, and although, in the absence of other more competent persons, these may be properly employed, yet their attention to the more important particulars of the transaction, and their subsequent recollection of the circumstances, are not likely to be such as to render it desirable, in any cases where it can be avoided, to employ them. The solicitor himself, and his clerk, if they be not parties interested under the will, are in general cases the most proper persons to act as attesting witnesses.

Where any doubt may be raised as to the sanity of the testator, or as to his capacity to make a will, it would be prudent to have his medical attendant as an attesting witness.

As to the persons who are competent to be attesting witnesses, the 1 Vict. c. 26, contains the following provisions:—By the 14th section it is enacted "That if any person, who shall attest the execution of a will, shall at the time of the execution thereof, or at any time afterwards, be incompetent to be admitted a witness to prove the execution thereof, such will shall not on that account be invalid." By the 15th section it is enacted "that if any person shall attest the execution of any will to whom, or to whose wife or husband, any beneficial devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift, or appointment of, or affecting any real or personal estate (other than and except charges and directions for the payment of any debt or debts), shall be thereby given or made, such devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift, or appointment shall, so far only as concerns such person attesting the execution of such will, or the wife or husband of such person, or any person claiming under such person, or wife, or husband, be utterly null and void, and such person so attesting shall be admitted as a witness to prove the execution of such will, or to prove the validity or invalidity thereof, notwithstanding such devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift, or appointment mentioned in such will." By the 16th section it is enacted, "That in case, by any will, any real or personal estate shall be charged with any debt or debts, and any creditor, or the wife or husband of any creditor, whose debt is so charged, shall attest the execution of such will, such creditor, notwithstanding such charge, shall be admitted a witness to prove the execution of such will, or to prove the validity or invalidity thereof." By the 17th section it is further enacted, "That no person shall, on account of his being an executor of a will, be incompetent to be admitted a witness to prove the execution of such will, or a witness to prove the validity or invalidity thereof."

From these sections it will be seen that the principal object of the framers of the Act upon this point has been to render the will valid, notwithstanding any objection which may exist to the witnesses who attest its execution. The solicitor will not, for obvious reasons, rely upon these enactments when he has the opportunity of selecting witnesses, not coming within the classes whose competency is declared by this Act. The 9th section of the Wills Amendment Act does not, it will be seen, require that the witnesses should sign the will in the presence of each other, but it will not be prudent in any case that either of the witnesses should leave the room until every requisition of the Act is complied with.

Memorandum of attestation.—Although no form of attestation is necessary, it will be proper to obtain the signatures of the witnesses to a memorandum stating that all the requisite forms of execution have been attended to, as otherwise they may be called upon to prove several particulars of the execution which may altogether have escaped their recollection. This memorandum should be read over to the witnesses, and if they are illiterate persons, it should be properly explained to them, in order to call their attention more particularly to the circumstances under which the testator signed the will. In a previous chapter will be found a form of attestation; but the following may be adopted where the will is written on several sheets, each of which it is always desirable should be signed.

The above-written will of the above-named testator A B was signed by him at the foot or end thereof, and each of the preceding sheets thereof was signed by him in the presence of us, being both present at the same time, who, in his presence, in the presence of each other, and at his request, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses.

If the will be signed by some other person for the testator, the following form of attestation should be used:—

The above-written will of the above-named testator A B was signed at the foot or end thereof by C D, in the presence and by the direction of the said A B, and such signature was made by the said C D, and acknowledged by the said A B, in the presence of us, being both present at the same time, who, in the presence of the said A B, and of each other, and at the request of the said A B, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses.

Reading the will.—If, from weakness or ignorance, the testator is unable to sign the will with his own hand, it will be prudent to read it over to him, and to obtain his assent to its expressing his intentions, in the presence of the witnesses, in order the more clearly to identify the document signed with what it is his purpose to sign. This may not be necessary, but it is desirable in all cases where it can be accomplished; for in Durnell v. Cornfield (8 Jurist, 215), it was held by the Prerogative Court that a knowledge by a testator of the contents of a testamentary paper was essential to its admission to probate; and that where capacity was undoubted, knowledge of the contents would be inferred from the fact of execution; but that where the capacity was hazarded, it would be otherwise. The proof of the testator's knowledge of the contents of the will will, however, vary with the circumstances of the case; and, therefore, in Edwards v. Fincham, a case before the Privy Council, reported in 7 Jurist, 25, it was held that the will of a blind person was good, though not proved to have been read over to her before execution, and although the disposition of her property thereby was very different from that by a former will made a short time before, the will being proved to be in conformity with the instructions given by her to her solicitor.

It may be useful to mention here, that, in Wilson v. Beddard (12 Sim. 28), it was held that if a testator, who is unable from illness to sign his will, has his hand guided in making his mark, it is a sufficient signature within the Statute of Frauds.

Exercise of power of appointment.—By the 10th section of the 1 Vict. c. 26, it is enacted, "That no appointment made by will in exercise of any power shall be valid unless the same be executed in manner hereinbefore required; and every will executed in manner hereinbefore required shall, so far as respects the execution and attestation thereof, be a valid execution of a power of appointment by will, notwithstanding it shall have been expressly required that a will made in exercise of such power should be executed with some additional or other form of execution or solemnity." Although this section renders the exercise of a power of appointment by will, duly executed according to the provisions of the Act, valid without the forms of execution prescribed by the power being adopted, yet there appears to be no reason why the intention of the parties by whom the power was given should not still be carried out when practicable. The 9th section requires the attestation of "two or more witnesses;" and if, by the deed or will giving the power of appointment, three or four witnesses are required, it will perhaps be desirable, though not necessary, that this number of witnesses should be employed.

It remains only to notice the cases which have been decided as to the execution of wills since the 1 Vict. c. 26, came into operation.

Signature or acknowledgment by the testator.—As to the position of the testator's signature; in Re Gaudinier, it was held by the Prerogative Court (Oct. 3rd, 1843), that where a will was written on two sides of a sheet of letter paper, the first and the third, the second being blank, and the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses were affixed at the lower part of the second side, there being no room on the third side, the execution was sufficient to satisfy the requisitions of the Act. Where the dispositive part of a will was on the first side of a sheet of paper, and the second was left blank, and the attestation clause and signatures of the testator and attesting witnesses were on the third side, probate was granted. In the goods of John Gore, 3 Curt. 758.

The mere circumstance of a testator calling in witnesses to sign without any further explanation, does not amount to an acknowledgment of his signature within the intention of the 9th section of the 1 Vict. c. 26. Holt v. Genge (before the Privy Council, Feb. 14, 1844, 8 Jurist, 323).

In Blake v. Knight (3 Curt. 547), it was held by Sir H. J. Fust, that the Court is not bound to have positive affirmative evidence that a will was signed or a signature to a will acknowledged by a testator in the presence of witnesses, before it can pronounce for the validity of that will; and that the testator's acknowledging to the witnesses a certain paper to be his will, and to be all in his handwriting, and his name being signed to it when propounded (although the witnesses could not swear to the signature having been affixed at the time they signed their names) was an acknowledgment of his signature.

In Cooper v. Beckett (3 Curt. 648), it was held by the same learned judge that a will was signed by the testator before the witnesses subscribed it, contrary to the recollection and belief of the witnesses, their testimony, however, not being sufficiently positive to counterbalance the presumption arising from the circumstances.

Where, however, there was positive evidence of one of the attesting witnesses that the will was signed after he and the other witness had subscribed, the evidence of the other witness being that it was not signed in the presence of the witnesses, and there being no circumstance upon which a reliance could be founded that the witnesses were mistaken, the Court pronounced against the will. (Pennant v. Kingscale (3 Curt. 642).)

Signature of attesting witnesses.—The will must be subscribed by the witnesses themselves, and therefore where one of the witnesses, in the presence of the testator, subscribed the will first for himself, and then for the other witness, both being present at the same time, the will was rejected. In re White (7 Jur. 1045).

Where one of the witnesses made a mark to a will, and a wrong name was by mistake afterwards set opposite to the mark, probate of the will was granted. (Re Ashmore, 3 Curt. 756.)

Though an acknowledgment of the signature of the testator is sufficient, it is different with an attesting witness; and therefore in the case of Moore v. King (7 Jur. 205), where a testator signed a codicil in the presence of one witness, who attested and subscribed it, and the testator on the next day, in the presence of the first witness and another person, acknowledged his signature, and the first witness also acknowledged his signature, but did not again subscribe the will, though the other person signed as a second witness, it was held that the attestation was not sufficient.

The foregoing are some of the principal cases which have arisen upon the apparently clear directions given by the 9th section of the Act; and they form a satisfactory proof of the facility of any attempt to frame a legislative rule, which cannot, through the ignorance or caprice of parties, be made a subject for dispute and litigation. The state of the law may, in some cases, be justly blameable, but the acts of parties themselves are more frequently the cause of the expense and mischief which legal proceedings occasion. However clear a law may be, there will always be found persons who, either disregarding its requisitions, or, from a false spirit of economy, neglecting to have the assistance of competent advisers, will, by their conduct, damage the interests of themselves and of those dependent upon them. As this state of things is generally known and recognised, it ought to be more taken into consideration than it appears to be by those who, in certain disjointed particulars, are at the present time so active in amending and re-amending for the purpose of simplifying, some of the most complicated parts of our legal system.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

COURT PAPERS.

ORDER OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

EASTER VACATION.

Thursday, March 19, 1846.
Whereas, by the first article of the 8th of May, 1846, it is provided that "the Easter Vacation is to commence and terminate on such days as the Lord Chancellor shall every year specially direct." And whereas Easter week, or a period equal thereto, has usually been observed as a vacation in the several offices of this Court. And whereas, part of Easter week will in the present year fall within Easter Term. His lordship doth order that the Easter Vacation for the present year do commence on Saturday the 4th day of April next, and terminate on Tuesday the 14th day of April next. And that this order be entered with the registrar and set up in the several offices of this Court. (Signed) E. D. COLVILLE.

EASTER HOLIDAYS IN THE CHANCERY OFFICES.—The keeping of the Easter holidays by the clerks in the Chancery offices, when those holidays fall in Term time, has long been a source of great inconvenience to solicitors, and prejudicial to the interests of their clients. The matter, however, having at length been brought under the notice of the Lord Chancellor, his lordship has caused the following order to be issued, viz.:—"Order of Court.—Whereas, by the first article of the eighth of the General Orders of the Court of the 8th May, 1845, it is provided that 'Easter Vacation is to commence and terminate on such days as the Lord Chancellor shall every year specially direct.' And whereas Easter week, or a period equal thereto, has usually been observed as a vacation in the several offices of this court; and whereas part of Easter week will, in the present year, fall within Easter Term: his lordship doth order that the Easter vacation for the present year do commence on Saturday, the 4th day of April next, and terminate on Tuesday, the 14th day of April next. And that this order be entered with the registrar, and set up in the several offices of this court.—E. D. COLVILLE."

SHERIFFS' COURT, RED LION-SQUARE, April 2.
—A County Court was held on Thursday, when Hemp, the Sheriff's officer, made the following proclamations of outlawry. By the publicity given to these proceedings, several persons have lately obtained discharges to the actions:—Charles Craven, at the suit of W. H. H. Reed; Sir R. D. Henagan, at the suit of C. Plowden and another; Sir H. Floyd, at the suit of A. Smith and another; G. A. Young, at the suit of O. Roberts; W. Ironmonger, at the suit of W. H. Vernon; George Holes (two cases), at the suit of George S. Ford and the assignees of James Gibbs, a bankrupt; Robert R. Craig, at the suit of Morris Levy; the Hon. W. F. Byng, at the suit of Charles Lewis; John Eden Spalding, at the suit of Lawrence Levy and another; Francis P. Parker, at the suit of Thomas Sanford; Augustus Peacock, at the suit of George D. Sewell; William Jones Burdett, at the suit of Charles Barnett; Charles S. Reynolds, at the suit of Edward Smith; H. H. Wernick, at the suit of Robert Warren; George Linsley, at the suit of W. De Bernardy; Thomas Sharp, at the suit of Peter Playne and others; W. B. Metcalfe, at the suit of W. Reeve and another; James Menzies, at the suit of Benjamin Sams; John Rathbone, at the suit of B. Sams.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

INNS OF COURT.

Return to an Order of the Honourable the House of Commons, dated 9th of February, 1846, for, A Statement "of the Regulations of the Four Inns of Court having the power to call to the Bar, with the date of each regulation, and the authority by which it was made; and specifying any distinction made between the members of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge and others."

Ordered, by The House of Commons, to be printed, 16th March, 1846.

LINCOLN'S-INN.

Lincoln's-inn, February 1846.

The Society of Lincoln's-inn begs to submit, for the information of the Honourable the House of Commons, the following statement:—

That the orders and regulations for the good government of the society are made from time to time by the treasurer and masters of the bench, in council summoned specially for that purpose.

That at a council held on the 30th day of June, 1762, the following proposals were laid before this council by committees appointed by the four Inns of Court:—

PROPOSALS, JUNE 18, 1762.—That the standing for the bar be five years from admission, none to be called under the age of twenty-one years; that twelve Terms' commons be actually kept; that masters of arts and bachelors of laws of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge be dispensed with two years' standing, but not with any commons; no exception with regard to Ireland or the West Indies; no attorney or solicitor, clerk in Chancery or Exchequer, to be called until they have discontinued practice as such for two years.

The above proposals were signed by committees of the four Inns of Court.

Upon the report of the committee appointed by the Society of Lincoln's Inn to meet committees of the other Inns of Court to take the above proposals into consideration, wherein it appeared that the above regulations were proper to be observed and practised by all the Inns of Court, it was ordered that for the future no person shall be called to the Bar in this Society before the end of five years from the time of his admission, nor shall any person be called to the bar who shall be under the age of twenty-one years; that every person shall actually keep commons in the hall for twelve Terms before he be called to the Bar; that Masters of Arts and Bachelors of Laws of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge may be called to the Bar at the end of three years from the time of their admission; but this is not to dispense with keeping their usual commons.

That no person be called to the Bar before the time.

prescribed, on account or pretence of his practising the law in Ireland or the plantations.

That no attorney, solicitor, clerk in Chancery or Exchequer, shall be called to the Bar until the end of two years, at least after they have discontinued practising as such.

That at a council held the 31st day of May, 1793, the privilege granted to Masters of Arts and Bachelors of Laws of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, of being called to the Bar at the end of three years from the date of admission, instead of five, was extended to graduates of the University of Dublin, upon their taking either of those degrees.

That in addition to the student keeping twelve Terms, agreeably to the rule of June 1762, he is required to perform nine reading exercises before thirty-two barristers in the hall, three of which only can be performed in one Term.

Copy of Resolutions for Admission to the Society of Lincoln's Inn, made at an adjourned Council, held February 21, 1828.

Ordered, That from and after the first day of Easter Term next, the following resolutions, submitted by the committees of the Inns of Court relative to admission, be adopted by this Society:—

1. That every application for admission shall be accompanied with a testimonial, signed by a Benchman of this Society, or by two barristers, attesting that the person so applying is known to the said benchman or barristers as a gentleman of character and respectability; that he is a fit person to be admitted a member of the Society, and to be called to the Bar.

2. That every person who shall hereafter apply to be admitted a member of this Society shall sign a declaration that he is desirous of being admitted for the purpose of being called to the Bar; and that he will not, without the special permission of the Benchers in Council, take out or apply for any certificate in pursuance of the statute 44 Geo. 3.

3. That this permission be not granted until the person has kept such commons in the Hall of this Society as are required to be kept to qualify him to be called to the Bar.

4. That the permission be for one year only, and that every petition for the same shall state the circumstances upon which the petitioner applies.

5. That no person be admitted of this Society whose name stands on the roll of attorneys or solicitors, or who is attested to an attorney or solicitor.

P.S.—All other particulars can be found in the Report of the Common Law Commissioners, in the printed minutes of the Honourable the House of Commons; Fifth and Sixth Reports, p. 42.

HENRY WILLIAM TANCRED, Treasurer.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.

All regulations as to admission of students and call to the Bar are made by the authority of the Masters of the Bench, in Parliament assembled.

To constitute a Parliament, it is necessary that at least five Masters of the Bench should be present.

The regulations now in force as to admission of students and call to the Bar are as follows:—

Regulation dated May 8, 1790.—A candidate for the Bar must be proposed by a Master of the Bench, who is required to be able to give an account to the Masters of the Bench of the character and qualifications of the gentleman he proposes.

July 16, 1762.—Twelve Terms are required to be kept as a qualification for call to the Bar.

A gentleman may be called to the Bar at the age of twenty-one years, if he shall have been a member of the Society for the period of five years.

Note.—He being otherwise entitled to be called.

April 19, 1782.—To keep a Term, a member must dine in the hall of the Society at least three days in the Term.

November 23, 1798.—No person can be called to the English Bar unless he shall, previously to his keeping any of the Terms requisite for that purpose, have deposited with the treasurer the sum of 100l., the same to be returned, without interest, upon his being called to the Bar or quitting the Society, or, in case of death, to the personal representative. But this does not extend to any person who shall, previously to his being called to the Bar, produce a certificate of his being a member of the College of Advocates in Scotland, or of his having kept two years' Terms in any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin.

Note.—This is the only distinction made between members of the Universities and others.

The name and description of every candidate for being called to the Bar is published in the hall a fortnight before he is called to the Bar.

July 2, 1805.—If any person be offered or proposed to be admitted a member, and be rejected, a certificate of the same is immediately communicated to the other societies, notifying such rejection.

June 1, 1821.—The names of gentlemen proposed for the Bar in this Society are sent to each of the other societies; and the lists of candidates for the Bar in the other Inns of Court, which may be sent to this House, are sent to the Masters of the Bench of this Society.

May 18, 1825.—Every applicant for admission to the Society must state his age, description, and residence, and the residence and designation of his father, and also that he is desirous of being admitted a member for the purpose of keeping Terms for the Bar; and that he will not, either directly or indirectly, without the special permission of the Society by order made in Parliament, apply for or take out any certificate in pursuance of the statute 44 Geo. 3. c. 98. s. 14, before he has kept such commons in the hall of this Society as are required to be kept to qualify him to be called to the Bar. And his application must be accompanied by a certificate signed by two barristers of the Society, and must afterwards be approved by a Benchman; without which his admission cannot take place.

No recipient for entering into commons can be granted to any person whose name stands on the rolls of attorneys or solicitors, or who shall be engaged in any profession other than the law, or in any trade, business, or occupation. Should any person be found to act contrary to the aforesaid rules, he would be liable to be expelled the Society.

April 24, 1835.—Persons of the full age of twenty-three years and upwards, whose names shall have been upon the books of the Society three years, may be admitted to the Bar after keeping twelve Terms, provided that in all other respects they be entitled to be called to the Bar.

November 3, 1843.—Members of the London and Durham Universities have the same privileges as the members of Oxford and Cambridge Universities, with respect to calls to the Bar.

May 3, 1844.—No attorney at law, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch courts, proctor, notary public, or parliamentary agent, or person acting as such, and no clerk of or to any barrister, conveyancer, special pleader, attorney, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writers of the Scotch courts, proctor, notary, parliamentary agent, clerk in Chancery, or other officer in any court of law or equity, whether such clerk be attested or in the receipt of a salary or of other remuneration for his services, is allowed to keep commons in the hall of the Society, available for the purpose of being called to the Bar, until such person, being an attorney, shall have taken his name off the rolls, nor until he and every other person above named or described shall have ceased to act or practise as such attorney, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch courts, solicitor, proctor, notary, agent, or clerk as aforesaid.

No person can apply for or take out any certificate in pursuance of the statute 43 Geo. 3. c. 98. s. 14, without the special permission of the Society by order made in Parliament under pain of expulsion; such permission not being granted until the person applying for the same shall have kept such commons in the hall of the Society as are required to be kept as a qualification for the Bar; and, when granted, to endure for one year only, but may be renewed by order of Parliament upon petition.

Every applicant for admission is required to sign a statement to the above effect.

Jan. 27, 1837.—For the future the judges are requested to entertain the application of any gentleman who shall be refused admission into this Inn of Court, the Society being willing to be bound by the decision of the judges on such application.

EDWARD ELDRED, Sub-treasurer.

INNER TEMPLE.

The regulations "As to the Admission of Students and Call to the Bar," by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, are made by the authority of the Masters of the Bench of the same Society assembled in Parliament or Bench table.

The regulations in regard to both these subjects now in force and acted upon by this Society are as follows:—

Regulation dated Feb. 1, 1780.—A person in holy orders cannot be admitted a member of this Society.

Jan. 29, 1819.—No person under the age of fifteen years can be admitted a member of this Society.

Feb. 11, 1829.—No person can be admitted a student of this Society without a previous examination by one barrister of the Society, named for that purpose by the Masters of the Bench, and a certificate signed by the examiner, of the competency of the candidate for admission, in classical attainments and the general subjects of a liberal education; such examination to include the Greek and Latin languages, or one of them at least, together with such subjects of history and general literature as the examiner may think suited to the age of the candidate:—May 6, 1845; but this regulation not to apply to any gentleman who, upon his application to be admitted a member, shall have taken the degree or have passed his examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts in either of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, and shall produce a certificate to that effect.

June 28, 1846.—Before any person can be admitted a member of this Society, his age, residence, and condition in life must be stated in writing, and such statement represented to the treasurer, or, in his absence, to some other Benchman or Benchers of the Society; and that no person be admitted without the approbation of such treasurer, Benchman or Benchers, or by an order of the Parliament or Bench table; and in case of any misrepresentation in this particular, his admission will be avoided.

Feb. 8, 1828.—That such application for admission must be accompanied with a testimonial signed by a Benchman of the Society or by two barristers, attesting that the person so applying is known to the said Benchman or barristers as a gentleman of character and respectability; that he is a fit person to be admitted a member of the Society, and to be called to the Bar.

That such applicant shall sign a declaration that he is desirous of being admitted for the purpose of being called to the Bar, and that he will not, without the special permission of the Benchers, by order made in Parliament or Bench table, take out or apply for any certificate in pursuance of the statute 44 Geo. 3. c. 98, to practise as a special pleader, conveyancer, or draftsman in equity; which permission is not granted until the person has kept such commons in the hall of this Society as are required to be kept to qualify him to be called to the Bar, viz. twelve Terms; such permission is granted for one year only, and renewed upon application from time to time, at the discretion of the Bench.

No person can be admitted a member of this Society while engaged in trade.

Jan. 24, 1837.—The judges are requested to entertain the application of any gentleman who may be refused admission into this Society; this Society being willing to be bound by the decision of the judges, upon such application.

Keeping Terms.—To keep a Term the student must dine in the hall of this Society two days in each of two separate full weeks of the Term:—(May 9, 1828); except that students residing at the Universities may keep their Terms by dining any three days in the Term.

February 8, 1828.—No person can be admitted into commons whose name stands on the roll of attorneys or solicitors, or who is under articles to any attorney or solicitor.

Jan. 30, 1844.—No attorney-at-law, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer in the Scotch courts, proctor, notary public, parliamentary agent, or other agent to any appellate court, or other person acting as such, and no clerk of or to any barrister, conveyancer, special pleader, attorney, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer to the Scotch courts, proctor, notary, parliamentary agent, clerk in Chancery, or other officer in any court of law or equity, whether such clerk be attested or in the receipt of a salary or of other remuneration for his services, can be allowed to keep commons in the hall of this Society, available for the purpose of being called to the Bar, until such person being an attorney shall have taken his name off the rolls, and until he and every other person above named and described, shall have ceased to act or practise as such attorney, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch courts, solicitor, proctor, notary, agent, or clerk as aforesaid.

June 22, 1798.—No person can keep Terms in this Society available for the English Bar unless he shall, previous to his keeping any Terms requisite for that purpose, have deposited with the treasurer of this Society the sum of 100l., the same to be returned upon his call to the Bar, quitting the Society, or in case of his death, to his personal representative; but this order not to apply to any person who shall, previous to his being called to the Bar, produce a certificate of his being a member of the College of Advocates in Scotland, or of his having kept two years' Terms in any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin:—(November 20, 1821); nor to any person who shall be admitted into commons for the purpose of being called to the Irish Bar, and shall produce a certificate that he has been admitted a student of King's Inn, Dublin.

CALLS TO THE BAR.

June 26, 1762.—No person can be called to the Bar in this Society who shall not have been admitted full five years, and shall be twenty-one years of age, and shall have actually kept twelve Terms' commons, except that Masters of Arts and Bachelors of Law of either of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge shall not be restrained to five years' standing, but may be called after they shall have been admitted and actually kept commons full three years.

June 13, 1793.—The privilege of the above order of 26th June, 1762, extended to the like graduates of the University of Dublin.

July 1, 1794.—But the above privilege not to extend to mandames or honorary degrees.

June 22, 1798.—The name of every gentleman offering himself for the Bar must be published in the hall of this Society a fortnight before the day of call.

November 27, 1807.—Every gentleman desirous of being called to the Bar must make, or cause to be made, his application to one of the Masters of the Bench to move his call.

June 16, 1798.—No Master of the Bench of this Society can propose any gentleman for the Bar without he is able to give some account to the Masters of the Bench of the character and qualifications of the gentleman he proposes; and no person can be called to the Bar by this Society until the next Parliament after that at which such person has been proposed by one of the Masters of the Bench.

July 3, 1794.—No person in deacon's orders can be called to the Bar in this Society.

March 4, 1846. GEORGE SPENCE, Treasurer.

GRAY'S INN.

March 1846.—The Society of Gray's Inn is one of the four Inns of Court having the power to call to the Bar, and they admit students to be members of the Society for that purpose. The Society is governed by the senior barristers, including those who have been called within the Bar as Queen's counsel or by patent of precedence, and they are called Readers and Masters of the Bench, or, more concisely, Benchers. The regulations as to admission of students and call to the Bar are made from time to time by the authority of the Benchers, who meet together in the hall of the Society at least once a week during each law Term, to regulate the affairs of the Society; and such meetings are called pensions, and the orders made thereat, orders of pension.

In searching for the early regulations and their dates, it has been necessary to revert to the institution of this Society, which appears to have been about the middle of the 14th century; but there is not any record in writing in the possession of the Society, of their regulations or proceedings before the reign of Queen Elizabeth. There are, however, in the work of Sir William Dugdale, entitled "Origines Judiciales," some earlier statements of the regulations and proceedings of the Benchers of each Inn of Court; and the same work contains, not only the orders made by the Benchers of Gray's Inn down to the reign of King Charles the Second, but also various orders made by the judges, either alone or with the Privy Council, and sometimes by the Privy Council only, for the regulation of the Inns of Court.

These orders and regulations, and the orders of pension of Gray's Inn, contain many matters respecting admissions and calls to the Bar, which have been repealed by subsequent orders and regulations, or have become obsolete in a great degree; and it is conceived that the date of each of these ancient regulations, or even a statement of them, is not required by the order of the honourable House.

It may, however, be shortly stated that the effect of these orders and regulations was, amongst other matters, that as to students to be admitted members, attorneys were excluded; members were to pay a fine upon admission, and were to perform certain moots or exercises, and to keep twenty Terms' commons by dining in the hall of the Society, before they could be called to the Bar, and such call could not take place until a certain time after admittance, such time being at first nine years after admission, and afterwards reduced to eight and then to seven years; and by an order of pension made in 1603, it is stated to be the King's commandment, delivered by the judges, that none should thereafter be admitted into the Society unless he were a gentleman by descent, until his Majesty's pleasure should be further known.

No order has been found in the records of this Society, as having been made by the judges or Privy Council, since the year 1664; nor is there any material order of pension at present existing and in force, made between that period and the year 1762, when an order of pension was made, which may be considered as having superseded all former orders and regulations as to calls to the Bar, and the same is as follows:—

"Gray's Inn.—At a pension held the 7th day of July, 1762, it is ordered, that for the future no person shall be called to the Bar in this Society before the end of five years from the time of his admission, nor shall any person be called to the Bar who shall be under the age of twenty-one years: That every person shall actually keep commons in the hall twelve Terms before he be called to the Bar: That Masters of Arts and Bachelors of Laws of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge may be called to the Bar at the end of three years from the time of their admission, but this is not to dispense with keeping their usual commons: That no person be called to the Bar before the time prescribed, on account or pretence of his practising the law in Ireland or the plantations: That no attorney, solicitor, clerk in Chancery or Exchequer, shall be called to the Bar until the end of two years at least after they shall have discontinued practising as such."

The above regulations were made after a conference with the other Inns of Court, who made similar orders for their respective societies.

By an order of pension of the 17th day of June, 1769, it appears that it was resolved by the four Inns of Court, that from Michaelmas Term then next, no articulated clerk either to an attorney or solicitor, or to a clerk in the Court of Chancery or Court of Exchequer, ought to be called to the Bar until his articles should either have expired or have been cancelled for the space of two whole years; and that, in order to prevent improper persons from being called to the Bar before due inquiries had been made concerning their characters and qualifications, no person should be called to the Bar until the next pension after that at which such person should have been proposed by one of the Masters of the Bench. And by an order of pension of the 29th day of June 1793, it was ordered (after a conference with the Societies of the Inner and Middle Temple), that in the order of the year 1762 (hereinafter stated), after the words "Masters of Arts and Bachelors of Law of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge," the words "and of Dublin" be inserted.

By another order of pension dated the 8th day of July 1794, it was ordered (after a conference with the other Inns of Court), that a person in deacon's orders ought not to be called to the Bar; it having previously (in the year 1779) been declared to be the opinion of the Society, that a person in priest's orders was not a proper person to be called to the Bar, regard being had to the 76th canon, made in 1603. And by an order of pension of the 27th of December 1794, it was ordered (after a conference with the other Societies), that the privilege allowed to Masters of Arts and Bachelors of Laws, by the general rule of 1762, respecting calls to the Bar, should not extend to mandamus or honorary degrees.

By an order of pension, dated the 20th day of June 1798, it was ordered that the following resolutions (which had been agreed upon at a meeting of a committee of Benchers of the four Inns of Court) should be adopted and confirmed by this society; viz. That every society should be at liberty to continue or make such rules respecting the keeping of terms as then prevailed, or as they should thereafter think fit; provided that no student in any of the Inns of Court should be permitted to keep a Term in order to his being called to the Bar, without having been present in the hall, at least three days in such Term, at the time when grace is said after dinner: That no person who should have been admitted into any of the Inns of Court since the 24th of April then last, or who should thereafter be admitted (except as thereafter excepted), should be called to the English Bar, unless he should, previous to his keeping any of the Terms requisite for that purpose, have deposited with the treasurer of the Society to which he belonged, the sum of 100*l.*, the same to be returned, without interest, upon his being called to the Bar or quitting the Society, or, in case of his death, to his personal representative, but this was not to excuse him from paying his duties regularly, nor from giving the usual bond upon admission; provided that this order was not to extend to any person who should, previous to his being called to the Bar, produce a certificate of his being a member of the College of Advocates in Scotland, or of his having kept two years' Terms in any of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin; and in case such deposit as aforesaid should have been made, the same should be immediately returned to him, upon his producing such certificate as is above mentioned: and that the name and description of every candidate for being called to the Bar should be hung up in the hall, a fortnight before he should be called to the Bar.

By an order of pension dated 16th November, 1825, it was ordered, that receiving the sacrament by students, as a qualification for the English Bar, should be in future dispensed with; and by another order, dated 29th April, 1835, it was ordered, that no solicitor or attorney should be allowed to keep commons for the Bar until his name was taken off the rolls: and by an order dated 11th day of June, 1844, it was ordered, that from and after Trinity Term, 1844, no attorney at law, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch courts, proctor, notary public, parliamentary agent, or agent to any appellate court, or person acting as such, and no clerk to any barrister, conveyancer, special pleader, attorney, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch courts, proctor, notary, parliamentary agent, or agent to any appellate court, or of or to any officer in any court of law or equity (whether such clerk should be articulated or in receipt of a salary or other remuneration for his services), should be allowed to keep commons in the hall of the Society, available for the purpose of being called to the Bar, until such person being an attorney should have taken his name off the rolls, and until he and every other person above named or described should have ceased to act or practise as such attorney, solicitor, or writer of the Scotch courts, proctor, notary, agent, or clerk as aforesaid: and that no commons which, after Trinity Term, 1844, should be kept, or attempted to be kept, by any person so disqualified as aforesaid, should be allowed to him towards his qualification for the Bar.

The above statement contains all the written regulations of the Society of Gray's Inn, as to admissions and calls, now considered as existing and in force, with the date of each regulation; but there are some practical regulations of a minor nature, not specifically reduced into writing, and the dates of which cannot be given, but which depend on custom and ancient usage; these regulations may be best explained by the following statement:—

When a gentleman applies to be admitted as a student for the English Bar, he is required to fill up a printed form. If, upon due inquiry, no objection appear to the applicant, this form is signed by a Bencher, and he is admitted upon payment of certain stamp duties and fees, and upon executing a bond with a surety, conditioned to abide by and keep the rules of the Society. If any objection appears, the same is laid before the Benchers when they meet, and they investigate the same. After admission, and after he is of sufficient standing, and has kept the Terms, and has otherwise conformed to the regulations, the student intimates to the Steward of the Society his intention to be called to the Bar, and his name and description are then screened in the dining-hall of the Society for at least a fortnight during Term time, and his name and description are also sent to the other three Inns of Court; a certificate of his qualifications is then drawn up and examined by two Benchers, who sign the same if found correct. These qualifications are, that the student is of full age and standing in the Society, and has kept a sufficient number of Terms, and performed his exercises (the latter being at present a matter of form only), and that he is possessed of a chamber in the Inn, in his own right, or has paid a fine of 20*l.* in lieu thereof. The student then presents his petition to the Benchers to be called, and produces the certificate of his qualifications, which are read at a pension of at least five Benchers; and is proposed by a Bencher, and no objection appears, he is at the next or some succeeding pension called before the Benchers, who cause the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, or, (if he is a Roman Catholic) the oath provided for that purpose, to be administered to him; he is thereupon called to the Bar and becomes a barrister, and his name as such is published in the hall of the Society. If any objection appears, the call to the Bar is postponed, and the objection is carefully investigated by the Benchers.

It will appear from the foregoing statement that the distinction now remaining in this Society between members of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin, and also members of the College of Advocates in Scotland, and other persons not being such members, is only as to the deposit of 100*l.*; which by the regulation of the year 1798, hereinafter stated, is dispensed with in the cases therein mentioned.

It should be stated that students are admitted members of this Society for the purpose of being certificated special pleaders and conveyancers, and also of being called to the Irish bar; and members are also admitted for the purpose only of holding chambers within the Inn: the foregoing regulations are referred to in these cases, so far as the same apply.

THOS. GREENE, Treasurer.

WILL OF THE LATE LADY HOLLAND.—Probate of the will and four codicils of the late Right Honourable Elizabeth Vassall, Baroness Dowager Holland, was granted on the 16th of March to the Right Hon. Lord J. Russell, Mr. B. Curry, Old Palace-yard, and Mr. W. A. Loch, of Edinburgh, the executors. The personality in England was sworn under 80,000*l.* The will is dated the 31st of August, 1845, and the last codicil on the 30th of October, a month before her death. Her first bequest is to the Queen, if her Majesty will condescend to accept it, of the picture of his Royal Highness the Duke of York, surrounded by the British residents and other English gentlemen when his Royal Highness was at Florence. To Lord J. Russell, the portrait of his grandfather, John, Duke of Bedford, by Sir Joshua Reynolds; and the vase of French china, with the portrait of Francis, Duke of Bedford, painted upon it in Paris by her order; and bequeaths to his lordship the net proceeds of the Kennington estate for life, and the residue of her property not specially disposed of. To the Speaker of the House of Commons, to complete his set of portraits, that of the Hon. James Abercromby, now Lord Dunfermline. To the Earl of Carlisle, the portrait of the Duke of Devonshire. To the Earl of Aberdeen, certain specific bequests in token of gratitude for his kindness towards her. Also bequests to the Duke of Devonshire, the Duchess of Sutherland, and many other of her personal friends. To the Hon. W. Cowper, her set of H. B.'s caricatures; to Mr. Cornelius Babington, 1,500*l.* and an annuity of 50*l.*; to Lady Caroline Babington, 200*l.*; to Mr. B. Curry, her executor, 200*l.*; to her godson, the Hon. T. A. Powys, 300*l.*; to Mr. Thomas Doggett, 550*l.* and an annuity of 150*l.*; and to Mr. W. Doggett, 200*l.* and 40*l.* a year; other small bequests and legacies and annuities to her servants; to the poor of Milbourn, 200*l.*; and mourning to the ten girls she annually clothed. All her property, real and personal, in the island of Jamaica, she leaves to her son, Lord Holland, her Britannic Majesty's Minister at the Court of Tuscany, for his use absolutely, also an annuity of 500*l.*; and should Lord Holland die in the lifetime of Lord J. Russell, to continue the annuity to her daughter Lady Lilford, to whom she has left some specific bequests. In her ladyship's disposition of the Kennington estate in favour of Lord J. Russell, she has expressed it as entirely emanating from her sincere affection for his lordship, and that it was also an intention formerly entertained by the late Lord Holland to make a similar disposition of the reversion of the Amptill estate in his favour, and hopes his lordship will accept the gift as a token of affection from both. She has empowered her lordship to charge the estate at Kennington with a sum of 7,000*l.* for the benefit of his children, Georgiana, Adelaide, Victoria, and John, as his lordship may direct; the estate after his lordship's death, to be held in trust for Lord Lilford, and at his decease for such three of eight persons named in the first codicil as may become entitled thereto, being six of the children of Lady Lilford, and the two daughters of Lord John Russell. To the British Museum she bequeaths a box given to her by Napoleon; the bequest forms a principal part of her second codicil, and is to the following effect:—"Amongst the things which I chiefly value, is the box bequeathed to me by the Emperor Napoleon, and a card originally inclosed in it, bearing on one side a memorandum, from which it appears that the cameo which forms the lid of the box was presented to Napoleon by Pope Pius VI. at Talentino in 1797, and on the other side these words, 'In the Emperor's own handwriting, L'Empereur Napoleon à Lady Holland, témoignage de satisfaction et d'estime.' These relics I bequeath to the British Museum, and desire that the box and card may be inclosed in a glass case and kept locked up, so that they may not be handled, and to be deposited in a room of the library of the Museum in which the autographs of distinguished persons and curiosities are kept." Directs her executors to expend 300l. in a monument in Milbourne Church, to be placed beside that executed by Sir Richard Westmacott to the memory of the late Lord Holland, and leaves a legacy to Sir Richard. The Baroness died at her residence, Great Stanhope-street, May-fair, on the 17th of November last, in her 76th year. She was the daughter and heiress of R. Vassall, esq. of Jamaica; was first married to the late Sir G. Webster, of Battle Abbey, Sussex, which marriage was dissolved by Act of Parliament, and on the 9th of July, 1797, was married to the late Lord Holland.—Observer.

THE BRAZILIAN PIRATES.—Our readers will recollect the circumstances attending the trial and acquittal of the prisoners charged with piracy on the coast of Africa, and the murder of the crew of her Majesty's ship Wasp. The prisoners, on being acquitted, were sent home by the British government. One of them, Majaval, was a Spaniard, a young man of rather superior manners and address, who acted as cook, was charged in the trial as being the person who inflicted the murderous blow on Midshipman Palmer. The prisoners were, in all probability, indebted for their acquittal to the munificence of the late High Sheriff of the county, Edward Simcoe Drowe, esq. of the Grange, who, with his wonted generosity, finding that most inadequate provision was made for their defence by the Brazilian government, caused the learned Serjeant Manning to be retained on their behalf; and the high personal character of the learned serjeant, and his equally high reputation as a lawyer, secured from the Court that attention to his exposition of the law which would not have been obtained by a junior counsel, even supposing that his critical acumen had enabled him to raise the same points, and give the same breadth of principle to his exposition as the learned serjeant did. The prisoners all expressed themselves most grateful to the High Sheriff; and it was a proud spectacle to see these wild and lawless men leaving our shores, and bearing away with them, for the rest of their days, an adequate conception and living experience of the impartiality and dignity of British law. The prisoner, Majaval, who as we have said, had evidently received a superior education to the rest, and had much of the manners of a gentleman, is a native of the town of Prima, near Barcelona. He left England in the highest spirits, rejoicing in the prospect of returning to his family, snatched as it were from the jaws of death. But on arriving at Barcelona he was arrested by the authorities and thrown into prison, charged with the crime of piracy, for which it appears he is amenable to Spanish law. He has written a letter to the late High Sheriff, praying for a copy of his acquittal in the British court, expressing the renewal of his thanks for the kindness which he experienced here, and describing his disappointment at being a second time incarcerated. The letter contained also one inclosed for General Espartero, between whose family and Majaval's there appears to have been some connection, with a view to get the influence of the General with the British authorities. Having heard a rumour of these circumstances, we have made inquiry of John Milford, esq. of Coaver, who had interested himself much on behalf of the prisoners, and by his knowledge of the Spanish language, was of great assistance to them; and he informs us that he was on a visit to the High Sheriff, at Grange, and he saw and translated the letter, and finds the facts to be as above stated. It is scarcely necessary to add, that the humanity of Mr. Drowe will prompt him to do all that he can in the matter. Mr. Milford states, that on his correspondence with the family of Majaval, he was impressed with the respectability of his father; and the young man who was found engaged in this desperate traffic was possessed of brilliant talents and an adventurous spirit. He has good reason to hope that the narrow escape he has had will be the means of snatching him from the destructive course in which his wild spirit and love of enterprise had first embarked him.—Western Times.

BILLIARD AND BAGATELLE TABLES.—In a few days a part of an Act of last session (8 & 9 Vict.

c. 109), relating to games and wagers, will take effect in respect to billiard and bagatelle tables in other than public-houses. It is provided by the 11th section, that from the 5th of April next, in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, every house, room, or place kept for public billiard playing, or where a public billiard table or bagatelle board, or instrument used in any game of the like kind is kept, at which persons are admitted to play, not being under a victualler's license, shall be licensed under this Act. That every person keeping any such billiard or bagatelle table without being licensed for the house where it is so kept, and also every person licensed under this Act who shall not, during the continuance of such billiard license, put and keep up the words, "Licensed for billiards," legibly printed, in some conspicuous place near the door and on the outside of the house specified in the license, shall be liable to be proceeded against as the keeper of a common gaming-house; and besides any penalty or punishment to which he may be liable, if convicted of keeping a common gaming-house, shall, on conviction of keeping such unlicensed billiard table, bagatelle board, or other instrument, before a magistrate or two justices, be liable to pay such penalty, not more than 10l. for every day on which such table or board shall be used, or in the discretion of the magistrate or justices, may be committed to the House of Correction, with or without hard labour, for any time not more than one calendar month, and in default of payment of a fine or costs, the goods of a defendant may be sold. By the 13th section, persons licensed must not allow any persons to play at billiards or bagatelle, after 1 and before 8 o'clock in the morning, or at any time on Sundays, Christmas-day, or Good Friday, or on any public fast or thanksgiving day; and by another section (the 14th) constables and police-officers are empowered to enter the premises as often as they think proper, and if refused, such refusal to be deemed an offence against the tenor of the license. The charge for an annual license is by the 10th section fixed at 6s. which license is granted by justices assembled in session to such persons as in their discretion are fit and proper to keep billiard tables or bagatelle boards.

RETIREMENT OF MR. HILL, Q.C.—Mr. Mathew Davenport Hill, the eminent Queen's Counsel, who has for a considerable period led on the Midland Circuit, announced on Saturday that after twenty-six years' attendance on the circuit, he was addressing for the last time a jury in the courts of Warwick.

POLICE (IRELAND).—Return of the number of policemen employed as personal orderlies and clerks by the Inspector-General of Police, &c. in Ireland. Nine are, it appears, so employed, at an annual expense of 445l. 18s. There are also employed in other capacities than that of an ordinary constable, nineteen others, at an annual expense of 609l. 11s.

LUNACY.—By the Lunacy Act of last year (8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 88), the several commissioners are required to visit asylums and private houses. They have recently made their first report to the Lord Chancellor, shewing their visits, the patients seen, and miles travelled, during the six months ending the 4th of February last. The report was yesterday issued as a Parliamentary paper. Dr. Turner made 148 visits, saw 6,593 patients travelled 3,351 miles. Dr. Hume made 105 visits, saw 3,813 patients, and travelled 2,718 miles. Mr. Procter made 131 visits, saw 6,550 patients, and travelled 3,138 miles. Mr. Mylne paid 170 visits, saw 5,382 patients, and travelled 4,081 miles. Mr. Hall (who died on the 30th of October last) paid 11 visits, saw 876 patients, and travelled 729 miles. Dr. Pritchard (who was appointed on the 31st August last) paid 102 visits, saw 4,626 patients, and travelled 2,052 miles; and Mr. Campbell paid 22 visits, saw 396 patients, and travelled 995 miles. Mr. Campbell was appointed on the 26th of November last.

CORN LAWS.—A Parliamentary paper, obtained by Mr. Moffatt, the member for Dartmouth, has been issued, shewing the number of addresses and memorials presented praying for the opening of the ports and repeal of the Corn Laws, since the 1st of September last. From the first branch it seems that 111 "addresses praying for the opening of the ports and repeal of the Corn Laws have been transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and presented by him to the Queen, since the 1st of September, 1845." Of that number 46 were for opening of the ports; some of the addresses were for opening the ports and for a repeal of the Corn Laws. The memorials of the city of London, Liverpool, and Manchester appear in the document. There were, it appears, by the second part of the return, 168 memorials addressed to the First Lord of the Treasury, the Lords of the treasury, the Lords of the Privy Council, &c. praying for the opening of the ports, since the 1st of September, 1845, and two for the importation of Indian corn.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.—Annual accounts of receipt and expenditure for the purposes of the Metropolitan Police, Police Superannuation Fund, and Police Courts, in 1845.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

GENERAL MEETING, MARCH 25, 1846.

Mr. Commissioner Foulblanque in the Chair. The minutes of the last meeting (the 4th inst.) were read and confirmed.

The following members were balloted for and elected:—The Duke of Buckingham, K.G., the Earl of Radnor, Lord Farnham, Thomas Parker, esq. solicitor, and Gerard Blisson Wharton, esq. solicitor.

The Report of the Committee on the Law of Property on the following reference was presented:—"To consider the law relating to mortgages." It was agreed that the Report should be further considered at the next meeting.

It was referred to the Committee on Equity, "To consider whether any and what mode can be devised for expediting the business in the offices of the Masters."

Adjourned till Wednesday, the 8th day of April next, at eight o'clock in the evening precisely.

Notices for Wednesday, the 8th of April.

1. The Report of the Committee on the Law of Property on the law relating to mortgages will be further considered.

2. The Report of the Committee on Criminal Law on the following reference will be presented:—"Whether unaggravated larcenies of small amount may not be advantageously submitted to the jurisdiction of the Petty Sessions."

CORRESPONDENCE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A COUNTRY ATTORNEY" writes thus on the subject of a "General Registry of Deeds":—

For a complete answer to all the points and arguments stated in favour of a general, or rather, central registry (for that is, in truth, the grand secret of the whole affair), I would refer you and your numerous readers to an excellent and admirable pamphlet, entitled "Cursory Observations on a General Register," by the present Lord Chancellor of Ireland, Sir Edward B. Sugden (published in 1834 by Murray and S. Sweet), who is a friend of our branch of the Profession, and not one of your canting, weening, chattering lords, bawling on an unearned, ill-merited pension of some 4,000l. a year. I trust Sir Edward Sugden may be induced to re-publish the pamphlet, with any further remarks occurring to him. He floored the "sawdust" at once.

NOTICE.

Post-office Orders must be made payable to Mr. JOHN CROCKFORD, Publisher of the Law Times.

To Readers and Correspondents.

J. J. (Whitechurch).—Thanks for the suggestion, which shall receive full consideration.

SUB ARTICULIS.—We are glad to find that the design of the Law Students' Society has not been given up, and we expect soon to be able to give the Profession further information respecting it. The question as to admission of articled clerks to the announced lectures of the Middle Temple, we cannot at this present answer; though our impression is that the lecture will be limited to the members of the Inns of Court.

We have received many letters from Shareholders in the "Solicitors' and General Life Assurance Society," in approval of the suggestion to effect policies, on their own lives, or those of members of their families, with announcements on the part of several to adopt this course at once. We take this opportunity of making our acknowledgments for the cordial expressions which many of these letters convey, and which though intended for the public through our columns, in the present superabundance of more urgent matter, we are unable to insert.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The volumes of the LAW TIMES, neatly, strongly, and uniformly bound, for 5s. 6d. each, with the name and address of the owner on the cover, 1s. extra, if sent to the office. If the numbers for binding be transmitted by the post, they must be tied in a parcel open at the ends, and contain some distinguishing mark by which it may be recognised, of which the publisher should be advised by letter and directed how he shall return the bound volume. Advantage may be taken of the same parcel to enclose other books for binding.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1846.

TO READERS.

THE custom that prescribes, on the occasion of a new volume, some acknowledgment for the past, we are unable, at this commencement of the SEVENTH volume of the LAW TIMES, to extend to promises for the future. With every successive volume it has been our duty to announce improvements, all of which have been successively accomplished, until now the list is well-nigh exhausted; although we shall continue to receive with gratitude the suggestions of our readers, and adopt them when practicable.

On one subject we must be permitted a few remarks. The plan of presenting verbatim reports of all the written judgments has now been continued for eighteen months, with almost entire success, and, as we are assured, to the satisfaction of our readers. But the introduction of this great, and, indeed, unique improvement has necessarily drawn largely upon our volumes, and compelled the publication of repeated double numbers, to enable us to keep pace with the reports without sacrificing the other useful departments of the LAW TIMES. These double numbers, we have now ascertained by experience, cannot be less in the half-year than five, making a slight additional cost, but which, we presume, that no reader will object to pay in return for upwards of 130 written judgments, the average contained in each volume. Notwithstanding the many improvements and the consequent great increase of expense in the getting up of the LAW TIMES, no addition has been or will be made to its price. But from the beginning of the present year there has been an alteration in the allowance on pre-payments. Henceforth the prepaid subscription will be 1*l.* 5*s.* for the half-year, and 2*l.* 7*s.* for the year, which will include all the double numbers, being a reduction for payment in advance of nearly twenty-five per cent. on the half year, and of thirty per cent. on the year.

It is necessary, also, to state that, for the future, no subscription can be suffered to remain unpaid for more than two half years. The reason of this will be apparent when we state that the ascertained bad debts, during the three years the LAW TIMES has existed, amount to no less a sum than 72*l.* and the list of defaulters would fill upwards of four closely printed columns. Our publisher, therefore, must be excused if, in the exercise of necessary vigilance, he may sometimes appear to be importunate. He assures us that stringent measures to enforce a settlement have never been adopted until repeated applications had made, and the courtesy of a reply to them refused. He has also stated some cases of gross fraud, which it will probably be our duty to make known to the Profession, to warn others against similar impositions.

CONVEYANCING.

LORD BROUGHAM has hit upon a scheme for compelling the use of his neglected short forms. It is to be provided by statute that the Taxing Masters shall disallow the charges for the long forms when in their judgments the short ones may have been used.

The device is creditable to his lordship's ingenuity. But why was it not introduced into the original statute? The Brougham Law Reforms have been all remarkable for this sort of legislative dove-tailing. Every measure has been required to be patched and tinkered half-a-dozen times in order to make it fit for use, and when set in motion it has so jarred with other parts of this legal machine, that it has proved more a hindrance than a help. The reason of this we take to be that Lord BROUGHAM is rather a theoretical than a practical Reformer. He frames laws upon abstract principles, or as if he were handling new materials with unbounded power to mould them at his will. Hence he introduces changes that may be well enough in themselves, but which, because they are not in harmony with the existing system, are the sources of more inconvenience and trouble, and consequent cost, than the evils they were intended to remedy.

So it was with the Conveyancing Acts of last Session. To short forms there is no rational objection. But no arrangement was made to secure to the solicitor a fair remuneration for his labour and skill bestowed, by substituting some other mode of payment than the length of the conveyance. The solicitors would not be parties to a voluntary change that would deprive them of their fair emoluments. So the Act became a dead letter.

We said then, that it appeared to us the most prudent course for the Profession was to accept the short forms, and use them, and arrange among themselves a scale of charges in conveyancing that would meet the altered circumstances. The recommendation was not adopted, and the result is now apparent. The short forms must be used, or if the conveyancer shall prefer the long ones, he must introduce them at his own expense. Would not the proposition we ventured to suggest have been far better than this which is now about to be forced upon the Profession?

Our readers may rely upon it that the landlords are resolved to diminish the expense of conveyancing, so as to enable them to deal with land more readily than heretofore, and to meet the new position in which pending legislation is about to place them. The Legislature will adopt any plausible plan for this purpose. If defeated for one session, it will certainly appear again, and probably in a more obnoxious form. Our earnest advice, therefore, to the Profession is, to adopt the change, and demand compensation, instead of waiting until the change is forced upon them without any compensation. Let them make a virtue of necessity. Nor in the end do we believe that loss will be sustained. Whatever facilitates the transfer of land will increase the number of conveyances, and we think that as a general rule the lawyers will find that their own true interests square with those of the public. The utility and applicability of short forms have been monstrously over-rated by the proposers, who are manifestly ignorant of the practical difficulties that forbid their employment in many cases; but still there are conveyances in which all or some of them may be used with perfect security. Lord BROUGHAM need not have been in such a hurry to force his mis-shapen offspring into the hands of the Profession. Whatever of it is good would have been adopted as soon as the first fit of horror at the sight of the stranger had passed away, and we trust that so harsh a measure of compulsion as that now before the House of Lords may yet be withdrawn.

LIABILITY OF ALLOTTEES.

THE argument put forward last week in support of the general proposition of the liability of allottees for payment of the deposit on shares applied for, appears to have taken many of our readers by surprise. It is certainly strange, that this argument, seemingly so palpable, should have been altogether overlooked by the learned counsel who have conducted the cases hitherto tried. In compliance with numerous requests from parties interested, both as members of committees and as allottees anxious to learn more particularly the reasons for the opinion at which we have arrived, we repeat, with details, the argument which we did little more than indicate last week.

All the cases so confidently relied upon, and on which the decision in Spettiswood's case was avowedly founded, were antecedent to the Joint Stock Companies Act.

Previously to that Act, a company had no recognized existence—was not formed, in fact—until the execution of the deed; they who promoted it were merely an association of persons trying to get up a company upon their own responsibility, armed by law with no powers, and if they failed they were very properly held by the Courts to be liable for the expenses of their incomplete scheme.

But the Joint Stock Companies Act has altered all this—has placed such an association upon a footing altogether different; has recognized its existence, and endowed it with certain powers and authorities. Therefore the arguments that properly determined the previous cases are wholly inapplicable to the present case.

We write on circuit, where we have not access to books, and, therefore, are unable to cite the very words of the statute; but the general outline is sufficient for our purpose, and will, we believe, be found correct.

The Joint Stock Companies Act, then, provides that the promoters of a company may register it provisionally, registering also their names as such promoters.

Upon registration the company has a recognized existence in law, and the promoters are empowered by the statute to perform a certain number of acts necessary for the carrying out their object, and completely forming such company.

Among the powers with which they are thus invested, is that of demanding and receiving deposits, not exceeding in amount 10*s.* for every 100*l.* of shares allotted, where the scheme is one that does not require the assistance of Parliament, and a larger sum where compliance with the Standing Orders of Parliament is necessary: such deposits to be applied expressly in payment of the preliminary expenses.

The law never gives a right without a remedy; and having thus authorized the demand and receipt of deposits for a specified object, will enforce their payment.

This argument assumes, of course, that all has been rightly done, namely, that the scheme is bond fide, and that the promoters, who are only the trustees and managers for the whole body of shareholders, have faithfully discharged their duty. And, even if they have acted unfairly, it may be a question whether this be not a matter for which the shareholders must afterwards seek redress in equity, and not a defence in law.

It has been asked, "Who are the parties to sue?" As already stated we are writing without reference to book, and from memory, merely, of the statute; but our strong impression is, that the action should be brought by the registered promoters, who, if we rightly remember, are the parties empowered by the statute to allot shares and receive deposits. But this will, of course, be ascertained by examination, before such a step is taken.

If the view we have taken be the right one, the question of the liability of allottees will be narrowed to a single point. At all events, entertaining a very strong opinion upon it, we deem it to be our duty to submit it to the consideration of the readers of the LAW TIMES, than whom there could be no better judges of its worth.

THE INDEX LEGUM.

THE Index Legum, for the half-year ending the 1st of January last, is almost ready for the press, and will be issued in time to be bound with the volume of the LAW TIMES just completed. It will be stamped so as to be sent by post, and be contained, we hope, in about four numbers, perhaps in less. It will contain a full digest, arranged for practical convenience, of all the reports published during the half year, together with tables of the cases upon the statutes, and rules of Court, &c.

Readers desirous of adding to their volumes this ready reference to all the law of the half year, should send their orders immediately, as only a limited number will be printed.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

Our attention has been directed to the subjoined advertisement which appeared in the Times of Friday, the 27th ultimo. Should any of our readers have the means of informing us who the considerate gentleman is that thus invites employment, we shall deal with him as he deserves.

Railway Bubbles.—Parties being sued for pretended claims by railway projectors will be defended at a very trifling expense, by a gentleman of long standing in the profession. Apply to M. Y. Mr. Darcy's, 5, Buckingham-street, Strand.

SHAM LAWYERS.

ANOTHER of the fraternity which it is the aim of this Journal to suppress, we find exercising his powers of intimidation at Sunderland.

No. 1, East Cross-street, Sunderland.
March 6, 1846.

Madam,—I am instructed by Mr. Edward Bowmaker, of Sunderland-green, to apply to you for the payment of the sum of 2l. 9s. 3d. which you are indebted to him; and unless the same be paid to me, at my office, on or before Monday, the 9th inst. proceedings will be immediately taken, to enforce payment, without further notice.

ROBERT ROBSON, Sheriff's Officer.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Real Property Statutes of William IV. and Victoria, with Explanatory Notes, &c. By WILLIAM F. BROWELL, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1846. Spottiswoode.

ONE of the multitudinous editions of the recent real property statutes; but it possesses this peculiarity, that it collects all that have been passed during the last and present reigns. Mr. BROWELL has accompanied them with appropriate notes, afforded ready access to their contents by a copious index, and thus has produced a really useful volume.

The list of contents suggests some reflections on the attempts that have been made, with such doubtful success, to improve this branch of our law. Here are no less than twenty-five statutes avowedly framed for the purpose of reforming certain evils, whose existence nobody disputes, and yet which baffle the most sagacious lawyers when their removal is attempted. Of all these twenty-five Acts of Parliament, how many have accomplished the objects of the framers? Certainly not half a dozen. The Statute of Limitations has been an entire failure; it has not shortened titles; on the contrary, it has rather increased the lawyer's labour, and therefore the client's cost. The Fines and Recoveries Act has been more fortunate, but this has not done what it promised. As for the Acts of last session, they have failed altogether; where they do not positive mischief they are waste paper. The short forms of conveyancing are disregarded, and the Assignments of Terms Act is unintelligible.

What is the cause of this? Manifestly that our Law Reformers are tinkers, not manufacturers: they try to stop one hole in an old vessel, and they make twenty. Our law of real property is a system, and cannot be reformed in parts; it must be reconstructed or let alone; if they want the courage or ability to undertake the former, let them leave meddling with the latter. What better proof of their impotence than the Conveyancing Acts of last session, undoubtedly sound in principle, and which reason and common sense must approve. But they are neglected because they are made optional and not compulsory; because the form is changed without arrangements made for changing the mode of remuneration. If the Act had provided that Conveyancers should be paid by some other scale than length, their interest in hurry would have been the same as the client's. But our unspractical statesmen overlooked this, and their law is laughed at.

Perhaps the most interesting extract we can make from Mr. BROWELL's volume will be a portion of a letter from H. BELLENDEN KER, Esq. to the Lord Chancellor, upon the design and intended construction of the notorious Transfer of Property Act. It will help to explain the Amendment Act.

My Lord,—In compliance with your lordship's direction, I have, in conjunction with Mr. Hayes and Mr. Christie, revised the Act passed in the last session "for simplifying the Transfer of Property," (7 & 8 Vict. c. 76.) Though most of the various objects which that Act embraces are of a practical and beneficial character, and ought to be included in any comprehensive scheme for ameliorating the law of property, yet the apparent inexpediency of some of its provisions, except, perhaps, as parts of such a scheme, and the confessedly imperfect frame of others, induce us to recommend, as the clearest and safest course, that the Act should be wholly repealed, and the clauses of which the policy is unexceptionable be re-enacted in a different form.

We are quite sensible of the difficulty and danger attending any attempt at legislation on detached points of a complicated system, especially where the proposed changes tend to contradict principles on which that system is based; and we have, therefore, approached the subject not without considerable diffidence. The conviction that such partial remedies cannot be too cautiously applied, has induced us to review the Act with the intention, first, of confining it to points which may safely admit of being thus separately treated; and, secondly, of legislating upon those points with greater accuracy and perspicuity. But although we have prepared the Bill now submitted to your lordship, after the merits and defects of the existing Act had been amply discussed by the Profession, it is yet very possible that we may have failed, either to select for omission the objectionable portions only, or to enhance, by alterations in arrangement and expression, the practical value of the rest. The result, indeed, of some recent statutes has shown that the most elaborate enactments differ from the least accurate only in the degree of help which they require from judicial exposition.

There are two sections of the Transfer Act which it is proposed altogether to omit:—

1st. The ninth section, enabling the executor or administrator of a mortgagee to convey the legal estate outstanding in his real representative.

2ndly. The tenth section, enabling trustees and others to give discharges for moneys.

1st. As regards the ninth section, which provides for the conveyance of a mortgaged estate by the executor or administrator of the mortgagee, the design is good; but it is so imperfectly carried out by the very limited terms of the enactment, that practically the power is attended with very little real advantage. It is necessary, for the purposes of title, to ascertain that possession has not been taken, that no action or suit is pending, and that the legal estate is vested in the real representative of the mortgagee; for a mere negative allegation of these facts in a deed of conveyance would not satisfy a purchaser. But it is obvious that the necessity of proving these facts, and particularly the fact of the legal estate being vested in the real representative (the very difficulty often being that the heir is unknown), destroys, in a great measure, the utility of the enactment. The clause, besides, authorises a conveyance only on actual payment to the executor or administrator of the whole debt;—not extending to a conveyance on part payment or a conveyance under any arrangement for exonerating the whole or part of the lands without payment; nor to cases where the money has been paid in the mortgagee's lifetime, or the executor has received the money at a former period, or has accounted to a bequest of, or has assigned the debt. And, moreover, as the power—a bare statutory authority—is not conferred on the proving executor alone, it might be considered (though not, we think, on a just view of the provision) necessary to its due execution, that an executor who had not proved, or had even renounced the probate, should join—a possible construction, which would not only narrow still further the range of the power, but probably implicate many titles depending on the contrary assumption. Another more material objection arises from the want of a precise definition of what shall, for the purposes of the Act, be considered as falling within the term "mortgage"—a term which, taken according to its strict legal acceptation, would exclude a large proportion of the transactions comprehended under the popular meaning of that term, and clearly within the mischief sought to be remedied by the clause in question. Such a definition should, therefore, be given as would extend the benefit of the enactment to all cases where, according to the rules of a court of equity, a party is entitled to call for a conveyance of any property, pledged or charged as a security for money, on satisfaction of the debt; whether the security be in the form of a mortgage, to which the right of foreclosure is incident, or of a conveyance to the creditor or his trustee upon trust to sell, or in any other form whatever. Some method, too, more satisfactory than the use of such terms as "his executor or administrator," should be devised for ascertaining the person by whom, in every possible state of circumstances, the act is to be performed; for it is only by the expression of a rule of law in general and comprehensive terms, that there can be any reasonable hope of attaining completeness or certainty. Then, as regards the principle involved in this section of the Act, if it be fit that a mortgagee's executor or administrator (who, after being paid in full, has no further interest in the matter, and who, as he might, be it observed, have recovered the debt, although unable to make or procure a re-conveyance of the estate, may refuse to exercise the statutory power, vested in him as a mere instrument for the convenience of others) should be enabled by his act to denude the heir or devisee of the legal estate, and vest it in the mortgagee or his nominee, it must a fortiori be fit that the unpaid executor or administrator should be enabled to command the legal estate for the purposes of the security and the better administration of that portion of the assets of his testator or intestate. It can hardly be contended that the equity of the executor or administrator to have the full benefit of the unsatisfied and forfeited mortgage is not as strong and as urgent at least, as the equity of the mortgagee to have the full benefit of the redemption. In each case the same principle applies; and that principle, fairly carried out, would require that every person entitled to call for the legal estate should be enabled to obtain it with as little difficulty and expense as may be consistent with safety to the right parties and with the maintenance of the distinction between the jurisdictions of law and equity. In the actual state of the law, there are three modes by which a party equitably entitled may get in the legal estate—1st. By obtaining, often at a great expense, often on imperfect evidence, which leaves the title open to question—a conveyance from the party in whom the estate is actually vested, if competent and willing to convey it. 2ndly. In certain cases of incapacity, absence or refusal, by the still more costly remedy of an order of the Court of Chancery, made on a summary application by petition, pursuant to the Acts relating to infant trustees, &c. but which application involves a reference to the Master, with all its consequences. 3rdly. In cases not within those Acts (which are crippled by many unnecessary exceptions), at a still greater expense, by means of a suit in equity regularly instituted. Now all the cases to which the above Acts extend fall within the principle of the power in question enabling the executor or administrator of a mortgagee to convey; and that principle once admitted should be adopted to its fullest extent, unless it can be shown that its general adoption would be productive of inconvenience. But if the general power were so framed as to make its exercise dependent on the fact of the right in equity to call for the legal estate being really in the party who makes the disposition, no undue advantage would be obtained, while the title would be relieved from the necessity which at present exists of proving that the legal estate is vested in the party by whom (or by whose substitute) it is assumed to be conveyed. Having arrived at the conclusion that a free, yet well-considered application of the principle already admitted by the Legislature is of the very essence of a wise and just amendment of the law of real property, no attempt has been made to fit the existing clause to the particular case at which it is aimed. If, however, it should be deemed expedient to make a partial application of the principle—to amend the law by engrafting upon it an anomalous provision—the ninth section of the Transfer Act may be so modified as to attain more perfectly the very limited objects of its framers. Though these observations are applied to outstanding legal fees, yet the mischief extends to outstanding terms of years, which, notwithstanding all the remonstrances of the Profession and the practial examples afforded by every railway Act of the summary abatement of those nuisances, remain to this day a fertile source of expense, difficulty, and delay, in the deduction of titles to real estates.

Secondly, As regards the tenth section, which enacts that the payment to, and the receipt of, any person to whom any money shall be payable, or any express or implied trust, shall be a discharge, it is conceived that it never could have been in the contemplation of the framers of the Act to render in equity the receipt of the person entitled at law under every trust whatsoever (whether merely implied or otherwise) an effectual discharge to the party paying. The effect of this new rule, if carried to its fullest extent, would be to alter essentially one of the most important principles of a court of equity. It is conceived that the rule was intended to remedy an inconvenience of a much narrower extent. In equity the person beneficially entitled is the person to concur in directing the payment to the trustee, except where the cestui que trust is unascertained or incompetent, or where there is some trust shewing that the trustee was to have the money at his disposal for a particular purpose (as that of re-investment, &c.), or where there is an express declaration absolving the person paying from seeing to the disposition of the money. The rules as to the liability of a party paying money to a trustee, without the concurrence of the cestui que trust, to see the money duly applied, have varied, and are not yet precisely defined. To avoid any question, it has been usual to accompany a trust for sale, &c. with a declaration that the receipt of the trustee shall be a sufficient discharge. This occasionally is omitted, and thence a difficulty may arise, either in ascertaining whether the party paying is or is not bound to see to the ultimate disposition of the money, or in procuring the concurrence of the party entitled, who may be abroad, &c. The evil goes to this extent only; but the remedy is far more extensive, and is one which a very slight consideration will shew the danger of adopting. There can be no question but that it would be desirable to supply a fit remedy, by carefully ascertaining the state of the law as regards any discrepancies or uncertainties, and removing them, and so to extend the rule as to obviate all practical inconvenience. Perhaps a rule which, with some modifications, should give every trustee having an express power to sell or raise money an authority to give a receipt for it, would be advisable. And such a rule would be consistent with the 30th Order in Chancery, which renders it unnecessary to make the cestui que trust parties to a suit where there are trustees competent to sell and give receipts; but if the clause as it stands in the Act were to remain, it would of necessity lead to an alteration of the practice; and in all cases where there was a trustee of money, under any trust direct or implied, it would become unnecessary to make the persons interested parties. The remainder of the section refers to the receipts of the survivors of mortgagees being effectual discharges. Similar objections apply to this branch of the clause. Trustees often lend money on mortgage, and take the security to themselves as joint tenants, not noticing the trusts in the deed; but generally there is inserted a declaration that the receipt of the survivor shall be a discharge, thus negating the equitable tenancy in common. When this declaration is omitted, and a trustee dies, it becomes necessary to shew the trust of the money, and the power of the surviving trustee to give a receipt for it; and this evidence becomes part of the mortgagor's title. It was to remove this inconvenience that the clause was framed; but it goes far beyond the evil in question, by making the receipts of the survivor of all mortgagees who are at law joint tenants, sufficient. Now in practice many persons, not trustees, &c. take securities in joint tenancy; and it would seem very inexpedient thus to repeal generally the salutary equitable rule as regards these securities, and to allow the survivor to possess himself of the whole funds, without the concurrence of the representatives of the other equitable tenant in common. Supposing, however, that this part of the clause is retained, the expression of the rule in the statute being inaccurate, it would require considerable alteration.

As these two sections involve great and extended alterations of the law, without supplying any complete or careful expression of the rules, it has been thought necessary to explain at length the reasons for omitting them from the proposed Bill.

In the preparation of this Bill very little more has been attempted than a re-enactment, in terms more precise and apt, of the clauses of the existing Act. If it had not been considered expedient to confine the present Bill to a re-enactment of the clauses of that Act, except as above stated, and if there had been sufficient time, it is conceived that much advantage might have been derived from enactments which would remove many of the inconveniences arising from the present state of the law relating to the transfer of property. There are many points, in addition to those relating to outstanding legal estates, already adverted to, as to which enactments might be framed calculated to effect a great diminution of expense in tracing titles. The whole law relating to judgments is very confused and obscure, and the law relating to covenants might be altered with advantage. A reference to the reports of the Real Property Commissioners will fully prove that much yet remains to be done towards simplifying the transfer of, and removing various difficulties relating to the evidence of the title to real property.

The Law and Practice of Railway and other Private Bills, &c. By JAMES J. SCOTT, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1846. Richards. Pp. 662.

Railway Parliamentary Practice; with an Appendix, containing the standing Orders of both Houses of Parliament relating to Railways, &c. By HENRY RIDDELL, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1846. Benning and Co. Pp. 352.

THE flood of railway Bills with which the Parliament is well-nigh overwhelmed has suggested the two volumes whose titles appear above, each having for its object to instruct those to whom the conduct of Bills is intrusted in the art and mystery of preparing and carrying them through both Houses of Parliament. Mr. SCOTT's is the most elaborate; Mr. RIDDELL's, the most compact. But perhaps the fairest course towards both of these gentlemen will be to describe the most prominent features of each of the rival volumes, leaving it to the reader's judgment to determine which is best adapted to his wants or his means.

Mr. SCOTT divides his treatise into three parts. The first part is devoted to the proceedings prior to the introduction of private Bills into Parliament. It is subdivided into two chapters, which describe successively the preliminary proceedings for establishing railway companies, and the proceedings requisite before presenting petition for Bill to Parliament. The second part details the order of proceedings in the House of Commons, with notes illustrative of such proceedings, and then the order of proceedings in the Lords. The third and last part contains the special proceedings in Parliament, as altered for the practice of the present session, and forms the most valuable, because the most original portion of the work. To make the treatise as useful as possible to the practitioner, Mr. SCOTT has introduced maps of plans and sections, as required by the Standing Orders, and an appendix of special Acts of Parliament.

Mr. SCOTT has used great diligence in the collection of his materials, and his volume will be a useful hand-book for all interested in parliamentary practice.

From the very nature of the subject, nothing offers of sufficient interest to the reader to justify extract at this season, when there are so many other urgent claims upon our columns.

Mr. RIDDELL's plan is to describe the course of a railway Bill, from the time when a petition is presented to the House of Commons for leave to bring it in, to the time when it is ready to receive the royal assent; for this purpose he enumerates and explains the several proceedings enjoined by the Standing Orders of both Houses of Parliament on the promoters of the Bill, at each distinct stage thereof. The Standing Orders are conveniently arranged in the order in which Committees usually take the proofs of compliance; the evidence required for proving such compliance is stated after the Standing Order that enjoins it, and after each Standing Order the cases in which questions either as to the construction of or compliance with such order may have arisen, are stated, together with the decisions which have been given thereon by committees. A chapter is devoted to the proceedings connected with postponed railways; another contains a succinct statement of the evidence required to support the preamble of a railway Bill; and a third explains the present mode of taxing and recovering costs in Parliament.

Mr. RIDDELL has devoted special attention to a topic involved in much obscurity—to wit, that of parliamentary locus standi. He has collected the decisions on this point with much care, and, with great acuteness, endeavoured to deduce from them something like the principles which appeared to guide the judgments of the various committees.

This description of Mr. RIDDELL's treatise will suffice to satisfy the experienced practitioner that it is the production of one who understands the art of making a law-book. The materials are well put together; they follow in a natural order, and everything is to be found in its proper place. It offers just what the man of business wants, and encourages him with no reprints of statutes, or matters not immediately connected with the subject. Hence it is that a neat small volume is made to contain as much actual information as can be found in works very much more bulky.

Gladly would we transfer to our columns the new and useful chapter on Parliamentary Locus Standi; but its length forbids, and we have endeavoured in vain to select parts which would be intelligible of themselves. We must, therefore, refer our readers to the volume for this information, and we can do so with confidence that they will not be disappointed.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Thursday, Feb. 12.

RIGBY v. RIGBY.

Practice—Pleading—Discovery of documents, &c.
The plaintiff's bill contained an allegation of his title to an estate (the subject-matter of the suit), and prayed an account of the rents and a discovery of documents, &c. relating to the estate. One of the defendants pleaded in bar to the relief, and to a discovery of documents relating to the rents, setting forth in his answer a list of all the documents "in his possession or power relating to any of the matters in the said bill mentioned," except such documents as related exclusively to rents. Upon the ground that the documents in question might, in their recitals, contain information to which the plaintiff was entitled on other points, the plea was overruled generally.

The plaintiff, John Rigby, in his bill, stated "that his uncle, John Rigby, after surrendering certain copyholds to the use of his will dated 22nd January, 1812, directed the trustee therein named to stand fined and seised of all his aforesaid surrendered copyhold estates in trust for the use of his brothers, William Rigby and Thomas Rigby, from and after his decease, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common and not as joint tenants during their natural lives, and to and for the use of the survivor of them during the natural life of such survivor, and, from and after the decease of such survivor, in trust for the use of his nephew John Rigby and his heirs and assigns. The testator died in 1812, and besides the said William Rigby and Thomas Rigby, the testator had two other brothers, one who died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving a son, John Rigby, the defendant, and another, Henry Rigby, the father of John Rigby, the plaintiff. The bill stated the respective deaths of Henry Rigby, William Rigby, and Thomas Rigby, and that since the death of Thomas Rigby the defendant, John Rigby, had continued in possession of the said copyhold estates, and charged that the defendants had in their possession documents, &c. relating to the matters aforesaid, and whereby if produced, the truth thereof would appear." And prayed that it might be declared that the said testator by his nephew John Rigby, in the said will named, meant the plaintiff, and not the defendant John Rigby, and that the plaintiff might be declared entitled to the said copyhold estates, and prayed an account of the rents and profits of the said copyhold estates since the decease of the said Thomas Rigby.

To this bill the defendant John Rigby put in a plea and answer, whereby he pleaded in bar to all the relief prayed, and to so much of the discovery as asked for an account of the rents and profits, and as required, the discovery or production of documents relating to the receipt or application of the rents and profits of the said copyhold estates or some part thereof since the death of the said Thomas Rigby; and for plea saying that he the defendant was the testator's nephew John Rigby in the said will named. To certain other parts of the bill the defendant John Rigby answered as follows, that in a schedule to his answer annexed he had "set forth a full and true list of all the documents now in his possession or power, relating to any of the matters in the said bill mentioned, with the exception of such documents in his possession or power, as related exclusively to the rents and profits of the said copyhold estates or some part or parts thereof received by this defendant since the death of the said Thomas Rigby, or to the personal occupation of the same estates, or to some part or parts thereof by this defendant since the death of the said Thomas Rigby." And save as in the said schedule mentioned, the defendant denied the possession of any documents, &c., "relating to the matters, or any matter in the said bill mentioned, whereby, if the same were produced, the truth of such matters, or any of them, would appear, except documents relating exclusively to rents and profits so received by the defendant since the death of the said Thomas Rigby as aforesaid, or to the personal occupation by the defendant since the death of the said Thomas Rigby, of the said copyhold estates and premises, or some part or parts thereof." Jas. Parker and Ran. Palmer, in support of the plea.—The statements in the bill may be divided into two parts. The one which relates to the identity of the individuals who claim the property, which must be answered; the other part is consequential upon that, and against which we claim a right of protecting ourselves. This is a case where one party, a total stranger, asks for an account of the rents and profits of a gentleman's estate. The plea ought not to be disregarded by the Court, inasmuch as it proffers a fair issue as to identity.

Robson, for the bill, contended that the plea was not in fairness an insurable plea; and that it only aimed to protect the defendants from a discovery of the documents which related to the rents and profits; and might contain incidental information by rentals, &c., to which the plaintiff was justly entitled.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The bill contains a general allegation that the defendants are in possession of documents relating to the matters aforesaid. Your plea goes to the whole relief, and so much of the discovery as prays an account of the rents and profits. Can this be taken as a division of the bill into two parts? The documents, as you state them, are not divided into two parts, since they all relate to some of the matters aforesaid.

J. Parker.—I have a right to protect myself from the production of documents relating to the discovery covered by the plea, if I produce all those which relate to the other matters mentioned in the bill. We gave the plaintiff all such documents as do not relate exclusively to rents and profits.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I do not understand what is meant by the expression "exclusively," for although it may be taken as signifying a deed which did relate to the rents and profits exclusively, yet there may be contained in that same instrument recitals or descriptions of parties, which might afford information to which the plaintiff is entitled. The plea avers that the defendant is the party named in the bill as the testator's nephew, John Rigby; still the plaintiff is entitled to a discovery of the rents and profits, and all that you allege is, that you have set forth in a schedule all that do not relate exclusively to the rents and profits. You then ask protection from discovery of the documents which relate to the rents and profits. The circumstance of the defendant's being entitled, affords no reason why he should not make a discovery of those deeds which relate to the rents and profits.

Plea overruled, without leave to stand for answer.

BOSTOCK v. SHAW.

Practice—Parties—Fraudulent Settlement—Representatives of Settlor.

To a bill filed for the purpose of impeaching a settlement on the ground of fraud, an objection was raised for want of the representatives of the settlor. Held, that such representatives were unnecessary parties.

The bill stated that one Robert Bennett, for securing the repayment of a sum of 180*l.* to the plaintiffs, deposited with them in July, 1840, a certain lease, and at the same time gave them a written memorandum of the transaction. The plaintiffs, at the request of Robert Bennett, advanced the further sum of 30*l.* and received another memorandum at the foot of the former one; that an indenture of settlement was alleged to have been made, dated the 24th Sept. 1838, whereby the said Robert Bennett professed to assign to Joshua Shaw, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the premises comprised in the said lease upon certain trusts, for the benefit of the said Robert Bennett, Mary Ann Bennett, his wife, and William Bennett and Mary Ann Bennett, his two children, and all and every other child and children of the said Robert Bennett and Mary Ann Bennett the elder, as therein mentioned; that, until the month of August, 1844, the plaintiffs had never heard or had any suspicion that the said Robert Bennett had made any such settlement; that the plaintiffs were purchasers for valuable consideration of the said leasehold premises to the extent of 170*l.* and interest; and that the said indenture of 24th September, 1838, was a voluntary settlement, and fraudulent and void against the plaintiffs as such purchasers, as aforesaid; that in June, 1845, the said Robert Bennett died.

The bill was filed against Joshua Shaw, Mary Ann Bennett, the elder, William Bennett and Mary Ann Bennett, the younger, praying that the said indenture of 24th Sept. 1838, might be declared fraudulent and void against the plaintiffs, and that the said defendants might be declared only entitled to the said leasehold premises, subject to the aforesaid equitable mortgage, and that the defendants might be decreed to pay to the plaintiffs what should be found due on taking an account of principal and interest. The defendants now objected that the representatives of Robert Bennett, the settlor, ought to be made parties, and upon this objection the cause was set down (a).

Tennent, in support of the objection, contended, that the plaintiffs did not positively state that there is such an indenture of settlement, but simply this, namely it is alleged that there is; and there exists no instance in which the Court has gone to the extent of declaring an instrument fraudulent in the absence of the party making it.

Piggott, for the plaintiffs, stated, that the settlor had by the settlement made an absolute assignment of all his interest to the defendants.

His HONOUR thought, that, looking at the whole record, whatever infirmity there might have been in the allegations contained in the bill, it was sufficient that the substantial question was, whether the settlement should stand good as against the mortgagees. If not, his opinion was, that the bill might stand without the settlor's representatives, and therefore overruled the objection.

Re RICHARDSON.

Solicitor's bill of costs—Delivery—Taxation—Paying over trust money—Delivery of papers.

Four persons having taken a conveyance of property claimed by a fifth, for the purpose of raising money to prosecute his claims, employed a solicitor, and deposited the money &c. with him; three of the trustees, together with the cestui que trust, having employed another solicitor, applied to the Court to order the delivery of the former solicitor's bill, and to refer it for taxation, they undertaking to pay what should be found due. The former solicitor was forbidden by the fourth trustee to deliver his bill, pay over the money, or deliver up the papers. The Court ordered the delivery of the bill and taxation, reserving all other questions and also costs, and permitting the solicitor to review his bill, though made out fully, if not actually delivered.

One William Mobbs having, or conceiving himself to have, a right to certain property, but not having the means of asserting his rights, arranged with four persons to become trustees for him of the property for the purpose of raising money to prosecute his claims. The trustees appointed Mr. Richardson their solicitor, and certain moneys which had been raised, as well as papers, were deposited in Mr. Richardson's hands. Three of the trustees, together with the cestui que trust, having thought fit to change their solicitor, demanded his bill of costs from Mr. Richardson, together with an account of the money transactions, and a delivery of the papers, and he having refused, Mobbs presented a petition to that effect, which was dismissed. The present petition did not, as before, ask for the money in his hands, but only for the delivery of his bill, and an order for its taxation when delivered, &c. they undertaking to pay what should be found due.

Shaper, for the petitioners, read the affidavits, and stated that Thomas Smith, the other trustee, would not join.

Kinderley, contra, said that the respondent was willing to deliver his bill, and to comply with the wishes of the petitioners; but he held a sum of money which had been borrowed to prosecute the suit of Mobbs, and there were also papers in his hands, and he was directed by Thomas Smith not to give up either the money or the papers, inasmuch as Smith was liable to other persons from whom the money was borrowed. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—That can be discussed and settled hereafter, if only the delivery and taxation of the bill be ordered now.] The controversy is between the three trustees and cestui que trust on the one hand, and the remaining trustee on the other.

Moore, for Thomas Smith, said, he considered him-

(a) This was under the 30th Order, 26th August, 1841, which directs, "that when the defendant shall, by his answer, suggest that the bill is defective for want of parties, the plaintiff shall be at liberty, within fourteen days after answer filed, to set the cause down for argument upon that objection only; and the purport for which the same is so set down shall be notified by an entry to be made in the Registrar's Book, in the form or to the effect following (that is to say), 'Set down, upon the defendant's objection for want of parties,' and that where the plaintiff shall not so set down his cause, but shall proceed therewith to a hearing, notwithstanding an objection for want of parties taken by the answer, he shall not, at the hearing of the cause, if the defendant's objection shall then be allowed, be entitled as of course to an order for liberty to amend his bill by adding parties; but the Court, if it thinks fit, shall be at liberty to dismiss the bill."

self only liable, but that the others, though they said they were, really were not liable.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said, he understood that the four trustees employed the solicitor, and it had not been denied. He would therefore order the bill to be delivered and taxed, and would reserve all other questions, which, if he could, on the jurisdiction he then exercised, he would consider. If the bill had not been delivered, though fully made out, the solicitor might review it, and he allowed him six weeks to deliver it.

BRADSTOCK v. WHATLEY.

Consent to pass decree—Change of solicitor—Irregularity—Order to restore solicitor.

It being necessary to have the consent of a defendant, who had not been properly served, to the passing of a decree, so as to make it binding, application was made to the solicitor of one set of defendants, of whom this defendant was one, to act, but he refusing to do so, the solicitor of the plaintiffs having got the defendant's signature to a consent to pass the decree, obtained an order making himself solicitor of the defendant in place of his own solicitor, and the decree was passed. The defendant having moved to discharge the order for changing the solicitor, it was ordered, not that the order should be discharged, but that the original solicitor should be the solicitor on the record, and the costs should fall on the plaintiff. In this case Ann Whatley, one of a set of defendants, made so at the hearing, being found in the registrar's office not to have been duly served, it was necessary to have her appearance and consent to the passing of the decree, in order to make it binding upon her; and for that purpose application was made to her solicitor, who was the solicitor of her co-defendants, to act for her; but he refusing to do so, she was applied to by a solicitor on behalf of the plaintiffs to sign a paper in presence of her son, whereby she consented to the passing of the decree. The solicitor for the plaintiffs having obtained this consent, was doubtful how he should proceed upon it, but, acting on advice, he got the common order to change solicitors, substituting himself in the place of the defendant's solicitor. This it was thought necessary to do in order to avail himself of the defendant's consent, for no one but the solicitor on the record for the time being acting for the defendant could give instructions to counsel, or take any step on her behalf, and so the consent would be inoperative, if acted on by the solicitor for the plaintiffs as such. The decree was accordingly passed, Mrs. Whatley assenting thereto by her new solicitor. The matter, however, coming to her knowledge, and that of her own solicitor, they were both dissatisfied; and hence the present motion to discharge the common order to change solicitors, which, if successful, would be equivalent to setting aside the decree. The motion was opposed, therefore, by the plaintiffs, and it was alleged at the bar, though there was no affidavit to that effect, that the plaintiff's solicitor had proposed to the defendant's solicitor to obtain the common order to restore him, and that this suggestion was made before the notice of motion. On the other hand, Mrs. Whatley, as well as her son, in whose presence and with whose approbation the consent was given, denied that anything had ever been said to them about a change of solicitors, and if they had known it was intended, the consent would not have been given.

Turner (with him Borrell) contended that the order to change solicitors had been improperly obtained, and ought to be discharged. Mrs. Whatley was not told, nor was her son, that the change was intended to be made, or she would not have agreed to it.

Kindersley (with him Pitman) said his clients had no objection to obtain the common order to restore the defendant's solicitor, and a suggestion of that kind had been made to the other side before motion, but there was no affidavit of it. The order was, to appear for Mrs. Whatley and consent to the passing of the decree, and her solicitor refusing to do so, her consent was obtained by the plaintiffs; but as no solicitor can give authority to counsel except the solicitor on the record, it was therefore thought necessary to go through the form of changing the solicitor. This, it is said, was wrong, and the defendant says she never consented to it; but if the only way of making the consent she gave operative was by changing the solicitor, it is clear she virtually assented to that step. The plaintiff's solicitor had no objection to pay for the common order to change solicitors, the cost of which is 7s.; and also for another order to restore the defendant's solicitor; but it is submitted he ought not to pay more.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It seems this lady was one of a set of defendants who were brought before the Court at the hearing, and that she could not be duly served. This being discovered in the registrar's office, application was made to the solicitor of these defendants to appear and consent for her to the passing of the decree; but he refused to do so, and the decree, if passed, would not therefore be binding on his clients. Application was then made through a son of the defendant for her consent, and it was accordingly given in his presence and with his approbation; but the question was, how to proceed after having got it. The plaintiff's solicitor says it would have been useless for him to proceed unless he was the solicitor on the record, and so, after taking advice, he got himself substituted for the purpose of giving the consent and authorising the passing of the decree. It would have been better if he had told the lady of the difficulty, and prevailed upon her to give a peremptory order to her solicitor or to some one else to appear for her; he did not do so, however, but at the same time he did not act on his own authority without advice which appeared satisfactory. Well, having got himself substituted as solicitor, and having appeared and consented, he was functus officio. Inquiries having been made by the defendant's solicitor, who was desirous of communicating with Mrs. Whatley, he finds himself displaced, and wants to know how he is to get out of the difficulty, and it occurs to him that the only way is to obtain an order to discharge the order for a change of solicitors. Now that is not a proper order; for if he had done what the other party did, there would have been no occasion for the change. First, then, no costs must fall upon this lady in consequence of the proper effort made by the plaintiff's solicitor to supply the defect of her non-appearance. On the other hand, as she did consent to pass the decree, let it not be disturbed. The proper order is, that the defendant's original solicitor shall be the solicitor on the record, and the costs to fall on the plaintiffs.

GOLDING v. CASTLE.

General Orders—Master's finding—Master's duty on a reference to him—Inconvenience of his not drawing a conclusion.

The 48th General Order of August, 1841, requires the Master not to insert states of facts, &c. in his reports, but to refer to them merely; and the Master ought to come to a conclusion on the matters submitted to him as well as that the parties may have the opportunity of excepting to his report, as that the Court may have the benefit of his finding. And where, in a report, the Master had set forth a full state of facts, &c. and had come to no conclusion upon them, the Court referred the report back to him to review it.

This was an administration suit, and, by the decree made at the hearing, it was ordered that it should be referred to the Master to inquire who were the next of kin of the testator, and to ascertain whether any and what debts were due to his estate from a particular defendant therein named; also to inquire who were interested in the residuary estate, and whether any and what proceedings ought to be taken to get it in or otherwise in respect thereof, with liberty to state special circumstances. The matter having come before the Master, and the executors having carried in certain states of facts, and having produced several affidavits relating to the debts in question, the Master set them out in his report at full length, notwithstanding the 48th General Order of August, 1841, which directs that states of facts, &c. shall not be set out, but only referred to. The Master also found some debts due, but he left it for the consideration and direction of the Court whether any proceedings ought to be taken by the executors to recover and get in the residuary estate. The report was duly confirmed, and the cause now came on upon further directions; but the attention of the Court being drawn to the report, the further hearing was directed to stand over.

The MASTER of the ROLLS observed that the Master had, in violation of the rule of Court, founded on the General Orders, set out in full the states of facts, affidavits, &c. which had been carried in before him, and, besides, had come to no conclusion respecting the matters submitted to him. He had never seen a greater departure from the rules of the Court in the form of a Master's report. It was of the utmost importance that the rules of the Court should be adhered to; and the interest of the parties in the cause, as well as of the suitors in general, required that they should be so. The Master in this case had come to no conclusion, and the parties were therefore deprived of the opportunity of excepting to the report, and the Court was deprived of the benefit of the Master's finding on the facts and evidence before him. He was unwilling to increase the expense, but he could not adjudicate on a report in this state. He would therefore discharge the Order confirming the Master's report, and refer it back to the Master to review it, so far as related to the points on which he had come to no conclusion.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Monday, March 9.

GOODWIN v. GOSNELL.

Misconduct of solicitor.

Where, upon the pleadings in a suit, the conduct of a solicitor, who was a defendant, appeared to have been grossly improper, the Court, after disposing of the case, ordered that the solicitor should, by a certain day, shew cause why his name should not be struck off the rolls.

This suit was instituted against the executor of a will and Mr. George Price Hill, his solicitor, for the purpose of having a sum of stock, which had been improperly sold out, replaced. The allegations of the bill were substantially admitted by the answers. The conduct of Mr. George Price Hill, as it appeared upon the pleadings, formed the principal subject of discussion, and after the other parts of the case had been disposed of,

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, I have now so far disposed of the cause. I must do more. An old man, in a lowly class of society, a Worcestershire peasant, scarcely or not at all above the station of a farm labourer, happens to be a trustee under a farmer's will, of a sum of stock amounting to 650l. Three per Cent. Consols, for the benefit of the Goodwin family, who are infants—for the benefit, probably, of unborn persons. The stock stands in the name of the testator, and is bequeathed to his sole acting executor and trustee, for the benefit of the children, and that bequest of the stock is for this purpose a specific bequest, and has been assented to. I must, upon the evidence, consider the trust as fixed, and the fund as clear, except that the legacy-duty, amounting to 1l. per cent. which makes the amount something less than 8l. has not at this time been paid. In this state of things the old man, the trustee, seems to have received the ordinary application from the legacy-duty office, as I collect, on the subject of the duty, and to have consulted Mr. Hill, a solicitor, upon it. Mr. Hill advises him to sell the whole of the stock. I desire now not to be understood as adopting the evidence of Mr. Gibbon, a witness in the cause. I do not put it so unfavourably to Mr. Hill as that evidence does. He advises him to sell the whole of the stock, the will giving no authority for this purpose. This advice was plainly unjustifiable, and most manifestly unwarranted. Perhaps it might not have been wrong to sell, or to advise the sale of, a specific part of the stock to pay the duty, but for that object certainly not so much as 15l. could have been wanted. I am bound to attribute to Mr. Hill a knowledge of the title to the stock in question, of the circumstances of that title, and also a knowledge of the nature of the advice he gave. I cannot, upon the evidence before me, ascribe to the trustee a sufficient degree of knowledge or information to enable him to judge whether the advice given him was right or wrong. The trustee follows the advice. Mr. Hill causes a blank power of attorney to be prepared in favour of his London agent, Mr. Smith; it is sent down to Mr. Hill, who procured its execution by the trustee, and then sent it back to London, where the agent, Mr. Smith, under Mr. Hill's direction, acted upon it by selling out the stock and paying the clear proceeds, amounting to more than 590l. sterling into a London banking-house, to the credit of Mr. Hill's account with a country bank, by which transaction the clear produce of the whole sale found its way into the name and into the power of Mr. Hill, and in fact came into his hands. It is unnecessary to characterise such a transaction. But the matter does not end here. Mr. Hill afterwards dealt with the money, and in doing so it was materially at his peril, by lending it, or representing himself to have lent it, on a security on which (even supposing, as I collect, the will had authorised a sale) it would have been unwarrantable and improper in its nature to have lent it upon. He misapplied grossly, and represents himself to have misapplied grossly, in some other manner, the remainder of the money, and claimed all, or nearly all, the remainder, as being due to him for charges of an unreasonable nature, at least in part, and with which, as to part, the persons who were beneficially interested in the fund could have nothing to do. He prepared, and caused to be executed, a release to himself in respect of these transactions. What would have been the right mode of dealing with or viewing conduct such as this, had the trustee been a person of education, or a man capable of protecting himself, I need not say. Upon the evidence before me, I believe that the trustee here was a helpless and ignorant instrument—a mere instrument in the hands of Mr. Hill, without any judgment, or with scarcely more judgment or volition for any effectual, substantial, or useful purpose, in this matter, than the pen with which he was made to sign his name. It has been said of other persons, and in other instances, and it may be said of Mr. Hill and of this case, that the regret that a professional man should have so conducted himself is only equalled by the wonder that, as he has the means of preventing this transaction from being brought under public observation, he should have allowed it to go forth to the world as he has. None of the parties interested have made any application against him except by the institution of this suit. I see no reason for supposing Mr. Hill to be unable to satisfy the pecuniary demand which the plaintiffs have upon him, if it had not been necessary that the case should come before the Court. As it is, however, unfortunately the case has come before the Court, and it is now judicially before me, and my understanding of the duty I owe to this profession and society prohibits me from treating it as not containing any thing beyond a mere matter of civil litigation. If a solicitor by his employment professionally on behalf of an ignorant man, and by means of the confidence reposed in him by his client—by means of information given him by the client—is enabled to acquire, and using those means for the purpose of acquiring, does acquire by them, from the client, the property of others for whom the client is trustee, and to whom he is answerable for it—if the solicitor thus acquires, and I do not merely say unduly, I do not merely say unjustly, and for an improper purpose, but in a manner which the solicitor must have known to be improper and unfair, for purposes which he must have known to be manifestly unjustifiable—if, having done so, the solicitor actually does misapply the property so unduly acquired, and if the purpose for which, and the manner in which, he so misapplies it, is to any extent substantially for his own private advantage, benefit, or profit, and if the client so relying upon the solicitor is a person by education and station so incapable of forming a correct estimate of the propriety or impropriety of the act of the other as to be substantially a mere instrument or machine in his hands, used by him as I have said, I am not prepared to say that such a professional man ought to remain a solicitor of any court. Assuming the act of acquiring property under such circumstances not to amount to an indictable offence, I do not see any other reason than that against the substantial applicability to him of a term or terms more ordinarily and familiarly in use in jurisdictions of a kind differing from this, and which I need not more specifically express. As I am to my great regret unable to say that the materials before me do not afford a probable ground for apprehending the supposed case, which I have been mentioning, to be a substantially correct description of Mr. Hill's conduct in respect of the 650*l.* stock, and its produce, and, therefore, for questioning the propriety of the continuance of Mr. Hill as an officer of the court, I should in my judgment, considering the nature of the case, be deserting one of the most important duties belonging to the judicial office, were I not to order, as I now do, that Mr. Hill do shew cause, on some future day to be now fixed, why, having regard to his answer and to the evidence in this cause, his name should not be struck of the roll of solicitors of the Court of Chancery.

The second day of Easter Term was then fixed for Mr. Hill to shew cause.

Russell, Goodere, Renshaw, Wigram, and Rogers were the counsel for the several parties.

Saturday, March 14.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that a somewhat similar order to that which he had made in this case, had been made in 1794, in Dungey v. Angom. The order in the registrar's book (5th August, 1794; A. 1793, fol. 542), appeared to be as follows:—"And it is further ordered that the said Anthony Stevenson be struck off the roll of solicitors of this court unless he shall, on the first day of next Michaelmas Term, shew unto this Court good cause to the contrary."

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Monday, March 2.

WALFORD v. ADIE.

ADIE v. WALFORD.

Joint Stock Company—Liability—Member of Committee—Sale of shares—Embarrassment—Fraud.

A member of the committee of a Joint Stock Company may sell his shares to the company without fraud upon the other shareholders, where the proceeding is done according to the rules of the company, and thus relieve himself from further liability, although he knew at the time the company were embarrassed, and obtained that information from the situation he held in the company.

This was an original bill and cross bill for a discovery, which came on for hearing together. The first bill was filed by Walford on behalf of himself and the other members of the Birmingham Coal Company, against the defendants Adie and Robinson, and prayed to have the transfer of twenty-two shares in the company made by Adie declared fraudulent and void, and that the same might be cancelled, and that Adie might be decreed to pay the calls which had been subsequently made upon them, and contribute ratably with the other shareholders to the payment of the debts of the company.

The company in question was formed in the year 1793, and the defendant Adie held twenty-two shares in it, and was a member of the committee of management. The company became very embarrassed, and during that time, and while Adie was a member of the committee, he sold the shares to the company in July 1835, and made a transfer of the shares into the name of the secretary, Robinson, in trust for the company, which was duly registered. The bill charged that Adie knew the company was embarrassed when he sold the shares, and that he did so to avoid liability as a shareholder; for after the sale and transfer Adie ceased to act on the committee, Romilly and Daniel, for the plaintiffs, Wood and Stinton, for the defendants.

The arguments are fully entered into in the JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I do not find in the bill any suggestion that the committee of management exceeded its authority in buying the shares on behalf of the company, or that the price given for them exceeded the market value of the shares at the time. A supplemental bill was filed, introducing charges of fraud and of false and fraudulent representations, alleged to have been made by the committee of management, of which Adie was a member, as to the state of the company's affairs. It was alleged that Adie was a party to these fraudulent representations. Assuming the authority of the committee extended to the purchase of shares on behalf of the company, and that no excess of price was charged for those shares, I should assume that the position of Adie, as a member of the committee of management, was not such as to bring him within the scope of the equitable rule relied on in the argument, which, if it applied in this case, would place Adie under an incapacity to sell to the company. Would the sale of shares, in that view of the case, be impeachable on the ground of fraud, or otherwise? The answer to this question, although not strictly called for by the pleadings, might be material. As explaining the view which I take of the other branches of the case, my opinion is, that the sale, in that view of the case, could not be impeached; that the concerns of the company at the time of the sale were in a depressed state, might, perhaps, not admit of dispute; but that it was the duty of any shareholder, upon that account only, to retain his shares, no one, I think, can with any success contend. If that were so, the position of Adie, as a member of the committee of management, could not place him in a different position, unless it could be shewn he took undue advantage of his situation as a committeeman, to sell his shares at an undue value to a party who had not the same means of knowledge as himself: this was not the case in the present transaction; the committee of management thought it was for the interest of the company that they should become the purchasers of the shares; the committee had the same means of information as Adie himself; the solicitor of the company was one of the body, and generally acted as chairman of the committee who had purchased other shares, about the same period, for a similar price. If the purchase were really onerous to the company, the members of the committee, other than Adie, were acting in direct opposition to their individual interests, inasmuch as it appeared that more than one-fourth of the shares of the whole concern was held by the managing committee other than Adie; every thing had been done openly; the whole transaction had been entered in the books of the company; then could Adie's position, as a member of the committee, render the sale void? The agreement was, that his contract could not bind the company, unless it was made with the committee; and that as he was the seller, he was incapacitated from acting as a member of the committee, and therefore the committee for the time being could not contract. Considering the objection involved as one of the greatest importance, I shall consider the objection to be well founded, and consider whether, upon that assumption, the present bill could be sustained, always remembering that the price at which the shares were sold had not been made the subject of the bill; the retirement of the defendant, and his consequent escape from liability, were grievances complained of by the original suit. Upon this point, however, I felt less difficulty during the argument than perhaps any other part of the case. The defendant was a shareholder in a mining partnership; in July 1835, he retired from the partnership by selling his shares to the company; he had, ever since, lost all the privileges of a partner. The sale of Adie's shares was (as I assume for the purpose of argument) voidable at the option of the company; but if the company in such a case had thought fit to avoid the sale, they were bound to have done so with promptness. The company having notice of the sale could not be permitted to carry on the concerns in the absence of Adie, reserving to themselves the power to affirm the transaction if the concern should turn out prosperous, or to rescind it if it should appear to be for the interest of the company that it should do so. In a concern of such a nature, it was the right of Adie to know, at the earliest moment, whether the company elected to treat the sale void or not, especially where, as in this case, Adie might, without the consent of the company, have got rid of his shares to other persons. In fact, no step had been taken from the time of the sale in 1835 until 1841, when the bill was filed. During this interval the company had obtained, and had since acted upon, the provisions of the Act of Parliament obtained in 1836, enlarging their capital, creating new shares, and extending their mining operations, and Adie had been permitted to consider himself throughout as unconnected with and as having no interest in the concerns of the company. The question then was, from what time it was to be considered that the company had acquiesced in the sale; or, in other words, at what time it was to consider the company as having had notice of the sale, if the shareholders generally had managed their own concerns; as, in the case of ordinary partnerships, it would not be unreasonable to presume that they were acquainted with the contents of their own books; in the present case it was not unreasonable to impute to the shareholders at large a knowledge which the committee had acquired. I think the body of shareholders are clearly bound by acquiescence in the present case. The shareholders would, from a circular sent at the annual meeting, be aware whether Adie continued a shareholder or not, but this alone would not have notified to whom the shares had been sold; it was not notified that they had been sold to the company; however, after March 1836, it was admitted that the fact of Adie's having ceased to be a shareholder became a subject of discussion amongst the shareholders, but it was not known then to whom he had sold them. It was clear that, immediately after the meeting of June 1837, it became known to the shareholders, or some of them, including the plaintiff Walford, that Adie's shares had been sold to the company. Having got this notice, they did not call upon the committee to convene a special meeting to take active steps until August 1838, when a committee was appointed to inquire into the transaction. The bill was filed in 1841. I do not find a word of explanation for the delay; the question, therefore, was, whether the Court was to pronounce a decree which was to have the effect of making Adie a partner from July 1837 in a trading concern of a fluctuating character, and involving him in all the subsequent transactions of the company. All the facts of this case proved the soundness of that general rule, which imposed upon parties engaged in a fluctuating trading concern of this character, the necessity of promptitude and activity in stating what were their intentions; it had been said that Adie was privy to a fraud in misrepresenting the state of the account in 1835. Adie denied actual knowledge of those accounts. I cannot, without inquiry, trust to the evidence on that point, but I think this observation is applicable to it, that if Adie were guilty of fraud, it was one by which he was making himself liable, nor can I in the slightest degree connect the alleged misrepresentation with the sale which is the subject of complaint. I must, therefore, dismiss the original and supplemental bill with costs, and the cross bill, filed for the purpose of discovery, without costs.

HUNTER v. NOCKHOLES.

Practice—Injunction—Defendant.

A defendant cannot move for an injunction against a plaintiff.

A person who has no personal interest in the subject-matter cannot move for an injunction, even though he may be a party defendant in a suit.

The plaintiff, as equitable mortgagee, had obtained an order to remove the defendant from the office of receiver over the estates of Sir Francis Vincent, who is living in Italy. The defendant was the agent of Sir Francis, and in that character had been made a party to the suit for the purpose of having an account of the rents received by him. When the defendant was removed it was referred to the Master to have another receiver appointed; but before the receiver was appointed, the plaintiff had gone down to the estates and caused a fall of timber and underwood to be made; whereupon the defendant moved ex parte for an injunction to restrain the plaintiff from removing the timber he had cut down, and from further proceeding to cut down timber or underwood on the estate in the cause. The motion was supported by an affidavit of the facts.

Schomberg appeared in support of the motion, and cited Blanchard v. Cawthorne (6 Sim. 155).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I never heard such an application being made by a defendant. The proper course would have been to file a bill and pray an injunction. No doubt after an order for a receiver, the act of cutting the timber is highly improper; but the affidavit is defective by not stating the time Nockholes first heard of the intention to cut timber. Had this application been made by Sir Francis Vincent, his duly appointed agent, or any one having an interest in the property injured, the Court would have granted it; but the mode in which it is now made is altogether irregular, for it is admitted Nockholes, who makes it, has no personal interest in the subject-matter of the suit; he is the mere agent of Sir Francis Vincent discharged by the Court, and does not now appear in the character of agent for Sir Francis Vincent, but as an accounting party defendant in the suit. A party so circumstanced has no right to apply for an injunction. I therefore refuse the application.

Schomberg immediately proceeded before the Lord Chancellor, and made a similar application which was refused on the same ground, but the Lord Chancellor said the plaintiff had laid himself subject to an application for violating an order of the Court.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

HAWKINS and ANOTHER v. BENTON.

Award—Declaration on.

A declaration stated that divers disputes had arisen and being depending between one of two plaintiffs, S. H. and the defendant, of and concerning certain premises and buildings, and also between the other of the plaintiffs, W. C. and the defendant, of and concerning the said premises and buildings. S. H. commences an action against the defendant and his bailiff for breaking and entering the said premises, and that while the said action and the said disputes were so depending, it was agreed to refer the cause and the matters in difference between the two plaintiffs and the defendant in the introductory part of the count mentioned to R. A. esq. a barrister, with power to him to direct for what sum the verdict should be entered, and to settle all matters in difference. It then sets out the award of the arbitrator, who found that the plaintiff had a good cause of action against the defendant, and was entitled to a verdict therein, and assessed the damages at "the sum of forty shillings, to be paid by the said defendant to the said plaintiff, S. H. and W. C. who consented to become a party in the cause," and directed the costs to be paid by the defendant. It then, after setting out the necessary averments, concluded in debt for the amount of the damages and taxed costs. The defendant demurred on the ground that the declaration did not show that W. C. was a party to the action which had been referred, or that there was any matter in difference between S. H. and W. C. jointly and the defendant, and yet the arbitrator ordered the damages to be paid to S. H. and W. C. jointly:—Held, that as an equitable claim might exist by which W. C. was virtually co-plaintiff with S. H. there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

Middlesex } Sarah Hawkins and William Cole, the to wit. } plaintiffs in this suit, by William Whalley, their attorney, complain of Robert Benton, the defendant in this suit, who has been summoned to answer the said plaintiffs by virtue of a writ issued on the sixth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, out of the court of our lady the Queen, before the Queen herself at Westminster, and the plaintiffs demand of the defendant the sum of three hundred and fifty-four pounds, ten shillings, which the defendant owes to and unjustly detains from them. For that whereas divers disputes, controversies and differences having arisen and being depending between the now plaintiff, Sarah Hawkins, and the now defendant, Robert Benton, of and concerning certain premises and buildings. And whereas, also, divers disputes, controversies, and differences having arisen and being depending between the said plaintiff, William Cole, and the defendant, of and concerning the said premises and buildings, the plaintiff, Sarah Hawkins, heretofore, to wit, on the eighth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, commenced an action at law in her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster against the now defendant and one John Smith acting as the bailiff and servant of the said Robert Benton in that behalf, for breaking and entering the said premises, and taking away certain goods and chattels therein, which said action or suit, at the time of making the order hereinafter mentioned, was depending and undetermined. And whereas, while the said action was so depending as aforesaid, and while the said several controversies and disputes in the introductory part of this count mentioned were so depending as aforesaid, it was agreed by and between the said several parties to the said suit, and by and between the said several parties and the said William Cole, that it would be for the benefit of all the parties aforesaid, and also for the benefit of the said William Cole, that the said cause, and all the several matters in difference in the introductory part of this count mentioned, as well as all other matters then in difference, if there should then be any such, between the parties to the said suit, and all other matters in difference, if there should be any such, between the said defendants and the said William Cole, be referred to arbitration. And thereupon, heretofore to wit, on the first day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, by an order of the honourable Mr. Justice Coleridge, then being one of the justices of the said Court of Queen's Bench, made in the said action, dated the day and year last aforesaid, it was amongst other things ordered, with the consent of the attorneys on both sides of the said cause, and also with the consent of the attorney of the said William Cole, that a verdict in the said cause be entered for the plaintiff, Sarah Hawkins, for the sum of 50l. subject to the award of Robert Allen, esq. barrister-at-law, who should be at liberty to order and direct for whom and what sum the verdict should be finally entered; and it was, by the said order and with such consent as aforesaid, referred to the award, order, arbitration, final end and determination of the said Robert Allen to settle all matters in difference between the said parties to the said action, and between the defendants and the said William Cole, who consented to be made a party thereto, and to order and determine what he, the said Robert Allen, should think fit to be done by either party respecting the matters in dispute, who thereby agreed to be bound and concluded by such determination, and to remain contented and satisfied therewith, so as the said Robert Allen, the arbitrator aforesaid, should make and publish his award in writing of and concerning the matters so referred ready to be delivered to the said parties on or before the last day of Michaelmas Term then next ensuing, or in case of the death of the said parties, or either of them, to their or either of their personal representatives requiring the same. And it was by the said order and with such consent as aforesaid, further provided, that the said parties should in all things keep such award so to be made as aforesaid, and that the costs of the said cause should abide the event of the said cause, and that all other costs should be in the discretion of the said arbitrator, who should direct and award to, and by whom, and in what manner, the same should be paid; and it was by the said order, and by such consent as aforesaid, further directed that the said arbitrator should have power, with or without the consent of the said parties, to enlarge the time for making his said award from time to time, as occasion might require, and possess the same powers as a judge at Nisi Prius, and should also be at liberty, if he should so think fit, to examine the said parties to the said suit, and their respective witnesses, upon oath; and also, that neither the then plaintiff, nor the defendants, or the said William Cole, should bring or prosecute any action or suit of law or in equity against the said arbitrator, or bring any writ of error, or prefer any bill in equity against each other, of and concerning the matters so referred; and that if either party should, by affected delay or otherwise, wilfully prevent the said arbitrator from making his said award, he should pay such costs to the other as the said Court of Queen's Bench should think reasonable and just; and by the said order, and with the like consent, it was further directed, that the said order should be made a rule of her Majesty's said Court of Queen's Bench, if the said Court should so please; and thereupon heretofore, to wit, on the twentieth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, the said Robert Allen, in pursuance of the power reserved to him by the said order of reference, did, by a certain memorandum in writing on the said order, enlarge the time for making his said award until the sixth day of December then next ensuing, and did afterwards by a certain other memorandum in writing on the said order of reference, to wit, on the sixth day of December, in the year last aforesaid, further enlarge the said time until the tenth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, and did afterwards, to wit, on the said last-mentioned day, by a certain other memorandum in writing on the said order of reference, further enlarge the said time until the first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four. And whereas, before the making of the award hereinafter mentioned, to wit, on the first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, the said John Smith died, and the plaintiffs, Sarah Hawkins and Wm. Cole, in fact, say, that afterwards and before the expiration of the time limited by the said last-mentioned memorandum in writing made by the said arbitrator, on the said order of reference, to wit, on the twenty-second day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, the said Robert Allen, in pursuance of the said order of reference and the said several memorandums on the said order, did make and publish his award, arbitration, and final end and determination in writing, of and concerning the said premises, ready to be delivered to the said parties in difference, or such of them as should require the same, and bearing date heretofore to wit, the day and year last aforesaid, and did thereby award, adjudge, and determine that all further proceedings in the said cause should from thenceforth cease and be no further prosecuted; and that the said plaintiff had good cause of action against the said defendant in the said cause, and was entitled to a verdict therein, and did thereby assess and award the damages at the sum of forty shillings, to be paid by the said defendants to the said plaintiffs, Sarah Hawkins and William Cole, who consented to become a party in the cause. And the said arbitrator did thereby further direct and award that the costs of the said reference and award be paid by the said defendants, as by the said award reference being thereunto had will more fully and at large appear, of which said award the now defendant, the said Robert Benton, afterwards, to wit, on the first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, had notice. And the plaintiffs further say that afterwards, to wit, on the seventeenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, it was duly ordered by the said Court of Queen's Bench, that the said order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Coleridge, together with the three said several memorandums of the said arbitrator thereon, should be made a rule of the said Court. And the plaintiffs aver that at the time of making the said order of reference, and from thence until after the making the said award, there were not any matters in difference between the said plaintiff, Sarah Hawkins, and the defendants, in the said suit, or either of them, or between the said William Cole and the said defendants in the said suit, or either of them; nor were there any other matters, differences, or questions brought before the said arbitrator, or was the award of the said arbitrator made or given in respect of any causes or matters in difference whatsoever other than the controversies and disputes in the introductory part of this count mentioned. And the plaintiffs further say, that the costs of the said action, reference, and award, afterwards, to wit, on the twenty-third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, were duly taxed at a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of one hundred and seventy-five pounds, five shillings, of all which said premises the defendant afterwards, to wit, on the first day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, had notice. Yet the defendant did not, nor would, on the said first day of March, or at any time before or since, although often requested so to do, pay to the plaintiffs the said sum of forty shillings in the said award mentioned, and the said sum of one hundred and seventy-five pounds five shillings, the amount of the said costs, or any part thereof, but hath hitherto wholly neglected and refused, and still neglects and refuses so to do, whereby an action hath accrued to the plaintiffs to demand and have of and from the defendant the said sum of forty shillings, and one hundred and seventy-seven pounds five shillings, parcel of the said sum above demanded by the plaintiffs. And whereas the defendant, on the first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, was indebted to the plaintiffs in one hundred and seventy-seven pounds five shillings, for money found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiffs on an account then stated between them, which said sum of one hundred and seventy-seven pounds five shillings was to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiffs on request, yet the defendant, although often requested so to do, hath not paid the said sum of one hundred and seventy-seven pounds five shillings, residue of the said sum above demanded, or any part thereof to the plaintiffs, but hath hitherto wholly refused, and doth still refuse so to do; whereby, and by reason of the non-payment of the moneys in this declaration mentioned, an action hath accrued to the plaintiff, to demand and have of and from the defendant the said sum of money above demanded; yet the defendant hath not paid the said sum of money above demanded, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff's damage of ten pounds, and thereupon they bring suit.

The defendant stated the following point:—That it does not appear by the declaration that the said William Cole was any party to the action which was referred to, or that any matters in difference between the said plaintiffs, Sarah Hawkins and William Cole, jointly, and the defendants were referred to the arbitrator; yet the award directs the sum of forty shillings to be paid as damages by the defendants to the said Sarah Hawkins and William Cole, jointly.

Gray, in support of the demurrer.—The arbitrator has treated Cole as a plaintiff, which he was not. He has found 40s. damages, which will carry costs. Non constat, that if he had severed the damages, he would have awarded a sum that would have carried costs. The action was one of trespass, and perhaps the real plaintiff would not be entitled to costs.

By the COURT.—The arbitrator might have thought that an equitable claim existed, by which Cole was virtually a plaintiff with Hawkins.

Best, for the plaintiffs, was not called on.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Saturday, Jan. 31.

(Before ROLFE, B. sitting in the Exchequer Chambers.)

DUFFIELD v. MORRETT.

Commission to examine witnesses abroad, effect of. An order of a judge directing that a commission issue for the examination of witnesses abroad on behalf of the plaintiff, if served on the defendant's attorney, is a revocation of a notice of trial which the plaintiff's attorney may have given, and if the plaintiff chose not to avail himself of the order, he cannot proceed to trial without giving fresh notice in the regular way.

In this case notice of trial had been given on the 5th of December for the first sittings in Hilary Term. On the 7th of January a judge's order for a commission to examine witnesses at Gibraltar on the part of the plaintiff was served on the defendant's attorney. On the morning of Tuesday, the 14th of January, being the first day of the first sittings, the defendant's attorney received from the plaintiff's attorney the following letter:—"Duffield, Executors, Dec. v. Merrett. Dear Sir,—I shall be able to prove my case without a commission now, and it will be in the paper on Wednesday. If you choose to settle it in the mean time you can do so, to save expense. Dear Sir, yours truly, A. M. To D. K. esq." No notice was taken of this letter, and on the following Friday the cause was tried, and, no one appearing for the defendant, a verdict was taken for the plaintiff. On a former day (8 Law T. 328) Keene obtained a rule nisi for setting aside the verdict with costs, on the ground of irregularity, against which cause was now shown by Higgins and Bagley.—The defendant was not a party to the order for the commission; he had not ever applied to be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses produced before it. As the defendant had no interest in it, the plaintiff was at liberty to abandon it whenever he pleased. Subject to that liberty, it was served on the defendant, who therefore could not have been misled.

Keene, contra.—The service of the order for the commission either suspended or revoked the notice of trial. If the former was the case, such notice of the abandonment of the order should have been given as would have left sufficient time to the defendant to prepare for trial. Notice on the first day of the sittings at which it was intended to try was a mere snare; such an order, however, when served, is so inconsistent with a previous notice of trial, that it operates as a revocation of it. If that be so, a fresh notice was required. The letter received by the defendant's attorney is deficient in all the requisites of a notice of trial; it was too informal to operate even as a notice of the abandonment of the order for the commission.

ROLFE, B.—This rule must be made absolute, on the strict ground that service of the order for the commission was a revocation of the notice of trial, being wholly inconsistent with it. That being so, the plaintiff was bound to give fresh notice of trial, according to the rules of the Court. It is not pretended that the letter which has been read can be considered a regular notice of trial. Rule absolute.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Thursday, April 2.
(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)
Re HANCE.

A debtor wilfully absenting himself from the meetings of his creditors, forfeits all his right to assistance from the laws under which the Court is enabled to act.

The insolvent in this case was described as a gentleman.

The facts are stated in the following judgment.

HIS HONOUR.—The insolvent, on the 18th of December, 1844, filed a petition in this court under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and obtained protection till the 24th of January, 1845, when he was to attend and meet his creditors, who also had notice to meet him on that day. When the day arrived, neither he nor his attorney attended; a person came to say he was ill, but no medical certificate was produced. His protection of course ceased. On the 9th of July, 1845, he filed another petition, and on the 11th made an affidavit, in which he swore he was prevented by illness from attending on the 24th of January, and I gave him protection again till the 8th of August following. His creditors assembled, some attending at great expense by counsel, and again the insolvent was absent. I of course refused to name a day for making a final order, or to renew the insolvent's protection. Up to this time the insolvent was at large, but having been taken in execution on the 2nd of January, 1846, he served notices on his detaining creditors, that on the 9th of January he should move that the protection granted on the 11th of July, 1845, should be renewed, and that a new day should be fixed for his first examination, or that a day should be named for granting him a protecting order, under the 28th section of the Act, or that such other order might be made as to the commissioner should seem meet. He thus harassed his creditors by compelling a third attendance. On that motion he was supported by a very able counsel, Mr. Cooke; but, upon full consideration, I declined to make any order whatever at his instance. The ground on which I acted was this: every insolvent is entitled to have a full and fair opportunity, in the presence of his creditors, and subject to their opposition on each occasion of coming up, of satisfying the Court that his conduct has been such as he ought not to be imprisoned either for fraud in incurring his debts, or for fraud in not paying them all or in part; but though he is to have a fair and full opportunity, he is to avail himself of it, and must attend every meeting or give a satisfactory excuse. If he were to be allowed to summon his creditors as often as he pleased, and, when they were assembled, stay away, offering no sufficient excuse to the Court at the time, and then to have a new day appointed and summon them again, a debtor would have nothing to do but to continue this process until all his injured creditors were weary of fruitless and expensive attendance, and then pass unopposed. I, for one, will never sanction, directly or indirectly, the notion that a debtor can pursue such a course. This debtor had one opportunity on the 24th of January, 1845; he neither availed himself of it, or sent at the time a proper excuse for his absence. I think I erred in giving him a second opportunity, but I erred on the side of mercy, and gave him a second opportunity on the 8th of August, and again he stayed away, sending no proper excuse at the time. The insolvent has since applied to me by counsel, upon an affidavit sworn on the 26th of February last, in which he attempts to excuse his non-attendance on the two occasions referred to. His excuse as to the first is illness, and as to the second that he was summoned to attend another court as witness; to this I answer that it was a paramount duty to attend this court and meet his creditors here; and if he preferred the performance of the other duty he must take the consequences. His affidavit, however, does not state that he did attend as a witness; but even if he did, I would not accept that as an excuse, after his previous unexcused non-attendance. I repeat, therefore, that I will make no order upon this petition for his relief. He must get out of prison either by satisfying his creditors, or by having undergone such imprisonment as the Insolvent Debtors' Court may deem an adequate punishment for his offences. I have taken pains to explain the ground of my proceeding in this case, because I wish it to be clearly understood by all persons concerned, that a debtor not attending to meet his creditors, if wilful, is not only a very serious offence, but is one which will occasion to the debtor himself a forfeiture of all his right to assistance under the laws under which the Court is enabled to act.

Friday, April 3.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)

Ex parte RICHARD TAYLOR.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8.—Taking affidavit off the file.

A commissioner has no power to order an affidavit filed under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, to be removed from the file of the court, even where the affidavit is manifestly insufficient to support proceedings to a fiat in bankruptcy.

John Rufford had filed an affidavit under the 8th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, stating "that Richard Taylor was justly and truly indebted to the deponent in the sum of 1,000l. as the holder for value of a certain bill of exchange, drawn by, &c. to the order of Messrs. Roscoe, Arnold, and Leete, and accepted by Richard Taylor; and that the said Richard Taylor was, as the deponent verily believed, a trader, &c."

Bagley now applied, upon the behalf of Taylor, that the affidavit might be taken off the file for insufficiency. This was a preliminary proceeding, taken with a view of involving the applicant in the serious consequences of bankruptcy. The objection to the affidavit was, that it did not disclose any legal debt. The right to sue upon a bill of exchange could not pass except by indorsement, and Rufford was bound to shew in his affidavit that he was the indorsee. The affidavit in this case was analogous to the old affidavit, to hold to bail and in that legal certainty had always been required. Thus, there were cases to shew that it was not sufficient for an affidavit to state that a bill of exchange was duly indorsed, unless they shewed an indorsement to the deponent by the person properly authorized to indorse. (M'Faggart v. Ellice, 9 Bing. 114; Lewis v. Gompertz, 2 Cr. & J. 352; Woolley v. Escudier, 2 M. & S. 392.) Here the affidavit did not shew that the bill was ever endorsed at all. [Mr. Commissioner FANE.—Admitting the affidavit to be bad, have I any jurisdiction to do as you ask me? If your client relies upon the insufficiency of the affidavit, he may feel secure that he cannot be made a bankrupt.] Then, as to the jurisdiction of the commissioner, this is the first Court where the application should be made. In Ex parte Hall re Hall, M. & C. 448, a question somewhat similar arose. There the question was, whether an affidavit taken by a Master extraordinary in Chancery was properly sworn. In page 449 of the report, the language of Sir George Rose, in his judgment, implies that the commissioner may, if he think fit, remove the affidavit.

Whitehead, the registrar, referred to Ex parte Cheese (3 Mon. D. & D. 79.)

Bagley.—In that case there was no objection to the affidavit itself; the only question there was whether the 8th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, was repealed by the 11th section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122.

Mr. Commissioner FANE.—I have looked at the two cases to which reference has last been made, and I see nothing to induce me to alter the view which I at first entertained. In Ex parte Hall, Sir George Rose seems to intimate that the commissioner might have considered all the circumstances in order to determine for what amount the security should be taken. Now that is quite consistent with my opinion; I think that there are two functions only entrusted to the commissioner. Supposing an affidavit to be filed, and notice given to the debtor, and the debtor, under the fear of the consequences, to come and tender a bond, the commissioner is required to look first to the amount in which the bond is entered into; and, secondly, to the sufficiency of the sureties who are to enter into it. With any further considerations, in this stage of the proceedings, the Court has nothing to do. If no bond shall be ultimately given, and proceedings shall then be taken to make Taylor a bankrupt, the Court of Bankruptcy will then be called upon to pronounce upon these preliminary and interlocutory matters. It will then be time enough to shew any such defect, either in the affidavit filed, or in the notice of its being filed, or in the form of the bond, as will prevent a fiat from being properly founded upon it. The objection, therefore, is at present premature, and my decision is now, as in similar cases it always has been, that when the creditor has once filed his affidavit, I have nothing to do with its sufficiency until a fiat is issued upon it.

Application refused.

Embezzlement—Assistant overseer.

An assistant overseer, appointed under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, is not "a clerk or servant" to the overseers so as to be guilty of embezzlement.

Prisoner was indicted for embezzling certain moneys, which were laid in several counts, as the property of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Bedminster, and of the treasurer of the Bedminster Union.

The facts proved were, that in 1836, the prisoner was appointed a collector of the poor-rates of the Bedminster Union, under an order of the Poor Law Commissioners. A subsequent decision in the Queen's Bench had determined that such an order was invalid. In consequence of this, at a vestry meeting duly convened and held on the 23rd of June, 1839, he was formally elected assistant overseer for the parish of Bedminster, under the provisions of the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7. The appointment was duly confirmed by the justices at their petty sessions. This appointment specified that the prisoner should discharge all the duties of overseer. Subsequently, he received moneys, for which he had not accounted, and for this the present indictment was preferred.

Cockburn, Q.C. submitted that upon these facts the prisoner was not a "clerk or servant," either of the overseers or guardians, and therefore could not be guilty of embezzlement. The first invalid appointment as collector had been set aside by the act of the vestry formally appointing him to the office of assistant overseer. As such he was to all intents and purposes an overseer, having co-ordinate authority and powers. It was, he believed, contended for the prosecution, that the order of the Poor Law Commissioners was good until formally invalidated. But, even if it were so, it would not alter the fact; the parish had chosen to appoint him assistant overseer; the justices had confirmed the appointment; he was paid a salary instead of a commission as before; as the inhabitants appointed so they dismissed him; as an overseer he had to account to the vestry—he was liable to a penalty for not doing so; he was not a servant of the overseers, and therefore could not be guilty of embezzlement.

Stone, for the prosecution, contended that it was clear from the terms of the indemnity bond that the prisoner was a servant, one of the conditions being that he should duly account to the overseers. It was clear, at all events, that the second count charging him as a clerk to the Board of Guardians, could be sustained, for the 97th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act expressly provided against the misemployment by the overseers of the moneys of the guardians of unions.

ROLFE, B. without calling on Cockburn for a reply, said that he was quite satisfied that the prisoner was, to all intents and purposes, an overseer. The very purpose of the statute under which he was appointed was to enable large parishes, whose duties were too onerous to be properly discharged by unpaid officers, to obtain the assistance of a competent person at a salary. In this case the parish had chosen to avail itself of the statute to appoint an assistant overseer, and to confer upon him all the powers of that office to their full extent. He was, therefore, an overseer for all purposes, and not the mere clerk or servant of the overseers. Had they chosen to limit his powers by the appointment it might have been otherwise. As to the second count, he had been at first struck by the argument of Mr. Stone, but on looking at the 97th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, it is clear that the word "penalties" is used there in its popular, and not in its strictly legal sense. It cannot mean felonious misappropriation. It would, indeed, be absurd to hold otherwise, for the section imposes a pecuniary penalty, and how could that be levied after a conviction for felony? But, even if it were otherwise, the charge could not be sustained by the present count, for to bring it within the provisions of that section it should have alleged that the prisoner was overseer. Not Guilty.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT. Liverpool.

Under the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 34, by which it was enacted, that if any person shall wilfully make a false answer to certain questions therein mentioned, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and may be indicted and punished accordingly. It is not sufficient that the indictment charges the prisoner with having made the answers "falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully," omitting the word "wilfully," and such omission is a fatal objection in arrest of judgment.

The false personation of a voter at a municipal election, held under the provisions of the above statute, is not an offence at common law, nor is it an indictable offence as describing an act done in disobedience to the statute, and for which no express punishment is provided, inasmuch as it is identical with the offence intended to be provided for by the 34th section.

The first count set out that, after the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, "An Act to provide for the regulation of municipal corporations in England and Wales," her Majesty, Queen Victoria, granted to the inhabitants of the borough of Great Bolton a charter of incorporation pursuant to the provisions of that statute, by which charter the borough was divided into certain wards or districts, one of which was called Exchange Ward, for the election of councillors. It then stated the acceptance by the inhabitants of the said charter, and that afterwards, on the 1st of November 1844, at Bolton aforesaid, and in the said Exchange Ward of the said borough, a certain election of two councillors for the said ward was had and holden before A B, alderman, and C and D, assessors of the said ward, and that, before and at the time of the election, the name of one John Holden appeared on the burgess roll of the said borough, and in the ward list of the said Exchange Ward then in force, and that the defendant, well knowing the premises, but intending falsely and fraudulently to personate the said John Holden at the said election, and to vote as a burgess as and in the name of the said John Holden at the said election, falsely and fraudulently presented himself at the polling place for Exchange Ward, and then delivered to the said alderman and assessors a certain voting-paper (setting it out.) It then charged that the said voting-paper having been delivered, two of the burgesses of the ward required the said alderman to put to the said Richard Bent the three questions prescribed by the 34th section of the Act, and that the said alderman then put to the said Richard Bent the following question, that is to say—"Are you the person whose name is signed as John Holden in the voting-paper now delivered in by you?" to which question the said Richard Bent then and there falsely and fraudulently answered, "I am." And the said alderman then and there put to the said Richard Bent the following question, that is to say—"Are you the person whose name now appears as John Holden on the burgess roll now in force for this borough, being registered therein as rated for property described to be situate in Spring-garden?" to which said last mentioned question the said Richard Bent then and there falsely and fraudulently answered, "I am."

The first count then stated the putting of the third question, and then proceeded to negative the truth of the answers to the first and second questions.

The three following counts varied from the first in the statement of the charter of incorporation and the holding of the election, but described the offence in precisely the same way.

The fifth count was as follows:—"And the jurors, &c. do further present, that by the said Act of Parliament hereinbefore mentioned, made and passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, it is, amongst other things, provided and enacted, that in every case in which there shall be a division into wards of any borough, the burgesses of every such ward, and none others, shall, on the day fixed for the first election of councillors, separately elect, from the persons qualified to be councillors, the whole number of councillors assigned to such ward respectively; and on the 1st day of November in any subsequent year shall separately elect from the persons qualified to be councillors, one-third part of the whole number of councillors assigned to such ward." And in a certain other part of the said Act, after enacting that the burgess lists, when revised and signed as is therein directed, shall be copied in a book for that purpose provided, it is provided and enacted, that every such book in which the said burgess lists shall be so copied, shall be the burgess roll of the burgesses of such borough entitled to vote in the choice of the councillors and auditors of such borough at any election which may take place between the 1st day of November inclusive in the year wherein such burgess roll shall have been made, and the 1st day of November in the succeeding year. "And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that after the grant of the said charter of incorporation as aforesaid, and after the same was duly accepted by the inhabitants of the borough of Bolton as aforesaid, to wit, on the 1st day of November, in the ninth year of the reign of her said Majesty Queen Victoria, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, and within the Exchange Ward aforesaid of the said borough, an election was had and holden for the electing of two councillors for the said Exchange Ward of the said borough; and that the said R. B., being a wicked and evil disposed person, and well knowing the premises, but contriving, &c. to contravene the said provisions of the said Act of Parliament, and to prevent a fair election of councillors from taking place for the said Exchange Ward, and wrongfully and deceitfully wishing to make it appear that D. and M. who were then and there respectively candidates for the office of councillors of and for the said Exchange Ward, were duly elected councillors of and for the said ward on the day and year last aforesaid, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, and within the said Exchange Ward at the election aforesaid for the said ward, falsely, fraudulently, deceitfully, and contrary to, and in fraud of the provisions of the statute aforesaid, in that behalf did personate one J. H. at the said election (the name of the said J. H. being then on the said burgess roll of the said borough, and on the ward list of the said ward, which was then and there in force), and the said R. B. then and there as in the name of the said J. H. did give his vote for the said J. D. and J. M.; whereas in truth and in fact the said R. B. never was called or known by the name of J. H. and whereas in truth and in fact the said R. B. was not the person whose name so appeared upon the burgess roll and ward list as aforesaid, as J. H.; and whereas in truth and in fact, the said R. B. was not then or at any other time possessed of, or the occupier or owner of the property for which the said J. H. then and there appeared by the said burgess roll to be rated, and whereas in truth and in fact the said R. B. had then and there no right whatever to give his vote in the name of the said J. H.; and whereas in truth and in fact the said R. B. was not then, nor is he now a burgess of the said ward or of the said borough of Bolton; and whereas in truth and in fact the said R. B. had then and there no right whatsoever to vote at the said last-mentioned election, in contempt of the provisions of the statute aforesaid, in contempt of our said lady the Queen, &c. against the form of the statute, &c. and against the peace, &c." The sixth count was substantially the same as the fifth, except that it set out the charter of incorporation with greater particularity.

The prisoner having pleaded not guilty, and been tried and found guilty, Joseph Pollock moved to arrest the judgment. He first took some points as to the sufficiency of the averments shewing that the election was held in pursuance of the statute, and then proceeded. The next objection appears to be fatal to this indictment. In no part of this indictment is it alleged that the defendant wilfully made a false answer to any one of the questions. The words are "falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully" in some of the counts, and "falsely and fraudulently" in others. Re v. Stevens (5 B. & C. 246) is in point. [WILLIAMS, J.—The language of the statute is the important point, because how is it possible for me to say that I know that any other word will supply the place of the word expressly used in the statute?] Re v. Davies (1 Leach, 493) is also in point. As to the two last counts, they are not good on the statute, nor are they good at common law. The personation alleged is not shewn to be an offence cognizable by law.

Cross, contra.—I submit that it sufficiently appears by intentment that the answers were made wilfully. All that is required by the Act is, that it shall appear, either directly or by intentment, that the thing was done wilfully. The words here are equivalent to those in the statute. That this is sufficient is to be inferred from the judgment of Abbott, C.J. in the case of Re v. Stevens, cited on the other side. Cox's case (1 Leach, 71) shews that the word wilfully is not necessary in an indictment for perjury at common law. No person could read the present indictment, with common understanding, without seeing that it appears on the face of it that the act was done wilfully. The two last accounts charge the prisoner with having acted in direct fraud and contravention of the Act of Parliament. Fraud against an Act of Parliament is an offence at common law.

WILLIAMS, J.—But does that apply where the Act of Parliament prescribes a specific remedy for the act of which you complain?

Cross.—In this case there is only such a provision where the questions are put, but we may suppose a case in which personation has taken place, and the questions have not been put. Is it to be said that in such case, because the questions are not put, there is no punishment for the personation?

Pollock, in reply.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am extremely unwilling to express an opinion on so heavy a question, but I have a most serious doubt as to the omission of the word wilfully in the four first counts. I should dislike much to express an opinion at present either way, and I will liberate the prisoner on bail to appear at the next assizes, and in the meanwhile I will deliberate either myself, or with such assistance as I can get, after the example of a learned brother in a similar case at a former assizes.

The prisoner was accordingly let out on bail, to appear at the present Spring Assizes, when the following written judgment of WILLIAMS, J. was read for him by PATTESON, J.

JUDGMENT.

The defendant was convicted before me at the last assizes holden at this place, upon an indictment containing six counts, of which the four first were framed upon the Municipal Corporations Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, and especially upon the 34th section, which authorises, under certain circumstances, three questions to be put to any voter at a borough election, and the offence charged is giving false answers to two of those questions. The two last counts, without at present describing them more minutely, are for falsely personating a certain voter at an election of two councillors for the borough of Great Bolton. The objection to the four first counts is that in describing the offence they do not pursue the language of the statute, and to the two last that they disclose no offence at all. The four first counts differ from each other only in setting forth with more or less particularity the charter of incorporation granted to the said borough of Great Bolton, and other matters introductory to the election of two councillors for one of the wards of that borough, at which the said offence is charged to have been committed, but in the description of that offence there is no difference whatever.

The sections of the Act, which are material to the present purpose, are the 31st, which directs that the election of councillors shall be on the 1st of Nov.; the 32nd, which provides that the mode of voting shall be by delivering a voting paper, in a certain prescribed form, to the mayor or other presiding officer; and the 34th, on which the question arises, that enacts that the mayor or other presiding officer, if required by two competent burgesses, shall put to the voter, at the time of his delivering in the voting paper, the following questions:—

1st Are you the person whose name is signed A B in the voting paper now delivered in by you?

2nd Are you the person whose name appears as A B in the burgess roll for this borough, being registered therein as rated for property described to be situated in (street, &c.)?

3rd Have you already voted at this election?

Then follows—"And if any person shall wilfully make a false answer to any of the questions aforesaid, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and may be indicted and punished accordingly."

All the four first counts state that the defendant, upon delivering in a voting paper in the name of one John Holden, a burgess entitled to vote at the said election, was asked by the presiding officer (who was duly required by two competent burgesses to put them) the three questions in the terms of the Act of Parliament above set forth; and then the statement in all those four counts (that in truth being the statement of the offence) is in the same words, and as follows:—"to which questions (each of the two first) the defendant then and there falsely and fraudulently answered, 'I am.'" But the words of the 34th section, as has been already shewn, are, "if any person shall wilfully make a false answer to any of the questions aforesaid, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour;" and the question is, whether the omission of the word "wilfully," in the said four first counts, vitiates those counts, and I am of opinion that it does.

Now, Lord Coke, in his reading upon the statute of 5th Elizabeth, the words of which are, "If any person shall wilfully and corruptly commit any manner of wilful perjury," mentions two cases, in which a statement that the thing was done "falsely and corruptly," without adding wilfully, was held to be vicious and insufficient. (3 Inst. 167.) In the case of Re v. Davis (2 Leach), the indictment was upon the Black Act, which makes it felony for any person "wilfully and maliciously to shoot at another." The indictment charged that the prisoner "unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did shoot at A B;" and held ill, for omission of the word "wilfully." In a note to the latter case, others are referred to, which are to the like effect. So, also, is the language of the judges (Cox's case, 1 Leach) as to the importance of the word "wilfully" in the said statute of 5th Elizabeth against perjury. Whether the words, "falsely and fraudulently" be equivalent to "falsely and wilfully" is an inquiry into which I decline to enter. That the expression "wilful" is, in general, sufficiently significant cannot be doubted, when it is recollected that the definition of murder by Hawkins is, "The wilful killing a man of malice aforethought," and moreover, that "wilfully" is to be found as well as "of malice aforethought," in every indictment for murder that I ever saw or heard of. But beyond all this, "wilfully to make a false answer to the questions" proposed is the definition of the offence by the Legislature itself; quod voluit dixit, and whether any other language must have the same meaning as that which I find used, cannot but be doubtful, and is a question which I am not able or willing to decide. That the words of the statute must be pursued, is a safe and certain rule; an inquiry whether other words bear the same mean-lag, must be precarious and uncertain. I think, therefore, that, both upon principle and authority, these four first counts are defective.

The two last counts, after stating the incorporation of the borough of Great Bolton, with most of the particulars contained in the four first counts, and referring to certain provisions in the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, which it is not necessary to set out, as no objection or question arises thereon, contain an allegation that on the first of November, in the ninth year of Queen Victoria, an election of two councillors for a certain ward in the said borough took place, and then state the offence. In this (the material) part, both counts are the same, and to this effect: "that defendant well knowing the premises, but intending deceitfully and fraudulently to contravene the said provisions of the said Act of Parliament, and to prevent a fair election of councillors from taking place for the said ward, and wrongfully and deceitfully wishing to make it appear that A and B, who were then and there respectively candidates for the office of councillor of and for the said ward, were duly elected councillors thereof, on, &c. at, &c. at the election aforesaid for the said ward, falsely, fraudulently, deceitfully, and contrary to and in fraud of the provisions of the statute aforesaid in that behalf, did personate one John Holden (the name of the said John Holden being then on the said burgess-roll of the said borough and on the ward-list of the said ward, which were then and there in force); and the defendant then and there, as and in the name of the said John Holden, did give his vote for the said A and B (then follow allegations negativing the identity of defendant with said John Holden, and the pretended qualifications of defendant to give him a right to vote), in contempt of the provisions of the said statute, in contempt of our said lady the Queen and her laws, to the evil example, &c. against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace, &c."

And, first, with respect to the conclusion, "against the form of the statute," that may be disposed of at once, by observing, that there is no such offence as "false personation" (so described) in the Act of Parliament, nor are the words "personation" or "personate" to be found in it. It is true that wrongfully giving a false answer to the three allowable questions has acquired the popular appellation of the "false personation" of a voter, but in the statute itself there is no language in any degree resembling that which has been used in describing the supposed offence contained in those two last counts. The question, therefore, arises—do these counts contain the description of an offence at common law? No case to maintain the affirmative was cited, nor is it believed that any such can be found. The precise case, indeed, is not very likely to have occurred; because, until the recent Act, no election of councillors for a borough could have been held; but none in principle resembling it was produced.

The analogy is all the other way. In certain instances false personation—as of soldiers, sailors, and bail, for fraudulent purposes, is made an offence. And this case does not resemble one where a statute enjoins or prohibits some particular act, without any penalty being attached to the breach of its provisions; for the supposed offence intended to be described in those two last counts is expressly provided for by the said thirty-fourth section, upon which the four first counts are framed; but, as I have already said, in my opinion, defectively.

The consequence is, that the judgment must be arrested.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LEGAL EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7.—Mr. WYSE, in rising to move for a select committee to inquire into the present state of legal education in Ireland, and the means for its further improvement and extension, said he wished he could boast the knowledge or experience of a professional man, or at least quote the wishes of the profession, so as to enable him to speak comprehensively on the subject. But on this occasion he felt all the inferiority of a layman, though, being such, he believed he stood in an impartial position, and was the less likely to be confounded with party feelings the interests and concerns of ancient and venerable, but at the same time antiquated, institutions. He (Mr. Wyse) had no other view in bringing forward the question but the extension of legal education, in common with every branch of education. It was not the first time that he took an interest in the subject. In 1838 he had brought the question forward in the committee on Irish education, and that committee had recommended the institution of a sort of high law school, and also similar subsidiary schools in such new universities as might thereafter be established in Ireland. In 1840, too, he had headed a deputation composed of some of the most eminent men at the Irish bar, and waited on the Secretary for Ireland, Lord Morpeth, praying that the society just established in Ireland—the Law Institution of Ireland—should receive a charter from the Crown. That institution proposed to confer instruction by the means of lectures. In 1843 he presented a petition to that House from the principal of that institution, praying a charter for it, and also that inquiry might be instituted into the state of legal education in Ireland; and in the same year he gave notice of a motion for inquiry into the state of Ireland, legal education inclusive. There was not a class in the community who were uninfluenced by the operation of the law, and not a single relation of society in which the lawyer was not called in as the prime mover. Any deficiency in education in that profession was, consequently, a public grievance of a grave character. The answer usually made to attempts at amelioration in respect to it was that the Bar of England had hitherto produced as great men as the bar of any other country, and that the force of native genius was still sufficient for all purposes of the profession of the law. But if that was true of the law, it should be true of other professions, which was found not to be the case; and the absence of previous professional education in the one was as justifiable as in the other.
The want of that previous training had been deeply felt and greatly regretted by some of the most eminent men in the legal profession, inclusive of the late lamented Master of the Rolls in Ireland, Sir Michael O'Loughlin. Chief Justice Storey, the ornament of American jurisprudence, advocated it; and he (Mr. W.) believed that there was not a man at the Bar in this country who would not say the same. This being the case, it became important to provide a remedy for the evil. In looking at the different universities of Europe it would be found that there was not one, except those of England and Ireland, which had not alone adequate means of legal instruction afforded to the students; but legal learning had been made secondary only to the principal objects of each university. It was so in Spain. In Italy it is so likewise, from the time when Tirabocchi wrote about the greatness of the University of Bologna. In the Roman states the system prevailed. In the University of Pisa it formed a prominent feature in the course of education; and in Pavia, reformed as the institution of the university had been by the Austrians, civil law and jurisprudence were still an essential portion of study for the student. The same spirit had extended itself to Russia, and founded the Imperial Law School of St. Petersburg; and in Scotland—nearer home—since the report of the commissions of 1826 and 1833, the faculty of teaching law had been revived in the universities of that country. There was a recognition of the necessity of a previous education for the profession of the law in the constitution of this faculty; and there was an admission on the part of that eminent judge, the Lord Justice Clerk of Edinburgh, that such a society as existed in Ireland would be advantageous to Scotland.
In England, however, there were neither the same facilities nor the same zeal in relation to the subject.
The Inns of Court were originally intended as colleges of a great law university, in practice at least; and the act of 3rd Henry 8 enjoined the student to make himself acquainted with a knowledge of the law before entering on the legal profession. There had been exercises as well as commons, but the former were discontinued, except at Lincoln's-inn, where some reading exercises were kept as a mere matter of form, the latter being the only qualification for call to the bar. That munificent man, Cardinal Wolsey, when keeper of the Great Seal, had complained that the lawyers were grossly ignorant of the civil law; and he had projected a great legal university in London, to be devoted to the study of the law in all its branches. Sir Edward Coke lectured for years upon the law in Lyon's-inn; and Lord Mansfield held that those places were seminaries of legal instruction. Within the last two or three years, however, a general feeling had grown up in the legal profession as to the necessity of some reform in respect of preliminary legal education, and on the 17th January this year the benchers of the Middle Temple assembled in Parliament had recognised the deficiency that existed in respect of the entire neglect of jurisprudence, by proposing to establish two professors for the purpose of instructing students in civil law and jurisprudence. Since then it had been again mooted among the bar whether a law university should not be established in London to provide for the education of students in all branches of the legal profession. He would now return to the case of Ireland. In 1839 a society called the Law Institution was established in Ireland by an eminent Irish lawyer—he alluded to Mr. Kennedy. In 1840, the Lords Justices expressed their approbation of the principle of the institution, but recommended in place of their wish for incorporation that they should seek for an endowment. The Queen's Inns Institution gave a donation of 400l. In 1841 the Institution made several applications to Government, but without success, and in the subsequent year the grant they had enjoyed was withdrawn. The institution was established for the study of the law, and on this ground they claimed support. The Queen's Inns received together about 7,147l. per annum in money, and though he did not wish to throw any discredit on those most respectable bodies, yet he considered a question might be fairly raised, whether some portion of this sum might not be advantageously appropriated to the endowment of legal professors in the Dublin Institution, or in any other public institution of an equally eligible character. Lectures had been given at the institution by men whose talents had shed a lustre on the Irish bar, and even after the grant was withdrawn, to evince the value of these lectures he would state that the number of pupils, instead of diminishing, had increased. He put it to the government to say whether it would not be advisable to give a permanent character to this institution. He had, he feared, trespassed too much on the patience of the House, but he was so deeply interested in the subject, that he could not bring himself to shorten his address. In the charter of incorporation for the new colleges, he had seen with satisfaction that a law chair was to be established; and as there were chairs for all the liberal professions, he called on Government to complete the public means for legal education by establishing schools and colleges in Dublin, and to aid those established out of the public funds. An hon. MEMBER moved that the house be counted, which having been done, and forty members not being present, the Speaker adjourned the house at eight o'clock.

WEDNESDAY, April 8.—Mr. WYSE moved for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the present state of legal education in Ireland, and the means for its further improvement and extension.—Mr. WARBURTON recommended that the inquiry be made general, because the London University was very strict in examining into the legal acquirements of students there, but had not the power of granting a degree in that department of science.—Motion agreed to.

THE NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Government has introduced a Bill into the House of Commons to prevent an unnecessary removal of paupers, but, as far as I can see, without the slightest attempt to improve the numerous defects in the existing laws of settlement and removal, which are too well known to your country readers to require commenting upon. If there is to be a Settlement Law, then why should not some revision, amendment, and consolidation of the laws take place? I beg to forward you the form of a petition to Parliament, several of which are already in preparation, and will shortly be presented. In fact, the Government measure proposes some change in the law, but without providing either for the past or the future. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

March 31, 1846.

F.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Churchwardens and Overseers of the poor of the parish of in the county of HUMBLY SHEWETH,—That under the operation of the existing laws which relate to the settlement of the poor in England and Wales, parishes are obliged to bear heavy costs of maintaining paupers who are not their settled parishioners, and of tracing their legal place of settlement.

That in order to prove a settlement by birth or parentage,—or by renting a tenement and being rated thereto,—or by apprenticeship (which are the most frequent grounds of settlement), the necessary evidence which the law now requires to be adduced before justices of the peace in petty sessions previous to an order of removal being made, can only be procured at great expense to the removing parish.

That your petitioners are advised that the law of evidence, so far as it relates to the law of settlement and removal of the poor, might be greatly improved.

(Here state any special remarks on the subject of the poor law, or the expense of obtaining removal orders, or any other fact worthy of comment.)

Your petitioners represent that the statutes which govern the settlement law and removal of the poor are very numerous, and are productive of litigation; at the present time settlements exist, and can be set up by paupers; and their children may hereafter claim their settlements from their parents, by the following methods, viz. :—

By renting and occupying at the rent of 10l. for one year, and by being rated thereto.

By renting a tenement at the same rent, and by payment of rates, a settlement can be gained by a residence of forty days.

By estate.

By hiring and service—(gained prior to the 14th August, 1834).

By apprenticeship.

By office bearing.

By acts of a parish, viz., giving relief to parties when resident in another parish.

By acknowledgment by certificate.

By receiving paupers under a former order of removal, and unappealed against.

By parentage settlement.

By marriage.

By birth—as to legitimate children.

By birth—as to illegitimate children.

By a widow's settlement by marriage.

By settlement of a deserted wife or family.

That several of the foregoing Acts of Settlement are again divided into different periods, because at certain periods the law made various requirements necessary to be observed in order to constitute a legal settlement.

That although the statute 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, directly repeals many of the modes above set forth of acquiring a settlement, yet all such settlements as were gained before the passing of that statute are not affected, and the effects of such modes of settlement will continue to be felt for a great number of years, if the settlement law remains.

That many of the foregoing cases of settlement depend upon nice distinctions and subtle reasoning of law, by which means parishes frequently sustain injustice by being saddled with paupers who are not their parishioners.

That, from the above-stated cause, and by the nature of their office, overseers feel great reluctance, and that, they would not be justified in accepting paupers from another parish upon a mere allegation as to the alleged settlement of such paupers, without having a proper statement in writing, which fully set forth the means by which such settlement was gained, first submitted for their consideration.

Your petitioners also represent, that in the case where a pauper is sought to be removed from one parish to another, if overseers were to be summoned to attend before a bench of magistrates, to hear the statement of alleged settlement and evidence in support thereof, and to shew cause against it, or in any manner to be called upon to admit the settlement of a pauper, without having a written examination sent to them setting forth the settlement, they would experience great difficulty in concurring with any such proceeding, for, being unacquainted with the law, they might be the means of inflicting great injustice upon their parish and fellow rate-payers.

Your petitioners represent that they have had their attention directed to "A Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to the removal of the Poor," which is now before your honourable House; and your petitioners view with apprehension the various clauses which it contains as being likely to increase the difficulties under which your petitioners and overseers in general now labour, inasmuch as there does not seem to be any provision in the Bill to amend the numerous laws of settlement and their great defects, or to improve the practical working of the Settlement Law, or its well-known defects.

That your petitioners beg humbly to represent that they are advised, and do believe, that the confusion which now surrounds the laws of settlement of the poor, and of their removal, is capable of being cleared away; and that the laws, if consolidated and amended, could be greatly improved and simplified, and that such a course would be productive of the greatest benefit to parishes, by the saving of vexatious questions and disputes, and litigation as to settlement, and would prove beneficial not only to rate-payers, but would also be an act of justice towards the poor.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray, that your honourable House will be pleased to take into consideration the existing state of the law of settlement, and of removal of the poor, and the manner in which the interests of the rate-payers and the welfare of the poor are affected; and whether relief in the premises might not be afforded by a revision, consolidation, and amendment of the law of settlement and of the law of removal.

THE EXPENSES OF CORONERS.

The conduct pursued by the justices of the county of Devon has produced a considerable sensation among the coroners of that county. It would seem that in instances where inquests have been held, and verdicts of "Natural Death," or "Died by the visitation of God," have been returned, the justices in quarter sessions assembled have refused to allow the fees and expenses of the inquests, on the ground that such inquests were unnecessary.

The coroners contend that the justices are thereby making what amounts to an ex post facto law, because it is not until the inquest has been held that such a decision can be come to; nor is it possible for a coroner to anticipate what the verdict will be until the facts upon oath are before him; he cannot make a previous inquiry, because of whom is he to inquire? It is reported to him that there has been a sudden death, and, according to the common law, he is bound to make inquiry as to the cause of the death. "The office of coroner is so ancient," says Judge Dodderidge (3 Bulstrode, 176), "that its commencement is unknown, but the duties of the office seem to have been well defined and understood in the time of Bracton, who writes, 'That without delay, upon sudden death, the coroner do inquire;' and the statute 4 Edward 1, De officio coronatoribus, is directory; and by the stat. 3 Henry 7, c. 1, the coroner is to forfeit 100s. if he be remiss and make not inquisition upon the view of the body dead."

The registrar-general of births and deaths, in his report for 1841, says, "That the coroner's inquest, from its popular nature, has contributed not only to the detection and repression of crime, but to the general abhorrence of assassination and the tender regard for human life which pervade the minds of the people of this country;" and he says, in 1845, "Inquests are held in the cases of sudden as well as violent deaths."

But Lord Denman's dictum, in the case of The Queen v. The Great Western Railway Company, has been seized upon by the justices of Devon. His lordship in that case is reported to have said, "If the verdict be 'Death by the visitation of God,' nothing more is done, for, in truth, it appears that there was no occasion for an inquest."

The preliminary step, in order to punish crime, is the inquiry and committal by a magistrate of the supposed offender, and yet no fault is found with that magistrate, although the party is subsequently acquitted. He had information that a crime had been committed, and he was called upon to institute an inquiry. The coroner has information brought to him; he is bound to institute an inquiry. If it should appear that the death should have been caused by violence he is paid his fees, but if it should turn out that the party, although dying suddenly, died from natural causes, his expenses are withheld; thus giving a power to the justices over the coroner which they ought not to possess. The magistrate cannot deprive a prosecutor of his expenses because a prisoner has been acquitted.

The justices of Devon came to this resolution, "That the committee of accounts be instructed not to pass the expense of any inquest where the verdict is 'Natural death,' or 'Visitation of God,' unless reasons are shewn them that suspicion fairly arose that such death was not natural." How can this be ascertained without inquiry, and how is this inquiry to be carried on but by the means pointed out by the law? At the Midsummer Sessions of 1845, the expenses of several inquests were disallowed. One of them was an inquest held upon the body of an old man of 74 years of age, who was last seen alive on the evening of the 10th June, and was found dead the next afternoon in an outhouse; and yet it was held by the justices that this was not a fit subject for an inquest. Another instance was, that of information being conveyed to a coroner, that a child had been found dead in its mother's bed; the informant could not say whether it had been overlaid, or smothered, or had died from natural causes. The coroner thought it his duty to hold an inquest, the matter was inquired into, and the jury returned a verdict of "Natural death." The justices refused to allow any of the expenses of that inquest. If such a proceeding is to be sanctioned, how can a coroner act? A mother of an illegitimate child has only to smother the child instead of cutting its throat, and she can ride off with impunity.—The Times.

THE PRACTICE OF SUMMARY CONVICTIONS.

By T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

PART III.—CHAPTER IV.

The Formal Conviction and Order—concluded.

The statement of the adjudication.—After the statement of the evidence the conviction should contain an adjudication of the defendant's being convicted, and this notwithstanding the punishment is fixed and unalterable, since no conviction can be sustained unless it has the judgment of the justices apparent upon its face. "A conviction," it was said in Res. v. Harris (7 T. R. 238), "is in the nature of a verdict and judgment, and therefore it must be precise and certain," and in that case the conviction was quashed, for not stating any judgment of fine or imprisonment, though it stated that "he is hereby convicted by us, the said justices, by the testimony of, &c. of the offence charged upon him in and by the said information, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided." (Day v. King, 5 Ad. & Ell. 365.) No precise form of words need be used, and it is only necessary that the decision of the magistrates should be expressed with clearness and certainty. The form given in the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, should, however, be used in all cases to which it is applicable, but inasmuch as it applies only to pecuniary forfeitures, care must be observed in framing the adjudication in cases where it cannot be used. (See forms.) The only general rule that can be laid down relative to an adjudication is that it must strictly follow the provisions of the Act of Parliament upon which it is founded, and that any excess, diminution, or variation of the penalty fixed by the statute will render the conviction entirely void. (R. v. Hall, Cowp. 60; R. v. Elwell, 2 Lord Ray. 1514; R. v. Salomons, 1 T. R. 251; Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & S. 314; R. v. Payne, 4 D. & Ry. 72.)

Statement of penalty.—The statement of the penalty, whether of fine or imprisonment, must be exact, and according to the statute; thus the sum must be fixed, and the length of imprisonment clearly defined. (R. v. Elwell, 2 Lord Ray. supra; R. v. Vipont, 2 Burr. 1163; R. v. Ashton, 8 Mod. 175; Re Reynolds, 13 L. J. M.C. 65; 1 New Sess. Ca. 51; Fletcher v. Cuthbert, 1 New Sess. Ca. 589); and the same observations apply to the costs when awarded.

Of including several offences and penalties in one conviction.—There is no objection to including several offences of the same nature in the same conviction, but where they are so included, care must be taken that the penalties are properly adjudged; thus in Newman v. Bendyshe and Another (10 Ad. & Ell. 11), which was an action of trespass against magistrates for the seizure of the plaintiff's cart, the defendants justified under a conviction upon the 11 Geo. 4, and 1 Wm. 4, c. 64, s. 14, whereby the plaintiff was convicted of keeping his house open for the sale of beer, and selling beer, and suffering the same to be drunk and consumed in the house at unlawful times, and was adjudged to pay a penalty of 40s. as for a single offence. It was held that this conviction was bad, inasmuch as the acts charged constituted three distinct offences, to which only one penalty had been affixed, as upon a conviction for one offence only. (Res. v. Salomons, 1 T. R. 249; R. v. Swallow, 8 T. R. 284.)

When, however, several acts are charged in the conviction, it will in general depend upon the construction of the statute, whether they merely compose one offence, or are to be treated as distinct violations of the Act. Acts done on different days are always treated as distinct offences, R. v. Matthews (10 Mod. 27); but where they are committed on the same day, they ought or ought not to be so treated according to their nature; thus, upon a conviction under the 12 Geo. 2, c. 26, for selling books unlawfully imported, it was held that each act of selling on the same day was a distinct offence. (Brooke v. Milliken, 3 T. R. 509.) But under the 29 Car. 2, c. 7 (the Sunday Trading Act), it was held in Cropps v. Durden (Cowp. 640), that a person can commit but one offence on the same day, by exercising his ordinary calling on a Sunday, though the acts charged against him as having been committed on that day are distinct from each other. (Res. v. Bleasdale, 4 T. R. 809; Warneford v. Kendall, 19 East. 21; Melton v. Chaceley, 1 Esp. N. P. 123; R. v. Lovet, 7 T. R. 152.)

Where several offenders.—When several defendants are convicted of the same offence, whether it be in its nature joint or several, a joint award of one penalty against them is bad; for it should be several against each, that each defendant may know how much he has to pay. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 16; Morgan v. Brown, 4 Ad. & Ell. 515.)

It will often be a question of considerable doubt, whether, if two or more commit an act punishable by a certain penalty, distinct penalties of the full amount can be imposed upon each defendant, or only one penalty amongst the whole; or, in other words, whether one offence only is committed or several? If a statute impose a penalty for a certain act, then if two or more commit it, only one penalty is in general incurred. (R. v. Bleasdale, 4 T. R. 809; Hardman v. Whitesacre, Bull. N. P. 189.) If, however, the penalty imposed by the statute be obviously on each offender, or if the offence committed be of a several nature, so that the guilt of each person is clearly distinct from that of the others, a distinct penalty upon each should be imposed, as upon a distinct offence. Thus in Res. v. Hude and Others (5 T. R. 542), which was an indictment upon the 18th sec. of the 1 W. & M. c. 18 (the Toleration Act), for disturbing a dissenting congregation, it was held that each individual (out of many) was liable to the full penalty of 20l. imposed by the statute. The principle applicable to these cases is very clearly laid down by Lord Mansfield in Res. v. Clarke (Cowp. 612), where he says, "Where the offence is in its nature single, and cannot be severed, there the penalty shall be only single; because, though several persons may join in committing it, it still constitutes but one offence. But where the offence is in its nature several, and where every person concerned may be separately guilty of it, there each offender is separately liable to the penalty, because the crime of each is distinct from the offence of the others, and each is punishable for his own crime. For instance, the offence created by stat. 1 & 2 Phil. & M. c. 12, is, 'the impounding a distress in a wrong place,' one, two, three, or four may impound it wrongfully; it still is but one act of impounding, it cannot be severed. It is but one offence, and therefore shall be satisfied by one forfeiture."

Statement of award and distribution of penalty.—The conviction must state the manner in which the penalty is to be disposed of. Where the application of the penalty is fixed by the statute, it may be directed "to be distributed (or paid) according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided." (R. v. Scale, 8 East, 574, per Lord Ellenborough; R. v. Thompson, 2 T. R. 18.) Where, however, any discretion is given to the justices as to the amount of the penalty or the parties to receive it, these facts must be specifically ascertained and set out (R. v. Dimesey, 2 T. R. 96; R. v. Symonds, 1 East, 189; R. v. Smith, 5 M. & S. 133); and any error in these particulars will render the conviction bad, and subject the justices (if the defendant be imprisoned upon it) to an action of trespass (Griffith v. Harries, 2 M. & W. 335) (where all the cases are collected, and the law is very clearly laid down). (R. v. Priest, 6 T. R. 538; R. v. Glossop, 4 B. & Ald. 616; R. v. Smith, 5 M. & S. 133.) The 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, prescribes a general form of adjudication which should be followed in all cases to which it is applicable. Where the statute gives the justices power to mitigate the penalty, and they mitigate it accordingly, this fact should be stated; and the adjudication should therefore award the whole penalty, and then proceed to state to what sum it has been mitigated. A judgment for too small a penalty is as bad as one for too much. (Res. v. Symonds, 1 East, 189.) If justices are empowered to award damages "not exceeding" a certain sum, they ought to ascertain the amount of damage, and award a sum commensurate with the injury, and not award the full amount irrespective of the actual loss. (R. v. Harper, 1 Dow. & Ry. 222, per Best, J.)

Adjudication as to costs.—The conviction should also adjudicate as to the costs; and where the statute, under which the conviction has taken place, says nothing upon this subject, the justices may act upon the 18 Geo. 3, c. 19 (see ante, p. 43). The amount of the costs must be specifically ascertained and decided by the justices themselves at the time of the conviction. (Res. v. St. Mary, Nottingham, 13 East, 57, n.; Sekwood v. Mount, 1 Q.B. 726; 1 Gale & D. 358, s. c.; Lock v. Sekwood, 1 Q.B. 736; 1 Gale & D. 366, s. c.; R. v. Long, 1 Q.B.

740; 1 Gals. & D. 387; R. v. Clark, 5 Q.B. 327; R. v. Symonds, 1 East, 189 (see ante, 45). These must, however, have been a complaint made against some party to enable the justices to give costs under the statute, as where a magistrate having received information upon oath that a turnpike-road was out of repair, summoned the surveyor under the 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 50, s. 94, to appear at a special sessions, and at that time two magistrates ordered a party to view the road and report thereon to them at another special sessions, and such person having reported at the latter sessions, (the surveyor being present) that the road was out of repair, the surveyor was ordered by the justices to repair it within six weeks, and at the same time they ordered him under the 18 Geo. 3, c. 18, s. 1, to pay 2l. 3s. as costs, it was held that the justices could not award costs in such a case under the Act. (George v. Chambers, 11 M. & W. 149.)

The conclusion of the conviction.—The conviction concludes with the signature of the justice or justices, and the affixing of their seals, whereby it becomes a formal record, and is capable of being produced in evidence. (Dalt. c. 115; R. v. Ellwell, 2 Stra. 794; Basten v. Carrow, 3 B. & C. 649.) It matters not, however, when these are affixed, (R. v. Barker, 1 East, 186), so that it appears according to the date that the conviction in fact took place within the time limited by law for the prosecution. (R. v. Bellamy, 1 B. & C. 500; 2 Dow. & Ry. 727, s. c.) Where a warrant of commitment directed the gaoler to imprison a party for three months, omitting the day of the month on which it was granted, it was held bad, as the length of imprisonment was thereby uncertain. (Re Fletcher, 13 L. J. M. C. 16.)

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

INTERESTING CASE.—An affair of some interest came before the Civil Tribunal on Wednesday. It was relative to the property of the celebrated Lavoisier, one of the most distinguished men of science of the last century, and who became a victim to the revolutionary fury in 1794. From the statement made to the Tribunal by the advocate of Madame de Chazelles, the niece and heiress of Madame Lavoisier, it appears that her husband left scarcely any fortune, but that she was again married to another eminent scientific man, the Count de Rumfort, and that he died in 1836, having survived her second husband, and left a large fortune to her niece. It was not until August, 1845, that any pretender came forward to dispute the succession of M. Lavoisier, but at that time some person had busied himself with finding out the relations, or those who thought they were so, of the deceased, but who were all too distant, even supposing their relationship to be real, to have any legal claim, and Madame de Chazelles was served with no less than forty-nine suits. The delusion of these claimants had gone to such a length that they imagined that the two streets called Les Rues de Rumfort and the Rue Lavoisier, which were built upon ground belonging to the Count de Rumfort, had really been paid for with the fortune left by Lavoisier. For many months past these forty-nine claimants have furnished occupation to the gentlemen of the law; but on Wednesday, when the case was called on, not one of them appeared, either in person, or by his attorney, to support the claim, and the Court declared that none of them had proved a relationship to M. Lavoisier. In the course of the statement made by M. Fontaine, the advocate of Madame de Chazelles, he mentioned in an affecting manner the mode in which M. Lavoisier had met his death. He had, after his marriage, purchased for 700,000 francs a place as farmer-general, but continued his scientific pursuits. On the 16th April, 1794, he was arrested and thrown into prison, and soon afterwards was tried and condemned to die as a conspirator against the republic, and for "having put into tobacco water and other ingredients injurious to the health of the citizens who make use of that article." When he was summoned, in conformity with this atrocious and stupid sentence, to go to the place of execution, he was engaged in writing a paper on an important scientific discovery, and solicited a respite of three days to enable him to complete it; but the president of the Revolutionary Tribunal replied: "La republique n'a pas besoin de savans." On returning to prison, after his fruitless application, he resumed his writing, and went tranquilly on until the moment when he was dragged forth to be executed, leaving the sentence on which his pen was occupied in an unfinished state.—Galignani.

JUDICIAL BLUNDER.—At the Monmouth Assizes, which terminated on Saturday, April 4, Lord Denman's opinion that trial by jury may sometimes become "a mockery, a delusion, and a snare," was rather amusingly illustrated. It would appear that it is customary to insert in commissions issued from the Home-office for the holding of assizes the names of the sergeants and Queen's counsel who usually attend the circuit. On Friday week, Baron Pollock, fearing that he would not be able to open Gloucester Assizes on Monday, if unassisted, assigned the trial of several cases to Mr. Serjeant Allen, who took his seat in the Borough Court, and proceeded with business. After the trial of some twelve or fifteen cases, it was discovered that the learned serjeant's name had been omitted in the commission, and that his powers as a judge were about as great as those of the crier of the court. Consternation quickly seized the Court, counsel, prosecutors, et hoc genus omne—all but the luckless prisoners, who no doubt felicitated themselves with having gained a second chance for their liberty. Fresh juries had to be empanelled, messengers dispatched with painful celerity to remote parts of the county for witnesses, and, in fact, the entire of the proceedings to be commenced de novo. On Saturday morning, however, the irregularity was cured by the re-trial of the several prisoners by the Chief Baron. It is worthy of remark that one of the convicts, who had been sentenced to fifteen years' transportation on his first conviction, escaped with seven on the second.

ARREARS OF BUSINESS IN THE COMMON LAW COURTS.—The arrears of business in the three common law courts at Westminster, viz.—the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, continues undiminished, notwithstanding the exertions of the learned judges of those Courts by an increase of their sittings in banco after each term. The great and principal arrear, however, is in the Queen's Bench. From those lists it appears there are 101 rules for new trials, the first of which, Burgess v. Taff Vale Railway Company, was moved in Michaelmas Term, 1844; in addition to which there are 20 standing for judgment, two of which were argued as long back as Michaelmas Term, 1843. The special paper contains a list of 46 special cases and demurrers for argument, and seven standing for judgment. On the Crown side there are 41 enlarged rules, and in the Crown paper 43 rules. At Nisi Prius in Middlesex there is an arrear of 75 causes, 42 of which are special juries, seven only being stayed by injunctions. In London 80 causes, 18 of which are special juries, and eight stayed by injunctions. In the Common Pleas the arrears are comparatively slight, there being only five enlarged rules, 14 rules for new trials for argument, and three for judgment, one appeal case under the Registration of Voters Act, and 18 demurrers; at Nisi Prius in London 27 causes, remanets, 23 of which are special juries; and in Middlesex, six special jury causes. In the Exchequer the peremptory paper contains only eight rules; the special paper, five rules for argument, and four for judgment; and the new trial paper, 13 rules for argument, and two for judgment. At the Nisi Prius, both in London and Middlesex, the arrear is trifling.

HOME CIRCUIT.—At the conclusion of the business of this assize on Wednesday morning, a number of the petty jury made, through their foreman, a representation of what they considered to be a great hardship upon that body to the Lord Chief Justice, with a view to get his lordship's co-operation to enable them to obtain a remedy for the grievance of which they complained. The jury said that a great number of persons were summoned on the petty jury, and they had to attend a great many days, and all they received for their attendance was 8d. for each trial when they were engaged on the civil side. The special jurors who were summoned received a guinea for their attendance, and the day was fixed for the trial on which they were summoned, so that they were put to very little inconvenience or expense, although they were in a much better position to sustain that inconvenience; and the object of the present application was to impress upon his Lordship the necessity that there should be a change in the present system, and that the petty jurors should be more adequately remunerated for their attendance. If this were done, it would not be necessary to summon so many jurors, as there would, of course, be a greater readiness on their part to attend and perform their duty if they received reasonable remuneration to reimburse them for their loss of time and the expenses to which they were subjected.—The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said, he thought the observations of the petty jury were of importance, and he should give them his consideration.

HOLIDAY AT THE LAW AND EQUITY OFFICES.—The whole of the offices connected with the common-law and Chancery offices will be closed on Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday next, and by a general rule of court, signed by all the judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, no declaration, plea, or other pleading can be dated, filed, or delivered, nor the time for pleading to any declaration be computed between the Thursday next before Good Friday and Wednesday in Easter week; but where the time for appearing to any writ of summons or other process of such courts, within eight days after the service of such writ of summons or process, shall expire on either of the above-named days, then Wednesday in Easter week is to be deemed and taken to be such eighth day.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As one of the readers of the LAW TIMES, you will perhaps permit me to address to you a few comments on the views which you have lately promulgated with regard to the "liability of allottees," and especially with regard to the two recent cases of Walstab v. Spottiswoode, and Woolmer v. Toby. With the former of those cases I am well acquainted, as I have been concerned, not indeed in that, but in other cases arising upon the same facts, and in the affairs of the same railway. I confess that I am of opinion, though that view is against my interest, that the verdict in that case ought to stand for the plaintiff; and I am also of opinion that the verdict in Woolmer v. Toby, ought to be sustained, and that the two verdicts are not in the least inconsistent with each other. Had I not the certainty that I am supported in this opinion by some of the first men in the Profession, I should have been rather staggered by the obvious tendency of your mind to coincide with the popular view as to their inconsistency. I was, undoubtedly, one of those who was surprised at the line of argument which you adopted in both your articles on this subject; and though I believe I agree with you in the conclusion to which you come with respect to the case of Woolmer v. Toby, I entirely differ from your mode of arriving at it. I think that whatever is the liability of an allottee upon the contract which is made up of his application to the committee and their allotment to him, such liability is wholly unaffected by the Joint Stock Companies Act. You lay it down very broadly that "previously to that Act, a company had no recognized existence—was not formed, in fact, until the execution of the deed; they who promoted it were merely an association of persons trying to get up a company upon their own responsibility, armed by law with no powers, and if they failed they were very properly held by the Courts to be liable for the expenses of their incomplete scheme." Admitting, for the sake of argument, the whole of your proposition, I submit to your readers that it does not prove your case. It does not shew that such an "association of persons might not have recovered under the circumstances disclosed in Woolmer v. Toby, although it admits their liability under those of Walstab v. Spottiswoode." If a single person, called A, had been desirous of establishing a grocer's shop in a given village, for the establishment of which a capital of 200l. was necessary, and supposing, in the first instance, that A was desirous of bringing this about, without himself taking any share in the business, but for the convenience of himself and his neighbours. Supposing then, also, that A had communicated with two persons, B and C, each of whom had signed the following contract: "In consideration of your giving me a half share in the proposed grocery business at ———, I agree to accept the same, and to pay to you 100l. towards the capital"—supposing that neither B nor C knew anything of each other, but that each of them looked to A only as the party with whom he contracted. A then takes a shop and performs the other preliminaries for the establishment of the business. Upon application to B and C for their money B pays and C refuses. In consequence of C's refusal, 100l. not being an adequate capital, A is compelled to give up his project after having incurred much expense and trouble. Can there be any doubt as to the position of the parties? B is in no default. He has paid to A 100l. as his share of the capital of a business to be established. He has done his part towards enabling A to establish it. He knows nothing of, and has nothing to do with, the other means employed by A, nor of any other person with whom A has contracted. As between him and A the consideration has failed: no business has been established, and he is entitled to receive back the whole of his money. C, on the contrary, has broken his contract; he has been the cause of the failure of A's exertions, and he is liable to A, not to pay the 100l., but to pay whatever damages A has sustained by reason of the non-establishment of the business through his default.

I take it there can be no doubt that, as between A, B, and C, this would have been the legal result of the state of things above described.

Now, then, instead of supposing A to represent a single individual, let us suppose the same letter to typify ten, fifty, a hundred, or even a regiment of persons. Where would have been the difference? I have no doubt that B might have recovered back his 100l. either from the individual or the collective A, while C would always have been liable, in the same manner, for his breach of contract. I think, also, that A, in the above case, is exactly in the position of the promoters of a railway who have entered into the usual contract with some hundreds of allottees, and having received from some of them the stipulated deposit, have been prevented from carrying out the scheme by the default of the others. I think those who have paid their money as a deposit upon shares in a company which has never come to maturity must be taken to have paid it upon the assurance of the promoters that such a company would be formed, and are upon its failure entitled to their money back again, without reference to the causes which have produced the failure. On the other hand, I think the defaulters are liable to the promoters for whatever damage has resulted from their breach of contract. This I take to have been the law as well before as since the statute, and the material point in which I differ from you is, that I think the statute has no bearing whatever upon the question in either of the cases referred to, except so far as it disables persons from being promoters at all till they have complied with its provisions. The Joint Stock Companies Act is from beginning to end a disabling and not an enabling statute, and (with all due deference to your opinion), it recognizes the existence of nothing which was not recognized by law before, nor does it endow any person with any power or authority which they had not before. I very humbly submit that it is a great mistake to suppose that the promoters are by the statute empowered, properly speaking, to do any acts whatever. It was the object of the statute to prohibit the projectors of such companies from doing any thing whatever in their formation until compliance with its provisions. It therefore commences by prohibiting them from doing all acts whatever, and then goes on in certain cases, and upon certain terms, to except certain acts which it enumerates, and which were all perfectly legal before the statute, from that general prohibition. I therefore think you are mistaken in assuming that the Act in question has had any effect upon such associations, except that of depriving them of certain powers, rights, and authorities which they, in common with the rest of mankind, possessed before. There is one other of your statements upon which I will make an observation. Where do you find the clause in the statute which enacts that the deposit is to be applied expressly in payment of the preliminary expenses? I have searched diligently for it, and without success. I find, indeed, that the statute authorises the deposit to be received by way of earnest, an expression which I have some difficulty in translating so freely as you have done. My view of the question, therefore, comes to this, that the plaintiff in Walstab v. Spottiswoode is entitled to recover back his money, which he has paid upon the faith of the establishment, by the defendants, of a company which has not been established, and that the plaintiffs in Woolmer v. Toby are entitled to recover against Toby for his breach of contract, not the deposit itself, which is no longer necessary, but such damages as they have sustained by reason of its non-payment at the proper time; and I further think that neither one case nor the other is in the least affected by the statute to which you have alluded. I have the satisfaction of knowing that I concur in opinion with some of our most eminent lawyers, and therefore I have great confidence in the result. I am, Sir, &c.

A BARRISTER.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your remarks on the new Conveyancing Acts, you recommend the Profession to accept the short forms, and to guard themselves against loss by a fresh arrangement as to charges. In the latter part of your article you justly observe that "the applicability and utility of short forms have been monstrously over-rated by the proposers, who are manifestly ignorant of the practical difficulties that forbid their employment in many cases." How can these two propositions be reconciled? If the Profession adopt Lord Brougham's forms, they will be precluded from exercising a discretion in the matter. All conveyances, no matter how important, must be brought to this bed of Procustes, and be cut to the parliamentary length. I believe no one but Lord Brougham or Lord Campbell, whose ignorance is only equalled in this matter by their vanity and ill-will to the Profession, is not aware that Mr. Hayes, "venerabile nomen," Mr. Crabbe, &c. &c. have long since published short forms of conveyancing, and that there are very few of the Profession who do not adopt them in small matters. When affairs of importance come under their notice they generally get their drafts prepared or settled by counsel, and the spiteful remarks of Lord Brougham, on introducing his measure, fall much heavier on counsel than on solicitors. If Lord Brougham's Acts should, for the misfortune of the country, pass, rely on it that most useful class of gentlemen, the conveyancing counsel, will feel its effect severely, and will have to thank his lordship for cutting up their emoluments. For what man, with the fear of the taxing master before his eyes, will ever send his papers to counsel to settle? Will he not naturally, and ex necessitate, draw his own drafts, however desirable it might otherwise have been to have trusted to more experienced heads than his own? You seem to think that the length of conveyances operates against the transfer of property. This may do so to some small extent, but the Stamp Act is an infinitely greater bar. Doubtless this must have occurred to the noble and learned lords; but to modify this Act and make it correspond with the increased desire to make property change hands with more facility might undoubtedly benefit the attorneys, and they will take very good care this shall not be done. I do not attribute these motives to their lordships. They do not attempt to conceal them. They parade them in their speeches. It is truly melancholy to see the number of tinkers employed in mending and marring (inter alia) the law of real property. We have the Real Property Commissioners (who I suppose are having a good snooze), the Society for Promoting the Amendment (?) of the Law, and a host of individuals in both Houses of Parliament, those being most prominent who know least of the subject. Never was the old proverb of "too many cooks" more likely to be verified.

There was a body incorporated, as was generally supposed, to watch over the interests of the Profession, to amend abuses, and to guard it from ill-considered and unfair reforms. This body was called "The Law Institution," but nothing has been heard of it of late, but its having sanctioned by "nil dicit" one of the worst jobs of modern times. Perhaps you will be kind enough to inform your readers whether this body is or is not extinct.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

"ONE, &c."

CUMMING v. BEDBOROUGH.

SIR,—I am certain, from your courtesy on all occasions when I have addressed you relative to any error which seemed to have crept into any case reported in the LAW TIMES, you will not consider that I am intruding upon your valuable time by calling your attention to an error of considerable importance which appears in this case; an error which I am very sorry to add has led me into considerable annoyance by the attack made upon me by a client, who, relying on the report, was induced to proceed to a trial of a similar case in a special action on the case, at the last assizes for this county, in which Mr. Whateley, who argued the case of Cumming v. Bedborough, was leading counsel for my client, and the moment Mr. Whateley read my brief, he saw the difficulty my client was in. For the decision in the above case was not only "That if a landlord thought proper to distrain for rent without first deducting the income tax, he would be liable to a special action on the case," but to which report should have been added a most important point, viz. "to enable the tenant to support such action, he must give notice to the landlord that he had paid the same, and demanded repayment." At least this was the ruling of the Lord Chief Baron Pollock in the case of my unfortunate client. Now, in reference to the case of Cumming v. Bedborough, not one word appears as to the necessity of the tenant first giving notice of such payment, and demanding same; and, therefore, if such formed any part of that judgment, it ought to have so appeared in your report of it, if the Profession are to rely on such reports, and in which I have no doubt, they, as well as myself, place implicit confidence; and therefore I think you will not feel offended at my calling your attention to the variance in the report and that of the real judgment of the Court (at least so said to be); because either your report of the case is wrong, or the Chief Baron held differently in my case than what appears in the judgment in Cumming's case, argued in the Court of Exchequer, Saturday, February 7th, 1846, 6 L. Journ. 396.

I am, sir, yours, &c.

SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1846.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

MR. HAWES has introduced into the House of Commons the measure prepared by the London Committee of Merchants for the law of Debtor and Creditor. We have not seen the bill, but we understand that it is the same as that circulated by them among the Profession during the recess, and a short time since published in our columns. If so it be, we must say of it that it appears a very inefficient measure. It is but another of the tinkering to which this branch of the law has been yearly subjected, verifying the proverb as to the consequences of tinkering. Again do we call upon the city committee, and upon Mr. HAWES, to attempt no petty and perplexing changes for the present, but to await a more auspicious, because more leisurable, season in the legislature, and then to introduce a complete code of Debtor and Creditor founded upon definite principles, and reduced to practice with a well-constructed system of administration. The necessities of the country demand it, and ere long it must be forced by public opinion upon the attention of Parliament.

We have been tempted more than once to plunge into this great subject, and endeavour to drag out of the existing chaos some of the principles that should pervade a code, and some of the plans that might be adopted for working it. But the magnitude of the task has deterred us from the enterprise. Fifty articles would not suffice, for, once begun, new paths would open out, and topic would so beget topic, that the patience of the reader would be exhausted long before the argument. It has been preferred, therefore, to treat from time to time of particular branches of the subject with a view to impress upon the reader a sense of existing evils and desirable remedies, so as to prepare the way for the great change that must be made ere long.

Certainly it was with some surprise that we saw in a legal contemporary, a few weeks since, a severe attack upon a law that to us appears to be one of the most admirable provisions of recent enactments, and yet which we are surprised to learn is very seldom used; the consequence, probably, of those provisions not being sufficiently known to the Profession.

We allude to the Debtors' and Creditors' Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127.

As our contemporary has employed language unusually strong in speaking of this statute, which he terms "an atrocious violation of all equitable principle," we will briefly present an outline of its purpose and provisions, that any impressions produced by this denunciation, which must have been made when the writer was labouring under some strange delusion, may be removed from the minds of our readers, and that they may more frequently advise their clients to avail themselves of such beneficent arrangements.

And first for the purpose of the Act.

It is very important that persons whose affairs are embarrassed should be induced by some facilities to bring them to a settlement as speedily as possible. Postponement is almost sure to be attended with loss to the creditors, and unless some facilities be given, debtors will prolong the struggle while there is anything to lose.

Again, there is a very large class of persons who have incomes arising from their personal labours, but no property. When such persons become embarrassed, it is for the interest of their creditors that, instead of passing through a prison, and losing character and income, a portion of the profits of their future labours should be secured for the creditors.

And again, it is very desirable that a man anxious to act honourably, and make a just arrangement with his creditors, should be enabled to do so without public exposure.

The purpose of the Debtors' and Creditors' Act is to effect these most desirable objects.

It, therefore, permits an individual who may find himself in embarrassed circumstances, but who yet is anxious to make the best provision in his power for the payment of his debts, to consult the equal interest of all his creditors, and protect both them and himself from the rivalry of a few who may seek to press their claims at the expense of the rest.

To proclaim embarrassment to the whole world through the Gazette, would, in the great majority of cases, be to deprive the debtor of the income derived from his personal labours, and consequently the creditor of the only fund to which he can look for payment.

The manner of effecting these objects is by permitting any debtor, not being a trader, with the consent of one-third in number and value of his creditors, testified by their signing his petition, to present a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, setting forth his assets, his embarrassments, and their cause, and the means proposed for future payment, and praying that the proposal may be carried into effect under the superintendence of the Court.

Here, then, is the first security for fair dealing in the required sanction of one-third of the creditors before the petition can be presented at all.

Upon presentation, a commissioner is to examine privately into the matter of the petition, and if satisfied that all has been fairly done, and that the debtor is desirous of making a bond fide arrangement with all his creditors, and that the proposal is a reasonable one, he is to direct a meeting to be held of all the creditors.

Here is the second security against undue advantage. Now for the third.

A meeting of the creditors is to be held, to which all are to be summoned. If a majority of those present at this meeting approve the proposal, a second meeting is to be called, when, if three-fifths in number and value of the creditors present assent to it, and sign a resolution to that effect, the commissioner is to grant protection to the debtor.

It would be difficult to frame provisions affording more security to creditors than these—consulting at once their interest and that of the honest debtor; yet are these the enactments which our contemporary denounces as "a measure essentially defective and unjust," as "an outrage on justice," and so forth. Surely, if three-fifths in number and value of a man's creditors approve of a proposal for the settlement of his affairs, there can be no danger of "the temptations" which, it is said, this law "holds out to the unprincipled and dishonest." Whatever is for the interest of three-fifths, is for the interest of the remaining two-fifths, if the latter intend fairly, and desire only to share equally with the rest. The objectors to this statute must be a class of creditors who contemplate taking every thing for themselves, and leaving nothing for the rest. This is precisely the proceeding which it is the aim of our insolvent and bankrupt laws to prevent. The policy of those laws is to secure an equal division among all the creditors, and by no measure in the statute-book is this policy so successfully, wisely, and beneficently carried out as by the Debtors' and Creditors' Act.

LEGAL EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

MR. WYSE, the member for Waterford, has, it will be seen, brought this subject under the consideration of the House of Commons. Nothing was done, for the House was counted out, but the attention thus directed to the question will not be without its uses, in stimulating those authorities who may do much without Parliamentary assistance. Legal education in Ireland is, indeed, in a very undesirable position; it is, if possible, worse than in England; for here students can attend a few "readings," as they are called, and law lectures are delivered at the Law Institution, King's College, and University College. But the aspirant to the Irish Bar cannot obtain even these poor advantages at home; he must come to London for whatever learning he wishes to acquire. He is compelled to eat a portion of his Terms in one of the English inns of court; and hitherto they have given him only food for his stomach—they have made no provision for his instruction.

There are advantages in fixing the Irish student in London, which would make it undesirable to dispense with that portion of his apprenticeship. It must tend greatly to the removal of prejudices of nation, sect, and party, enlarge the sympathies, widen the experience, and assist mightily in preparing him for the duties of an advocate, so infinitely varied in their demands. But something should be done to teach him a little law, either at home, or here, or at both. Ireland may fairly claim a professor or two for her law students, and if King's Inn be too poor to provide them, they should be furnished by the State. But surely the admission fees of the Dublin students would amply provide for their instruction, if properly applied. Before the hand is put into the public purse, it should be ascertained that the corporation entrusted with the nursing of the embryo lawyers is too poor to provide teachers for them. Should it prove so to be, then let the State help them. But the revenues of King's Inn, and their application, must first be investigated, and we trust that an inquiry will be instituted without delay.

INDEX LEGUM.

A GENERAL Index to all the Law of the half-year ending 31st of December last, is in the press for binding with the volume of the LAW TIMES just completed. It is the most complete Digest of the Law ever published, for it includes all the reports. It will be stamped for post in numbers price 1s. each, and be comprised in about four or five numbers. As the impression will be limited, persons desirous of binding it with the volume should send their orders immediately.

THE CRITIC.

Sett Books.

The Bench Formulist; being a Directory to the Forms of Instruments and Processes used by Justices of the Peace out of Sessions. London: Knight and Co. 1846.

It is difficult to describe this admirable work, which condenses into a compact volume of 520 pages precedents of every form used by magistrates, with copious instructions for its use, and citation of the authorities and cases. After an introductory chapter on the nature and range of the duties of justices, the component parts of a Bench instrument are analysed and minutely explained. The third chapter describes those instruments, their classes and distinctions, and then follow the forms in the various classes of procedure, arranged methodically, and apparently exhausting the subject.

The plan is as follows.

The form is set out in italic on the left of the page, and on the right, side by side, is a note of instructions when and how it is to be used, with the statute prescribing it, or the cases on which it has been confirmed. A closing chapter treats of the defects in justices' procedure, and how they may be amended, or how advantage may be taken of them; and an alphabetical list of cases and statutes cited, with a copious Index, complete a work which will, we think, be found to be one of the most valuable assistants ever offered to justices and their clerks—indeed, to all practitioners who have anything to do with that now extensive branch of the law committed to the administration of justices of the peace. It is a work of wonderful diligence and labour.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Protector's power of giving or withholding consent.—The protector has the absolute power of giving or withholding his consent; and any shift or contrivance by which it shall be attempted to control this power, and any agreement to prevent him from exercising his absolute discretion, or entered into by him to withhold his consent, will be void (sect. 36); nor shall he be deemed a trustee with respect to his power to consent (ib.); neither shall a court of equity interfere to restrain him in the exercise of it (ib.); nor treat his giving consent a breach of trust (ib.); and the rule as to dealings between donees and objects of powers will not apply to dealings between protectors and tenants in tail (sect. 37). A protector who is the owner of a prior particular estate—as an estate for life, for instance—does not, as we have just before remarked by conveying away his estate, thereby cease to be the protector, but may at any time during his life consent to a disposition under the statute, notwithstanding the estate by which he was originally constituted protector has become vested in another person. And as on the one hand the protectorship does not cease by the protector's conveying away the property that originally made him such; so, on the other, he may consent to the disposition by the tenant in tail, and still retain his own estate, or he may, if he think proper, convey as well as consent; and if he does the latter, whatever estate he has in the lands may be included in the conveyance; but if he merely consents, the effect of such consent will be to bar all the ulterior limitations to take effect after or in defeasance of the estate tail, but his own estate in the premises will remain untouched.

Tenant in tail's power of disposition.—Every actual tenant in tail, whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, is empowered, after the 31st day of December, 1833, to dispose of the entailed lands, either in fee or for any lesser estate, as against all persons whose estates are to take effect after or in defeasance of any such estate tail, saving always the rights of all persons in respect of estates prior to the estate tail, and the right of all other persons except those against whom such disposition is by this Act authorised to be made (sect. 15). The Act, therefore, afterwards enacting (sect. 34), that where there is a protector his consent shall be requisite to enable an actual tenant in tail to create a larger estate than a base fee, a disposition made without such consent will only confer an estate of that kind, similar, as I have before remarked, to that formerly effected by a fine with proclamations. But if there is no protector, or the tenant in tail procures the consent of the former, then the assurance acquires all the force and operation which a recovery duly suffered would formerly have done; and will not only bar the estate tail of the tenant in tail, but also all estates, rights, titles, interests, and powers, to take effect after the determination or in defeasance of the same. As the statute prescribes a deed as the only instrument by which estates can be disentailed, a contract, though under seal, will be insufficient to bind any one beyond the tenant himself, who, as I have before stated, if he enters into a contract for the sale of the entailed property, will be bound to perform it specifically. A will is altogether inoperative. But, notwithstanding that an estate cannot be disentailed except by deed, it is not necessary that such deed should be an indenture, any assurance, unless it be a will by which a person can convey the legal estate in fee-simple absolute, provided it be enrolled as prescribed by the Act, will suffice. It must, however, be a formal instrument complete in all its parts; a court of equity having no power to relieve in case of defective or informal assurances; and every assurance by a tenant in tail (except a lease not exceeding twenty-one years at rack-rent, or not less than five-sixths of a rack-rent), will be inoperative unless enrolled in Chancery within six calendar months after the execution; but when so enrolled it will take effect from the time it was executed (sect. 41.) Yet, for all this, a purchaser should lose no time in getting his deed enrolled, as a subsequent bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration would be entitled to priority in case he should get his deed enrolled before the first purchaser. No proof of the execution of the deed is required at the time of enrolment, consequently the certificate of enrolment is no proof of execution. (Bishop v. De Burgh, before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, 22nd December, 1845, 6 Law T. 295.)

Where protector's consent is given by a distinct deed.—The consent of the protector may be given either in the disentailing assurance or by a distinct deed to be executed either on or at any time before the day on which the assurance shall be made. If given on a subsequent day the consent will be inoperative (sect. 42.) But where such consent is given by a distinct deed, it will be considered as absolute and unqualified, unless such deed shall refer to the disentailing assurance, and shall confine the protector's consent to disposition thereby made (sect. 43.) And when the protector has once given his consent he cannot afterwards revoke it (sect. 44.)

Assurance under this Act will pass both legal and equitable estates, and also mere rights.—An assurance under this Act will pass estates both legal and equitable, vested or contingent, and also mere equities and rights; so that, where the issue in tail would have been barred by a fine, with proclamations, under the old system, the person who, unless so barred, would have been the tenant in tail, may still, by a conveyance under such act, produce the same effect as he could formerly have done by being vouched in a common recovery, (sect. 19.) And although a conveyance without the protector's consent will only pass a base fee, still where such base fee, and the remainder, or reversion in fee in the same lands, unite in the same person, and there shall be no intermediate estate between the base fee and such remainder or reversion, then the base fee will be enlarged into as large an estate as the tenant in tail could have created with the consent of the protector. And it seems that, under a preceding statute, 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27. s. 23, that where an assurance which, for want of the protector's consent, can only convey a base fee, the title will, nevertheless, become enlarged into a fee simple, absolute at the end of twenty years; and thus, after the expiration of that period, become effectually exonerated and discharged from all estates in remainder or reversion, (sect. 39.)

Voidable estates, how confirmed.—A voidable estate created by a tenant in tail in favour of a purchaser, for valuable consideration, will be confirmed by a subsequent disposition of such tenant in tail by any assurance under this Act, (other than a lease not requiring enrolment,) by the tenant in tail alone where there is no protector, or with the protector's consent where there is; and should the latter refuse to consent, the voidable estate may still be confirmed to the extent the tenant in tail could have disposed of the same without such consent, (sect. 38.) But a voidable estate cannot be confirmed as against a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration, and without notice, (ib.)

Analogy between a fine and an assurance under the statute.—I have shortly before remarked that a tenant in tail might, by a fine, have barred the entail, so as to have concluded himself and his issue, whether he were actually seised in tail or not; nor was this extinguishing power confined merely to the tenant in tail himself, but extended also to the issue, the latter of whom might, by levying a fine in their ancestor's life-time, have bound the estate as far as they and their issue were concerned, or, in other words, the issue inheritable under the entail could, by levying a fine with proclamations, have barred their expectancies; but this they are now expressly prohibited from doing by the Act now under consideration, which expressly directs that "nothing therein contained shall enable any person to dispose of any lands entailed in respect of any expectant interest, which he may have as issue inheritable to any estate tail therein" (sect. 20); and the assurance by which he could formerly have effected this (viz. a fine), the Act itself has swept away. Even under the old law, if the heir in tail who levied the fine had died, and there had been a failure of issue of his descendants because the entail descended on him or his issue, the fine would not have barred any of the collateral issue (1 Prest. Abs. 403), and although the entail was extinguished by the fine levied under these circumstances, the lands, in case no alienation had taken place might still have descended to the issue, not as heirs inheritable under the entail, but as heirs general, the estate descending as a determinable fee, and so entitling the common heir to take to the exclusion of the special heir (Baker v. Willis, Cro. Car. 476); yet such special heir, though no estate remained in him, still retained the bare personal privilege of being vouched in a common recovery, the effect of which may, as I have already remarked, be accomplished by an assurance under this Act. This has introduced the modern practice by which a tenant in tail, where he sells his estate and is unable to procure the consent of the protector, enters into a covenant to perfect the title at a future period, when, by there ceasing to be a protector to the settlement, he will have full power by a disposition in pursuance of the Act to enlarge such base fee into a fee-simple absolute (sect. 38.) Precedents of forms both of the covenant for perfecting the title at a future period, as also of the deed of further assurance in pursuance of such covenant, will be supplied in the appendix.

Practical observations.—It must always be kept in mind that the Act now under discussion only enables the tenant in tail to dispose of the entailed lands, as against persons claiming under the entail, and those whose estates are to take effect after it, and does not affect prior estates (sect. 15.) For example, if lands were limited to A, for life, remainder to B, for life, remainder to C, in tail, with divers remainders over, and C were, during the life of A & B, with the consent of the protector, to make a disposition in pursuance of this Act, its effect would be to bar C's estate tail, and the remainders expectant thereon; but the preceding estates for life of A & B would remain as they were before. Nor can any assurance under the Act convey a larger interest than is commensurate with the estate out of which it is derived. In this respect, therefore, the law remains as it was previously: for where an estate tail was limited out of a lesser estate than a fee simple absolute, the tenant in tail could not, even by suffering a common recovery, have extended his estate beyond the duration of the estate out of which it was carved. If, therefore, it had been derived out of a base fee, or a fee subject to a condition, or out of an estate tail, never effectually barred, so as to enlarge the original estate into a fee simple, a recovery suffered by the owner of such derivative estate tail could not, in right of such derivative estate tail, have had any other effect than to bar the remainder or reversion in fee of the person by whom the estate tail was created, and of all persons claiming under him. (ib.) But a tenant in tail might, by suffering a recovery, have defeated a condition subsequent, annexed to his estate, a breach of which would have determined his estate; as for example, a condition to reside for a certain period of the year on the entailed property, or to assume the name and arms of the person creating the settlement. The like observations are also applicable to conditions for avoiding the estate on the nonpayment by the tenant in tail of a particular sum of money, as 100l. to A & B; or where the enjoyment of the estate is restricted to some uncertain period, as so long as a particular tree should stand. (1 Mod. Rep. 111; Page v. Hayward, 2 Salk. 570; Pig. Com. sec. 176; Fearne, C. R. 423, 7th edit.; Gulliver and Corrie v. Shuckburgh Ashby, 4 Bur. 1929; Drier and Edgar v. Edgar, Cow. 379.) And it seems that the same end may now be attained by an assurance under this Act.

What tenants in tail are restricted from barring the entail.—There are certain persons, however, who, notwithstanding they may fill the characters of tenants in tail, are, nevertheless, restricted by this Act from disposing of their estates, as indeed they were under the pre-existing law. These are, 1st, tenants in tail after possibility of issue extinct, (sect. 18.) 2nd. Tenants in tail where the reversion is in the Crown, (ib. ib.) And 3rd, women tenants in tail ex provisione viri, under the statute 11 Hen. 7, who are expressly disabled from making any disposition under this Act, except with such consent as was previously necessary under the said statute 11 Hen. 7, to have rendered a fine or recovery levied or suffered by her valid and effectual (sect. 16.) But except as to any settlement made previously to the passing of this Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 74) the statute 11 Hen. 7, is repealed, (sect. 17.)

Restrictions upon recoveries how removed.—The restrictions by which a tenant in tail was disabled from docking the entail, so as to defeat the remainder, except in Term time, during which alone a recovery could have been suffered, are wholly removed, and thus the remainder-man's very small remaining chance is taken away from him altogether; so that whether a disentailing deed be made in Term time or in vacation is wholly immaterial.

Other modes of assurance by tenants in tail.—Another mode of assurance by which a tenant in tail might formerly have barred his issue, was a warranty; as, for instance, by a lineal warranty with assets, or a collateral warranty without assets, provided he had an actual estate tail in possession; but by the fourteenth section of the Fine and Recovery Substitution Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74) all warranties of land, which after 31st Dec. 1833, shall be made or entered by any tenant in tail thereof, shall be absolutely void against the issue in tail, and all persons whose estates are to take effect after the determination or in defeasance of such estates tail.

The Fine and Recovery Substitution Act also cures defects in fines and recoveries (sects. 5, 6, 7, 8). This must, however, form a subject for our future consideration. The operation of the Act upon dispositions of copyhold tenants in tail, and upon the estates tail of bankrupts, will be discussed under the respective heads of Copyholders and of Bankrupts. The operation of the Act upon the landed property of married women, except so far as relates to the protectorship, has been already treated on under the head of Married Women. (See ante.)

Discontinuance.—Another mode by which a tenant in tail might formerly have disentailed his estate was by discontinuance. This he might have done by conveying away the entailed property by a tortuous mode of conveyance—as a feoffment, for instance—by means whereof the estate tail became discontinued, and the estate of the heir in tail and those in remainder or reversion turned into mere rights, which they could not have restored by entry, but were driven to their action by writ of formedon secundum formam doni. A mere innocent mode of conveyance, as a lease and release, or a bargain and sale inrolled, would not have produced this effect; and such heir in tail or remainder man might, at the time their estates would otherwise have fallen into possession, have entered on the lands or brought their action of ejectment for the recovery of them. And now, by the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, which, after abolishing writs of formedon, amongst the other real actions swept away by that Act, expressly enacts that no discontinuance shall for the future defeat any right of entry or action for the recovery of land; so that the heir in tail or remainderman, notwithstanding the tenant in tail should convey by such a tortuous mode of conveyance as would formerly have worked a discontinuance, may still enter or bring their action of ejectment, as in those cases where such tenant in tail had attempted to convey by an innocent mode of assurance; and now, by the recent statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, no feoffment made after the 1st day of October, 1845, shall have any tortuous operation for any purpose whatever.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

March 7 and 19.
BAGGATT v. MAUX.

Corried woman—Superior use—Claims against anticipation—Life estate and fee-simple.
Equity, which has created the separate estate, will so mould it as to render it effectual for its object, the protection of a married woman; and, therefore, where an intention to restrain anticipation is plainly expressed, the Court will give effect to it.
There is an absolute interest or a fee-simple is given to a feme covert, the restriction on anticipation is equally binding during coverture as it is where a limited or life interest is given.

Married woman with a separate estate, and restrained from anticipation, is absolutely disabled from making any alienation of her interest during coverture.

The testator, John Warren, by his will dated the 26 of September, 1836, gave and devised unto his daughter, Alice Baggatt, the wife of William Baggatt, he younger, "all that his freehold estate situate and being on the west side of Great Windmill-street, in the parish of St. James, Westminster, in the county of Middlesex, with the appurtenances; consisting of the premises called the Ball-yard, in the occupation of Mr. Robert Newman; and three houses in Great Windmill-street messuages, being No. 42, in the occupation of — Brodie, Esq.; No. 43, in the occupation of — Bushwell, and known by the name or sign of the Bull public-house; and No. 44, in the occupation of Mr. Brandish; to hold the same unto his said daughter, Alice Baggatt, and her heirs for ever; and after making dispositions of other property in favour of the other daughters, the testator declared as follows: "And I hereby declare that neither of my said daughters shall sell, charge, mortgage, or encumber the estates or property by me given, devised, and bequeathed to them; and that my daughters shall have, receive, and take such estates and property each of them for their own sole, separate, and respective use, benefit, and disposal, and have the sole management thereof, independent of their husbands for the time being; and the same, or any part thereof, or any part thereof, shall not be subject or liable to the debts, control, or intermeddling of their husbands for the time being; and that the respective receipts of my said daughters alone, signed by them with their seals, shall from time to time be a good and sufficient discharge for the said rents, dividends, and interest, or yearly produce, and moneys hereby given, devised and bequeathed to them respectively, to the parties paying the same, and that the said estates or property shall go to such child or children, or other person or persons in such shares or manner as they, my said daughters, shall, by their respective last will and testament in writing, or by any writing if that purport, to be executed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, give, direct, or appoint the same." The testator died shortly after the date of his will, and Alice Baggatt, his daughter, entered into the receipt of the rents. The premises, called the Ball public-house, were at the date of the will and of the testator's death subject to a lease for 31 years, dated the 19th of January, 1816, by which the rent of 60*l.* was reserved. In June 1840, Baggatt, the husband, purchased the residue of the term granted by that lease, and with the full knowledge, and the active assistance of his wife, borrowed 600*l.* of Meux and Co. to enable him to fit up and conduct the said public-house; and in order to secure the repayment of that loan, a lease dated the 10th day of June, 1840, for 31 years at the rent of 60*l.* was granted by Mrs. Baggatt and her husband to one Evans, who declared that he held the term in trust for Baggatt, the husband. The husband then deposited that lease, and the other deeds relating to the Ball public-house, with Meux and Co. and signed a deposit, agreeing to make an underlease, by way of mortgage, to secure the loan of 600*l.*, and subsequent advances. Baggatt soon afterwards disposed of the business to Croft, who rented the public house at 90*l.* a year upon an understanding with Meux and Co. that the rent should be paid to them. Baggatt and wife having afterwards refused to permit the rent to be paid to Meux & Co., they filed a bill against Baggatt and Croft, the tenant, for a specific performance of their agreement; and, upon a motion before the Vice-Chancellor, a receiver was appointed. On that occasion the Vice-Chancellor expressed a clear opinion, in conformity with his decision in Brown v. Bamford, that Mrs. Baggatt had a right to make the lease, notwithstanding the restrictive clause.

Mrs. Baggatt, by her next friend, then commenced the present suit against Meux and Co. Evans, and her husband, charging fraud, misrepresentation, and contrivance, and praying that it might be declared that, by the true construction and operation of the will of the testator, John Warren, she was restrained from disposing of her estate and interest in the public-house by way of anticipation, and from executing any valid conveyance or disposition thereof; and that the lease of the 11th of June, 1840, might be declared void as against the plaintiff, and that it might be declared that the lease was obtained by undue and improper means, and that the same ought to be delivered up to be cancelled; and that the plaintiff might be declared to be entitled to the fee-simple and inheritance of the said public-house and premises, for her sole and separate use, exclusive of her husband, subject to the residue of the term of thirty-one years granted by the lease of 19th of January, 1816.

Meux and Co. by their answer, denied fraud, but admitted notice of the terms of the will, and that the lease was taken as the best means of effecting a security to them. They proved in evidence that the plaintiff had been active in the whole of the loan transaction.

Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce held that the plaintiff was, by the terms of the will, effectually restrained from anticipation, and that the lease was a charge or incumbrance within the terms of prohibition, and decreed that the lease of 10th June, 1840, should be delivered up, and the interest thereby created assigned to a trustee, to protect the plaintiff's inheritance. Against that decree the defendants, Meux and Co. appealed.

Swanston and Bush, for the plaintiff.
Jas. Russell and Preeling for the defendants, Meux and Co.
The following authorities were referred to during the argument: Tullett v. Armstrong (4 Myl. & Cr. 390); Brown v. Bamford (11 Sim. 127); Bradbury v. Peidoto (3 Ves. 324); Doe dem. Evans v. Williams (5 Jurist, 219); Cox v. Chamberlain (4 Ves. 631); Barrimore v. Ellis (8 Sim. 1).

JUDGMENT.
THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only distinction I can find between this case and that of Tullett v. Armstrong is, that the clause against anticipation precedes the clause of the gift, and that is a distinction which I consider wholly immaterial. You need not, therefore, trouble yourself, Mr. Swanston, on that part of the argument, but as to the transaction itself, I am not quite sure that I understand it correctly.

Swanston stated the transaction.
THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—You need not trouble yourself further; I think the appeal must be dismissed. In the case of Tullett v. Armstrong, Lord Cottenham appears to me to have exhausted the whole subject, and I think it quite impossible that the principle on which such cases are based, as there laid down, can ever be again touched with success. There never was a case argued in this court in which the whole subject-matter appears to have been more thoroughly sifted, and Lord Cottenham there came to the conclusion, in which I fully concur, that, as a court of equity creates that particular kind of estate, called the separate estate, a court of equity has full power to modify it, where it sees fit to do so; a distinction which appears to me to be founded in sound sense, and a just appreciation of the principles of equity. In the case before me, the feeling of the parties, with respect to the law on this subject, is shown by the mode they adopted in their attempt to defeat the settlement. There were seven years of the old lease unexpired; and the reservation offered in the new lease is, in effect, a reservation to the husband alone. It is merely a circuitous mode of attempting to defeat the provision against alienation. The forms they had recourse to prove very plainly that, in their opinion, it was a good and valid settlement. I consider the decision of the Vice-Chancellor to be perfectly right. The appeal must be dismissed with costs. In the case of Tullett v. Armstrong, I have heard that Lord Cottenham struggled against the principle as being at variance with his previous impressions. The knowledge of that fact rendered his ultimate decision in that case still more valuable.

HUNTER v. NOCKHOLLS.

Practice.
Application by a defendant, the receiver of the principal defendant in the cause, to enforce an order obtained by the plaintiff.

Schenberg applied ex parte on the behalf of Mr. Nockholls, one of the defendants in the cause, as the agent of Sir Francis Vincent, the principal defendant, who is resident in Italy, to restrain the plaintiff Hunter, the equitable mortgagee of certain real estate of Sir Francis Vincent in Suffolk, from cutting timber on the estate. An order for a receiver had been recently made upon the application of the plaintiff, but that order had not been drawn up. The plaintiff, however, had sent men upon the estate to cut down, and who were actually engaged in cutting down, the underwood, and the plaintiff stated it to be his intention forthwith to cut down some of the larger trees on the estate.

Vice-Chancellor Wigram had refused the application as irregular, notwithstanding the act of cutting timber from an estate over which the Court had appointed a receiver was in the highest degree improper; that it was a motion by a defendant himself, a mere agent of the owner of the estate, against the plaintiff in the cause, to restrain him from cutting timber; and that if the defendant was the agent of Sir Francis Vincent, his simple course was to file a bill in his name against the plaintiff, and apply for an injunction in that suit.

The present was an application by way of appeal from the Vice-Chancellor's decision. The plaintiff had been expressly prohibited, by the order for a receiver, from proposing himself as such receiver.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have examined the papers and considered the case. It appears to me that Nockholls has no interest in the estate, and he cannot, therefore, ask for an injunction; but I think he may make an application against the plaintiff for violating an order of the Court, and that such an application will be attended to.

Schenberg.—During the interval which has elapsed since the application was first made to Vice-Chancellor Wigram, the plaintiff has abandoned his proceedings, and it had, therefore, become unnecessary to ask the Court for any order.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Monday, Jan. 12, 1846.

HINE v. LAST.

Trade mark—Right of surviving partner in trade—Representative of deceased partner.

W. B. H. and C. J. P. filed their bill, in which they alleged a right to a trade mark in the word "Ethiopian," upon black cotton stockings, acquired by W. B. H. while in partnership with others deceased, praying an injunction, and an account of profits. The defendants, by their answer, denied the plaintiff's right to the mark as a trade mark, alleging that other persons were in the practice of using the word prior to W. B. H. and any of his previous partners; but they admitted that they, the defendants, had copied the mark from the plaintiff's stockings, denying, however, they did so with any fraudulent intention. The evidence adduced by the plaintiffs as to their right in the mark was by no means satisfactory, but in some parts contradictory. But the courts in refusing a motion to dissolve an injunction held that the defendants having made so complete a copy of the plaintiff's trade mark, the difference being only nominal, must have been taken to have done so with an intent to obtain an advantage to which they were not entitled.

Held also, that although the personal representative of W. B. H.'s deceased partner might have some right to participate with W. B. H. in the property of the mark, yet W. B. H. had such a prima facie interest therein as entitled him to file the bill.

The present suit was commenced in October, 1845. The bill stated that the plaintiffs, William Baker Hine, and Christopher John Parker, were co-partners in the trade or business of wholesale hosiers; and that they, or the said William B. Hine, in partnership with other persons, all of whom were now deceased, or had retired from the said business, had carried on such business from the year 1827 down to the present time. That in the year 1832, a Mr. Burford, then and now also carrying on the business of a dyer at Stratford, in the county of Essex, used, and has ever since used, in his said business, a dye of a black colour, for dyeing cotton stockings and other cotton goods, which dye was and is of a very superior quality; and ever since the year 1832, the plaintiff W. B. Hine, and his said co-partners, and also the plaintiffs ever since their said co-partnership have caused and do, at a considerable expense to themselves, cause cotton stockings, purchased in an unbleached state, to be dyed by the said Mr. Burford with the said black dye, with a view to their selling the same when so dyed; and such stockings when so dyed are of great excellence and of a fast colour, which does not wash out. That in order to distinguish such cotton stockings from black cotton stockings prepared or sold by other parties, they have, ever since the year 1832, which was the time when they began having their stockings dyed with the said superior black dye, caused, and do now cause, each of the said cotton stockings when so dyed, to be at the same time stamped or marked with a trade mark, of the description following, that is to say, six plain lines one above another, and about the eighth of an inch apart, going round each stocking, near the top of the leg, and the word "Ethiopian," printed in Egyptian characters below the said lines, in the form of a segment of a circle; which said lines and word, or marks, are of a greyish white, or light slate colour, being produced by a partial extraction of the said black dye by means of a chemical process, and the same are very conspicuous on the stocking, and are as durable thereon as the said black dye. That the said Wm. B. Hine, and his late partners, were the first designers of the said trade mark, and the first persons who used the same, and the stamps with which the same have been and are made, have always been procured solely on account of plaintiffs and the said previous firms respectively; and such trade mark has never hitherto been used by any persons or person other than the plaintiffs, and the said previous firms, of which the plaintiff, W. B. Hine, was a member, except by the defendants, as hereinafter stated. The bill then went on to state, that although the plaintiffs and the said previous firms have been in the habit of selling various qualities of black cotton stockings, yet they never did, and do not cause any cotton stockings to be stamped or marked with the said trade mark, except those dyed with the said superior black dye, and those of a good quality in the material, and of the best kind of make, that is to say, of the make which is technically called in the trade "two thread and properly fashioned," describing the article. That the said stockings so made, with the said trade mark, had gained great repute for their excellence, and were in great demand in the market, where they were commonly called and known by the name of "The Ethiopian black cotton stocking," or "Ethiopians." That the plaintiffs had recently discovered that the defendants, who also carried on the business of wholesale hosiers, had sold, and were now in the course of selling, black cotton stockings, under the name of "Ethiopians," or "Ethiopian black cotton stockings," and with a trade mark thereon, precisely the same in all respects as that used by the plaintiffs as aforesaid, or differing therefrom in this respect only, that the six lines and the word "Ethiopian," are more faintly stamped, and are less conspicuous on the stockings so sold by the said defendants, than on those sold by the plaintiffs; and that the said defendants caused the said trade mark to be put thereon in fraudulent imitation of the trade mark used by the plaintiffs. The bill, therefore, prayed that the defendants might be restrained from selling or disposing of any black cotton stockings with any mark or marks thereon, similar to, or in imitation of the marks used by the plaintiffs as aforesaid; and also from stamping or marking with the trade mark, &c.; for delivering up to plaintiffs of all the black cotton stockings in their possession so marked, and for an account of the profits. The plaintiffs had obtained an injunction ex parte, according to the terms of the prayer.

The defendants, by their answer, denied that the plaintiffs had acquired any right to the mark, and word "Ethiopian," mentioned in the bill, as a trade mark, or that they, or any of the previous firms to which the plaintiff, W. B. Hine, belonged, were the inventors of that name as applied to stockings, and that the name "Ethiopian" was applied to black stockings for some years prior to the year 1832. And that the word "Ethiopian" has, during the last fourteen or fifteen years, been commonly printed and marked upon black cotton stockings in Nottingham and elsewhere, and the character of letters called the Egyptian character has been commonly adopted, in consequence of the facility with which it is printed. That Mr. Francis Pike Hewitt, of Nottingham, hosier, did, in the year 1830, manufacture black cotton stockings, and on such stockings had the word "Ethiopian" printed or marked, so that the same shewed in white on the black stockings, and that prior to, and in the year 1832, he sold several thousand dozens of such stockings, and that he continued to make and sell such stockings up to and in the year 1842. They, the defendants, admitted that in the month of May, 1844, they caused black cotton stockings to be marked for them with the word "Ethiopian," and with white lines running round the top in the manner described in the bill of complaint, and which are in imitation or copy from the marks which the said complainants allege to be, but which the defendants deny to be the said complainants' trade mark, but that the defendants did so without any intention to defraud or injure the said complainants, or of passing them off as the manufacture of the said plaintiffs. The defendants now moved to dissolve the injunction. Affidavits were filed, both on the part of the plaintiffs and also on that of the defendants. Those for the defendants in support of the motion going to prove that the word "Ethiopian" had been printed on black cotton stockings before the year 1832, and that the plaintiffs could not have any exclusive right to the use of the mark, and that it was not understood in the trade that they had such exclusive right. Those for the plaintiff going to shew the contrary to be the case.

Stuart and Pryor, for the motion to dissolve, contended that the plaintiffs had not made out a case of exclusive right to the mark, neither had they proved a fraudulent intention on the part of the defendants for the purpose of doing injury to the plaintiffs, which they were bound to do, otherwise their case utterly failed.

Cases cited for defendants, Knott v. Morgan (2 Kee, 213), Perry v. Truefitt (6 Bea. 66), Croft v. Day (7 Bea. 84).

Belhell and Toller, in support of the injunction.—The Lord Chancellor, in Mellington v. Fox (3 My. & C. 338), entirely negatives the proposition on the other side, when he lays it down, that although no fraudulent design in the use of the mark was proved, that circumstance does not deprive the plaintiff of the exclusive use of the mark. The plaintiffs here contend that they have an absolute property in the mark, they having used it ever since the year 1832. The defendants say, "We admit that we did copy the mark, but we prove, at the same time, that the plaintiffs have no property in the mark, because some one similar to this has been used prior to the year 1832." At law, such a proposition is wholly untenable, for where a particular mark has been used by a number of persons, and then it ceases to be used, and afterwards some other person has adopted the mark, and gained credit by it, he derives a property in it.

Stuart, in reply.—You have not proved the exclusive right to the mark as you ought to have done. And this more clearly appears by the case of Mellington v. Fox, than any other. There is a great difference between the case of a trade mark and that of a copyright. The former is a species of property which may only be gained by exclusive use, whilst the latter becomes known to all the world. The cases of Croft v. Day, and Goul v. Aleploglu (6 Bea. 69, note), shewed a circumstance very different from the present case, for there the name of the plaintiff was introduced.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I could not help at first being struck by the statement in the bill with respect to the devolution of the partnership, which made it seem a possible case that although the plaintiffs may have acquired a right to use this mark, yet, for aught I know, a certain portion of that same right may be vested in the personal representatives of the deceased partner. I remember a case wherein I came to the determination that a right to use a trade mark is in the nature of a personal chattel, and will, of course, devolve to the party's representatives; and for any thing I know, there might be some other person to participate with the plaintiffs in the property. Prima facie, however, I cannot but think that whether the plaintiff Hine has the right in himself, or whether he possesses that right jointly with some other persons, he has still a sufficient right to bring forward a case like the present. There is evidently much contradiction upon these affidavits; and I cannot think that if the defendants had not been impressed with the notion that the plaintiffs enjoyed a beneficial right in the use of the mark, they should, intending to make an imitation of it, have made so perfect an imitation as they in fact have done, the difference being no more than nominal. I think it is clear, upon the face of the transactions, that the defendants were aware that they might gain an advantage by so doing to which they were not entitled. My opinion is, therefore, that the injunction must continue; and I shall direct the plaintiff to bring such action as he may be advised, with liberty to apply.

Motion refused.

ROLLS COURT.

Jan. 13, and March 20.

IN RE BEDSON.

Taxation—Disputed items—Gratuities to stationers in registrar's office, and to clerks of Accountant-General.

An order was made directing the apportionment and transfer to a separate account of certain shares in a fund, in a cause in which a person was entitled individually, and also in a representative character, and the Master made his report thereon; the legacy duty payable on the latter shares could not be discharged by the person entitled, and therefore delay was occasioned; this difficulty being got over, a petition was presented in order to get the transfer of the fund as quickly as possible, and the order was not proceeded with. The solicitor, on taxation, as between him and his client, was allowed the costs of this petition, but not the costs of transfers obtained after the Master's report, but rendered useless by the delay.

Gratuities, called "expedition money," are usually paid to the stationers employed in the registrar's offices, and to the clerks of the Accountant-General, but they are not allowable (if opposed) on taxation, as between solicitor and client.

A solicitor will be allowed an item charged to his client before he has actually retained him, if the circumstances under which the service for which the charge is made was rendered are such as to shew that obstacles in the way of the client's accomplishing his object have been thereby removed, though the service itself was done for and occasioned by a third party.

In this case two petitions were presented, one by the solicitors, complaining of the Taxing Master's certificate, and praying relief, and the other by the clients, praying that the report might be confirmed; or if it should not, that they might be permitted to except thereto in certain particulars. The facts of the case are fully reported in 6 Law T. 294, and need not be here repeated. The solicitors having been successful on their petition, it now became necessary to take into consideration that of the clients.

The first item complained of was a sum of 3l. 13s. 3d. part of a sum charged for attendance, &c. on Hugh Brown, the plaintiff's solicitor in the suit of Lloyd v. Mason. It appeared that the property in that suit had been sold in 1838 in lots, and the purchasers required the delivery up of deeds, &c. before completing, which they could not have, as they were in the hands of the solicitor of an incumbrancer, who would not deliver them till his charges, &c. were paid. Brown not having the means of doing so, Messrs. Bedson and Rushton agreed to advance the necessary amount. At this time (February 1842) Messrs. Bedson and Rushton were in communication with Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, who wished them to co-operate with Brown, but it did not appear that they were retained as their solicitors till the 28th of April, 1842. The charge in question arose out of the attendances necessary in co-operating with Brown; and the petitioners objected to it on the ground that it was not incurred in the discharge of their duties to them as their solicitors, which they denied they were at the time. The next item objected to was the expenses of a petition presented in January 1845, for the apportionment and transfer to a separate account of certain shares in the fund in the cause in which Mrs. Campbell was interested individually, and also as representative of deceased brothers and sisters. It appeared that an order having been made on further directions that the Master should apportion and transfer those shares to a separate account, he did apportion them, and by his report of the 23rd November, 1844, declared what Mrs. Campbell was entitled to in both capacities, and transfers were afterwards taken out; but because of there being no means of paying the legacy duty, the order was not carried out, and the transfers became useless. After the money was raised to pay the duty, and in order to expedite the getting the money out of court, the petition complained of was presented in January 1845, to carry over the shares, &c. The expenses of the petition and of the transfers were objected to. The next items objected to were a charge of 3l. 3s. paid to the clerks of the Accountant-General, and a charge of 10s. paid to a stationer in the registrar's office. These payments are usually made, it seems, as gratuities, and are called "expedition money," and in this case were intended, as alleged, to expedite the passing of the order made upon the obnoxious petition of January 1845.

Kindersley (with him Craig) contended that the petition was unnecessary if the order on further directions had been carried out; and besides, it was presented without instructions. As to the shares to which Mrs. Campbell was entitled in her representative character, the petition clearly was unnecessary, the order in such case being simply to pay to the personal representative; and as to her individual share, it ought to have been carried to a separate account, under the order on further directions, and then a short petition only would be necessary to get it transferred. Besides, it was unnecessary to go back to the beginning of the suit, and recite all the proceedings therein, as had been done; and as to the dividends accrued due since the Master's report, it would have been easy to include them by amendment. Then as to the transfers, they ought to be disallowed, for they were quite useless. As to the item charged with reference to Brown, it is clearly to be disallowed, for the petitioners were not the clients of Messrs. Bedson and Rushton at the time; nor did they become so till the 28th of April, 1842. It is said they were, but they positively deny it, and the solicitors do not produce any entries in their books in proof that they were; and in the absence of entries, the Court will not take into consideration the mere fact that the petitioners had some communication on the subject with these solicitors. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I would rather take into consideration the circumstances of the case, and see whether service was rendered to Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, in removing obstacles in their way.] But the whole transaction had reference to Brown. Then as to the charges for payment to the stationer and clerks, they are quite gratuitous, and ought to be disallowed.

Turner (with him Prior) contended that the delay occasioned by the want of means to pay the legacy-duty, and the other circumstances of the case, justified the presenting of the petition; that the transfers were bespoken in the hope of being used immediately, and afterwards, by subsequent events, became useless; that the item in connection with Brown was a fair charge, for it was for the benefit of the petitioners; and, lastly, the gratuities to the stationer and clerks were usual and customary.

Friday, March 20.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is a petition praying for liberty to except to the certificate of the Taxing Master in certain particulars. The first subject of complaint is the charge of 3*l*. 13*s*. 3*d*. for business done for Mr. Browne. I have read the affidavits, and I think the business was done for or on account of the petitioners, and this item must, therefore, be allowed. The second item objected to is the costs of the petition on which the order was made for carrying over the funds in the cause. In 1844 an order was made on further directions for apportioning and carrying over the shares in the fund to a separate account, and on the 23rd November, 1844, the Master made his report, whereby he certified that he had appropriated certain shares to Mrs. Campbell, but the shares were not then carried over under the order, but a new petition was presented in January 1845 for that purpose. This petition, it is said, was unnecessary, and ought not to have been presented. In the absence of explanation, the presumption would be that the solicitors might have got the transfers under the order, and not having done so, I would disallow the costs of the petition; but the solicitor, using his best exertions, could not, because of the legacy-duty required to be paid, proceed in that way, and therefore a petition was not unnecessary, and the certificate cannot on that account be disturbed. There were three other items, which, it is said, ought not to be allowed. First, the sum of 10*s*. paid to the stationer or clerk in the registrar's office; and this, I think, ought not to be allowed. Secondly, the sum of 3*l*. 3*s*. paid to clerks in the Accountant-General's office, not for stated services, but by way of gratuity. These gratuities are said to be customary, and I find them mentioned in the Chancery Commissioners' Report of 1816, and they are there explained by Seth Ward; again I find them mentioned in 1825. The Report of the commissioners in 1826 recommended their abolition, but no general order was made to that effect; and the clerks, in 1827, returned them as sums for which they were entitled to compensation. True, it is customary to pay them, and they are taken without any concealment, and they are not forbidden; and on taxation, some of the Masters in Ordinary used to allow them, others to disallow them, if opposed, and others to disallow them altogether. There is no such thing as any right to the gratuity, and the clients are to have their business done with the same zeal and diligence, whether they are given or not; and they are, therefore, under no obligation to pay such a charge. The remaining item of 1*l*s. for the transfers I cannot allow; it seems hard, but the client is not obliged to pay it. The Master may review as to these, but not the others.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Monday, March 9.
WADDINGTON V. YATES.
Will—Construction.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust, to permit his wife to receive and enjoy the rents, issues, and profits thereof during her life; or otherwise should, with the consent of his wife, sell and dispose of his said real and personal estates, and invest the purchase-money, and pay the interest thereof to his said wife for her life; and from and immediately after her decease, upon trust, that his said trustees, or the survivor of them, should pay to A. B. the sum of 50*l*., and to C. D. the sum of 50*l*., which he thereby gave and bequeathed to them accordingly; and also that his said trustees, or the survivor of them, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, of such survivor, should pay, distribute, and divide, all the residue and remainder of the moneys to arise, and which should be received from his said real and personal estates, unto and equally between all and every his nephews and nieces who should be living at the decease of his said wife. The wife died before the real estate was sold: Held, that the nephews and nieces were entitled to the property, although not sold.

William Titley, by his will dated the 4th of January, 1820, after directing that all his just debts, funeral and other charges, should be fully paid, and bequeathing to his wife, Charlotte Titley, 1,000*l*., gave, devised, and bequeathed to Thomas Wilson and Francis Yates all and every his messuages and dwelling-houses, buildings, gardens, hereditaments, and premises, with their and every of their appurtenances, &c.; and also all his household goods and furniture, plate, linen, ready money, and securities for money, debts, and effects, and all other his personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever; to hold all his real and personal estate, and every part thereof, unto the said T. Wilson and F. Yates, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for ever, upon trust, that they his said trustees, or the survivor of them, or the trustees, executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, should permit and suffer his said wife, Charlotte Titley, to take, receive, and enjoy the free use, interest, wear and enjoyment of the rents, issues, and profits thereof, for and during the term of her natural life, to and for her own use and benefit; or otherwise should, with the consent and approbation in writing of his said wife, sell and dispose of all his said real and personal estates, to the best purchaser or purchasers thereof, and for the most and best price or prices which could be got and obtained for the purchase of the same; and upon receipt of the purchase-money arising from the sale of his said real and personal estates, should put, lend, and place the same out at interest upon Government or other real security, as they in their discretion should think safe and good, and also should well and truly pay the interest to arise, and which should be received therefrom, unto and into the proper hands of his said wife, for and during the term of her natural life, to and for her own use and benefit; and from and immediately after her decease, then upon trust, that they his said trustees, or the survivor of them, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, should well and truly pay unto William Harris the younger, his apprentice, the sum of 50*l*. and unto the said Thomas Wilson the sum of 50*l*. which the said testator thereby gave and bequeathed unto them accordingly; and also that his said trustees, or the survivor of them, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, should well and truly pay, distribute, and divide all the residue and remainder of the moneys to arise, and which should be received from his said real and personal estates, unto and equally between and among all and every his nephews and nieces (except John Bennett) who should be living at the decease of his said wife Charlotte Titley, and which the testator thereby gave and bequeathed unto them accordingly. The testator died on the 7th of July, 1820, leaving Charlotte Titley, his widow, and the two trustees named in his will, him surviving. Thomas Wilson died on the 8th of May, 1828, leaving the said Francis Yates surviving; and Francis Yates died on the 10th of November, 1830, intestate, leaving the defendant, Francis Yates, his only son and heir-at-law, him surviving. No sale of the real estate of the testator had been made during the lifetime of Charlotte Titley; the suit was instituted against the heir-at-law of the surviving trustees, and the representatives of the heir-at-law of the testator, for the administration of the estate under the direction of the Court: the principal discussion was between the devisees under the will and the representatives of the heir-at-law, it being alleged by the latter that in the events which had happened there was an intestacy as to the real estates.

Rolt and Hanson, for the plaintiffs.

Jedwine, for the trustee.

Archibald Smith, for the representatives of the heir-at-law, cited Brown v. Bigg (7 Ves. 279).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is one of the cases in which nonsense must be set against nonsense, in order to give the sense some chance. My impression is, that the mere legal estate, notwithstanding the words "permit and suffer," which occur in the first instance but not in the second, according to the true construction of the will, is vested in the trustees. That being so, the testator gives the real and personal estate upon trust, to permit the wife to receive the rents and profits; or otherwise, with the consent of the wife, to sell all his real and personal property, and then the wife to receive the income of the produce of the sale. Then, having provided in each way for her during her life, he goes on thus, "and from and immediately after her decease, then upon trust, that they, my said trustees, or the survivor, or the heirs (this is part of the nonsense), executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, shall well and truly pay unto William Harris the younger, my apprentice, the sum of 50*l*. and unto the said Thomas Wilson the sum of 50*l*. which I hereby give and bequeath to them accordingly." I think this shews a positive intention that those two legatees should have their legacies without reference to the mere personal estate. He goes on, "and also that my said trustees, or the survivor of them, or the heirs;" the heirs could have had nothing to do with it if the sale had been made in the lifetime.

A. Smith.—The trustees may both have died in the lifetime of the wife.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Well, probably that observation is liable to be made in the manner you have stated. Therefore, if that is a just remark, as perhaps it is, it would exclude that argument, if argument it deserves to be called. But it would leave this remark, as to the two legacies of 50*l*. "And also that my said trustees, or the survivor of them, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, shall well and truly pay, distribute, and divide all the residue and remainder of the moneys to arise, and which should be received from my said real and personal estates, &c." The remark may seem trifling, but in a case in which substance is to be protected against the form, it is a matter of legitimate remark that he does not say "to be received by the said sale," but, "pay what shall be received from my said real and personal estate." The whole will shews that if he had any nephews and nieces living, at the death of his wife, those nephews and nieces should have the entire property, converted or unconverted, real and personal. That is my impression of the true result to be collected from this will.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGMAN'S COURT.

Thursday, March 26.

Ex parte BOURNE.

A Court of Equity does not recognise the character of common law guardian as conferring a right to be receiver of the infant's estate.

Elmsley appeared upon this petition of an infant, by his father as guardian and next friend, to have a sum of money paid by the directors of the Dorchester and Weymouth Railway, for lands belonging to the infant, brought into court and invested, and asked for an order to pay the dividends arising from the investment to the father, on the ground that he was entitled to receive them by common law right as guardian, being already in receipt of the rents of the remaining lands.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I cannot make the order so far as the payment of the dividends to the father. You shew no sufficient ground for such an order; a mere title as common law guardian is not sufficient; the rights attendant upon such a character are by no means clearly defined amongst the authorities. The late Mr. Jacob, after diligent research, has stated it to be extremely doubtful what they are in reference to the estate of the infant; I therefore order the money paid by the railway company to be invested, and the dividends arising therefrom to be invested from time to time as they accrue.

BROWN AND OTHERS V. WHITEWAY AND OTHERS.

Romilly moved, "on behalf of Thomas Brown, Elizabeth Conway, widow, and John Filiter the younger, that the bill filed the 8th of Jan. 1846, in the names of the above-named complainants, by Messrs. Edwards and Whiteway, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, for Messrs. Watts and Whitbourne, of Teignmouth, and the demurrer thereto filed the 17th of Jan. next following by Messrs. Pain and Hatherby, of Great Marlborough-street, on behalf of the defendants Whiteway, Nicholas Watts, Geo. Ferris, Whitbourne Mortimer, Wm. John Watts, and Martha Hatherley, widow, and John Brown and Sophia his wife, may be taken off the file; and the demurrer allowed on the 20th of Feb. last may be discharged, and all other proceedings discharged; and that Messrs. Edwards and Whiteway and Messrs. Watts and Whitbourne may be ordered to pay the costs, and the cost of the present application," and was proceeding to explain the grounds for this application, when Molins appeared for Messrs. Edwards and Whiteway and Messrs. Watts and Whitbourne, and consented to the order being made to the full extent of the application.

Shaper appeared for the parties who had demurred.

Romilly proceeded with his statement of the grounds upon which the application was made.

Molins interrupted him by saying such statement was wholly unnecessary, and if he proceeded, a long contrary statement of facts would have to be made, which would uselessly take up the time of the Court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—You have had a consent for all you ask by your motion; you cannot put yourself in a better position by any statement you may be able to make, which would only lead to a counter-statement from the other side.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, April 15.

COCKERELL AND OTHERS V.

Use and occupation.

Evidence which simply negatives the title of a plaintiff suing for use and occupation, to whom the defendant has paid rent, is not an answer to the plaintiff's prima facie case. Either a counter claim must be set up, or it must be shewn in whom a good present title is.

This was an action for use and occupation, to which the defendant pleaded non-assumpsit, and a verdict passed for the plaintiff, with damages 60l.

Talford, Serjt. now moved for a rule that should call on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection. The evidence shewed that the defendant had been in possession for some time before May 1841, but to whom he had paid rent did not appear. For the plaintiffs, it was shewn that the defendant had paid rent to them "as the representatives of the late Mr. Cockerell," on the requisition of their attorney, from May 1841, to September 1843: and the probate of a will was produced, to make out the plaintiffs to be the representatives of the late Mr. Cockerell.

For the defendant it was contended, that as he had not been let into possession by the plaintiffs, he was not estopped from disputing their title. And he called witnesses, who shewed that no person of the name of Cockerell had been admitted a copyholder of the manor of Whitechurch, of which the lands in question were copyhold of inheritance, for the last fifty years, and that before the commencement of that period they had been in the occupation of a person named Beckett. Platt, B. who tried the case, said that the defendant ought to do more than simply negative the prima facie title of the plaintiffs, and ought to go on and set up a counter claim in himself, or a present title in others better than the prima facie title of the plaintiffs; and he told the jury that there was no defence to the action. This was a misdirection.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It is clear that there was a prima facie title in the plaintiffs; I do not see anything that could be held to get rid of it.

PATTESON, J.—The defendant could only get rid of the prima facie case made out for the plaintiff by making out another. Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Wednesday, April 15.

R. v. SANDERS.—Rule nisi for superseding a writ of certiorari, removing into this Court, from the Middlesex Sessions, an indictment for keeping a gaming-house, under the 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 10, on the ground that the certiorari is taken away by that statute.—Sir F. Kelly, S.G.

HARRIS v. JENNINGS.—Rule nisi for setting aside verdict as against evidence.—Crowder, Q.C. Refused.

PRIMBERTON v. COLLS.—Rule nisi for arresting the judgment, or for a reine de novo, in an action on the case for slander by words, not in themselves actionable, on the ground that the reluctance of the plaintiff's curate to co-operate with him in the discharge of his clerical duties, on account of the alleged slander, was not in law special damage.—Shee, S.

R. v. PELHAM.—Part heard.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Thursday, April 16.

HOWARD, Executor, &c. v. BUNBURY.

In an action of assumpsit proof of a transfer of stock from the plaintiff to the defendant is good evidence in support of a count for money lent.

This was an action of assumpsit. The first count stated that Irene Caroline Howard, the testatrix, heretofore, to wit, &c. was possessed of 1,000l. Four per cent. Consols, and that, in consideration that she would transfer the same to the defendant, the defendant undertook to pay, on request, the then value of the stock, and 5l. per cent. interest, until the time of payment. It then averred performance by the plaintiff, and a request made for payment.

Breach—Non-payment.

The declaration contained also counts for the price of the stock transferred, for money lent, for interest, and upon an account stated. At the trial at the sittings in London after last Hilary Term, the special count was abandoned, and a verdict taken for the plaintiff for 1,149l. upon the count for money lent.

Manning, Serjt. now moved for a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence. It appeared at the trial that the transfer had taken place in 1837, and that the defendant, who was then the holder of other similar stocks, did not sell out this or any other of his stock until some years after. There were some letters in evidence written by the defendant, in which the defence set up by him was, that he had purchased an annuity for the deceased with the proceeds of the stock, by her express desire; and it appeared that during the life of the testatrix he had paid her quarterly 5l. per cent. interest upon the nominal amount of the stock. It was submitted, that the real character of the transaction was a transfer of stock, not a loan of money. No money, in fact, ever passed between the parties. Had it been intended for a loan, the stock would have been at once sold out, and then the expense of commission would not have been needlessly incurred. The remedy is upon a special contract, not upon a common money count.

ERLE, J.—There is a case in which it was held that a plea of payment might be supported, by shewing that an account had been stated between the parties in reference to goods sold and delivered by each to the other. If so, why might not these parties agree to treat the stock as money?

TINDAL, C.J.—The only question is, whether there was any evidence at all for the jury. Upon the count for money lent, I think, upon the whole, that there was sufficient evidence to warrant their verdict. The letters themselves are evidence of that description, unless the mere fact of the transfer prevents their being so. This does not seem to me to be the case. There is a case very similar to this (Harrington v. Macmorris, 5 Taunt. 228), in which a similar objection was overruled.

COLTMAN, CRESSWELL, and ERLE, JJ. concurred. Rule refused.

PAUL v. DOD and HOLMES.

Where goods were sold upon an agreement that part of the purchase-money should be paid immediately, and that successive bills to become due three months after each other should be given for the residue.—Held, that an action for goods sold and delivered could not be brought until the last bill was due.

Debt, for goods sold and delivered, and for work and labour done.

Plea. Never indebted.

At the trial before Lord Denman, C. J. at the last Surrey assizes, it appeared that the plaintiff was an upholsterer, and claimed a sum of 240l. for the furniture supplied, and for decorations made for a house belonging to the defendants. At the time of the order being given, Holmes, one of the defendants, agreed to pay 30l. down, and to give successive bills of 30l. each, and at 3 months each for the residue, until the whole was paid. At this time the whole expense was expected not to exceed 80l. Subsequently Holmes consented to be jointly liable for the larger amount, but nothing more was said as to the mode of payment. The goods were delivered, and the work done during the month of April, 1845; the writ was issued January 6, 1846. No payment whatever had been made, and no bills given for any part of the amount due. Under these circumstances Lord Denman at the trial nonsuited the plaintiff upon the ground that the credit was unexpired, reserving leave to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for himself for such amount as the Court should think fit.

Channell, Serjt. now moved accordingly.—The defendants not having complied with their undertaking to pay part of the money immediately, and to give bills for other parts, we are remitted to our original cause of action. At all events, if we are not entitled to recover the whole amount, yet we may recover the money that ought to have been paid upon the execution of the order, and the instalments for which the bills would now rightly be due; that will be a sum of 90l. Credit for that part is now at all events expired. (Mussen v. Price, 4 East, 147; Dutton v. Solomonson, 3 B. & P. 582; Brooke v. White, 1 N. R. 330; Steadman v. Goveh, 1 Esp. 5; Nickson v. Jepson, 2 Stark. 227.)

TINDAL, C.J.—The plaintiff ought to have declared upon the special contract to pay part of the money down and the residue by bills at regular intervals. In that form of action the defendants are clearly liable for a breach of their contract. But they cannot be sued in this way at all, until the whole time which any of the bills would have to run is out. That is the true result of the cases to which we have just referred. I think there should be no rule.

COLTMAN, J. concurred.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. We cannot separate any parcel of these goods and of this work from the residue, or say that any part of the goods were sold, or any part of the work performed, for a money payment.

ERLE, J.—I agree with the rest of the Court. There is in this case one entire contract, one consideration, and one promise. We are not at liberty to alter a contract of this nature, or to divide it in any manner. Rule refused.

Note.—There were other grounds upon which a nonsuit was asked for at the trial, but this was the ground upon which the nonsuit ultimately proceeded, and the only ground noticed by the Court upon this motion.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Wednesday, April 15.

RICH v. BASTERVILLE.—Byles, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a nonsuit entered, or, why a verdict should not be entered for the defendant upon one or both of the issues.

JARDINE v. SHELDON.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause, first, why the nonsuit in this case should not be set aside and a new trial had; and, second, why the costs of the nonsuit and of this application should not be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. In support of the latter part of the rule he cited Doe dem. Tindal v. Roe (5 Dowl. 420).

RUMBALL v. UNETT.—SMITH v. UNETT.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why an order of Cresswell, J. made in these cases on April 8 should not be set aside, and why the service of the writs of summons upon the defendant should not be set aside with costs, for irregularity. The following authorities were referred to:—Newnham v. Hannay (5 Dowl. 259); Lush's Practice, 388; Hinton v. Stevens (4 Dowl. 283); Chubb v. Nicholson (1 Harr. & W. 666); *Graves v. TYTTE v. DAVIES.—Channell, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a rule to enter a nonsuit upon the ground of the improper reception of evidence. Rule refused.

HODGES, suing in formd pauperis, v. TOLIS and ANOTHER.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why he should not pay the defendants' costs of the day, and why the plaintiff should not be dispaupered. He referred to Reg. Gen. H.T. (2 Wm. 4, c. 110); Facer v. French (5 Dowl. 554); Doe v. Trussell (5 Ea. 505); Pratt v. Delarue (10 M. & W. 573). The Court thought that the facts hardly warranted the latter part of the rule, but on the former part there was a Rule to shew cause.

Doe dem. HARRISON v. HAMPTON.—Channell, Serjt. upon the part of the lessor of the plaintiff, moved for a new trial, upon the ground of misdirection. Res v. Edmondson (1 Mood. & Rob. 24) was cited. Rule to shew cause.

GAMBLE v. KURTZ.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the special verdict found by the jury should not be entered as a verdict for the plaintiff upon the second and third issues. Gleason v. Brand (4 Scott N.R. 944) was referred to.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, April 15.

RUTHORN AND OTHERS v. GAMBLE AND ANOTHER.

An action was brought by a provisional committee against their engineers. The defendants procured a release from two members of the committee, one of whom had parted with his interest, and whose release was therefore fraudulent. Held, that the release of the other was good, nevertheless.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs, who were provisional committee-men of the Liverpool, Preston, and North Union Railway Company, against the defendants, who were engineers, and had been employed by them to prepare the necessary plans and sections for deposit at the Board of Trade, &c.

Crompton now moved for a rule to shew cause why a plea of release pleaded herein, purs darrein continuance, should not be set aside, on the ground of fraud. It appeared that the defendants had been employed by the company to prepare the plans and sections of the line for the company, and had engaged to do so by the 30th of November, in time to be deposited with clerks of the peace of the various counties through which the line passed, and also at the Board of Trade; but they had failed to fulfil their contract, whereby the company were prevented from going to Parliament this session. Many letters had been written to the defendants by the company, pressing them to forward the work, which they had promised to do on receiving advances of money, which from time to time had been paid to them accordingly; but in spite of this the plans and sections were not forthcoming on the 30th of November, nor indeed could the company obtain them from the defendants afterwards.

Upon this an action was brought against them in the names of the provisional committee, which was ripe for trial at the spring assizes, when a plea of release by two of the plaintiffs was pleaded purs darrein continuance; the release being dated the 19th of March, the plea put in on the 20th. It was now submitted, that the release had been obtained by fraud and collusion between the defendants and the parties giving it—they being only nominal parties to the action, and joined for the sake of form, but not possessing any real interest therein. They were both friends of the defendants; and one of them, of the name of Randle, had, it appeared, received 1l. per share on the shares he held on account of his deposit, and had given up all interest in the residue, on receiving an indemnity against all responsibility from the other provisional committee-men, and had authorised them to use his name in all actions, suits, &c. So it was contended, that he was a mere naked trustee for the others, with only a colourable interest, and that his releasing the defendants was a gross fraud.

The other person releasing, Duncan did so jointly with him; he had originally possessed 200 shares, but 150 of them had come in, and it was not known even whether he held the remaining 50, and had any interest in the company, but at all events it was submitted that as he had released jointly with Randle, the whole transaction was tainted with fraud, and the Court would set aside the plea.

POLLOCK, C.B.—If one party is entitled to release, his doing so with another who has no such power will not vitiate the release by him, and a release by one is as good as two; here you shew that Duncan has some interest, for he holds 50 shares.

Crompton.—But this is in reality a fraud by him, for he has parted with nearly all his interest, and Phillips v. Clagett (11 M. & W. 84) shews that the party releasing must have some immediate interest in the subject-matter of the action to enable him to release, which it is submitted that Duncan had not here, and there is a case of distinct fraud against all the parties.

By the COURT.—This is really a case where two parties release, one of whom has no real interest in the subject-matter of the action, while the other has. Now you are bound to show an indisputable case against both, to enable this Court to interfere, and say this plea shall not be pleaded, which you have not done; your remedy must be by filing a bill against Duncan, and making him responsible.

DUNCAN v. THE MANCHESTER, BURY, AND ROSENDALE RAILWAY COMPANY.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Tuesday, April 7.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FORTLANQUE.)

Re LADD.

Amendment of schedule.

The Court is empowered, by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 30, to amend the schedule, even where there had been an omission of the signature of the attorney on one of the sheets.

Insolvent came up for his final order.

An objection was taken that there was a fatal omission in the schedule, the attorney who was the attesting witness having neglected to affix his signature to one of the sheets.

Duncan, contra, contended that, there being no fraud or culpable negligence, the Court might amend.

His HONOUR, after referring to the cases, said it was certainly an objection which ought not to be favoured, after two or three previous hearings on the merits of the case. He was at first afraid that the terms of the statute were so imperative that he could not admit of the amendment; but he was now satisfied that, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 30, there was a general power to amend the schedule. He should, therefore, allow the insolvent to re-swear the sheet in dispute, that it might be duly attested.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

NISI PRIUS.

Gloucester, Saturday, April 11.

(Before the LORD CHIEF BARON.)

DON dem. WOOD v. ELIAS.

A judge will not try a cause on which he had been formerly engaged as Counsel, but will order it to be made a remand.

A special application was made by Godson, who requested to know if his lordship would fix a day for the trial.

The CHIEF BARON.—By no means, it must be made a remand. It cannot be tried by me at all. It must have been perfectly well known to those who entered the cause that I should try the cause in this court, and it was no secret that I came down here only a few years ago to dispute that very will. I, at that time, entertained a very strong opinion upon that case, and have had no reason to alter that impression since; and it would be an act of great imdecorum on my part to sit and try the case. I expressed an opinion as to Dr. Lushington's sitting in the capacity of judge, after having been engaged as counsel, and I still adhere to that opinion. I consider that it is a course which is calculated to bring the administration of justice into question, if not into contempt.

Tuford, Serjt. on behalf of the lessee of the plaintiff, observed that his client would be perfectly satisfied that his lordship should adjudicate upon the case; but if his lordship felt a disinclination so to do, perhaps an arrangement might be made for Baron Platt to take it.

The CHIEF BARON said it was his duty to take the business of that court, and he did not conceive that he should be justified in asking his brother Platt to discharge his office for him. So far, therefore, as he was concerned, he should direct the cause to be made a remand.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

AFTER the shortest Easter recess ever known, Parliament last night resumed its labours. But such is the quantity of urgent business, that it is not likely any of the projected measures of Law-Change will pass during the present session. We hope next week to be enabled to lay before our readers an outline of the contemplated measure for the winding up of the railway schemes.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

BRICKS.—Return of the duties paid upon bricks in the several excise collections in England from 1839 to 1845 inclusive. The total amount collected in 1839 was 459,664l.; and in 1845, 558,415l. The amount in 1839, in the London district, was 93,911l.; in the Manchester district, 34,798l.; and in the Rochester district, 24,173l. In 1845, in the London district, 31,267l.; in the Manchester district, 44,290l.; and in the Rochester district, 44,644l. Including the metropolis, there are 56 separate collections; in five of which, during the last year, the amount received was less than 500l.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.—On Saturday last the report of the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies to the Board of Trade, for the year 1845, made pursuant to the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, was issued. It extends to 53 pages, and, as a matter of course, "railway projects" are conspicuously prominent in the details. The next return will probably shew a great many "building societies." By the section mentioned, the registrar is required annually to make his report under twelve different heads:—1. Companies provisionally registered. 2. Companies completely registered. 3. Cases in which application has been made for the enforcement of penalties for failure to register, and the result of the proceedings thereon. 4. Companies provisionally registered, but not completely registered in the year. 5. Regulations made by the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, with regard to the returns required to be made by the companies. 6. Return of persons appointed to the office of registrar of joint-stock companies, and other officers and clerks, and their salaries, &c. and the rules for the regulation of the said office. 7. Return of the amount of all fees paid at the offices for the registration of joint-stock companies. 8. Scale of fees appointed by the Lords of her Majesty's Treasury for the services performed by the registrar, and amount of such fees. 9. Causes in which companies have failed to appoint auditors, and the proceedings taken thereon. 10. Return of prosecutions under the Act for offences not before specified. 11. Return of the number of bankruptcies of joint-stock companies, and the amount of debts and assets of such companies. 12. Modifications made by the Committee of Privy Council for Trade in the conditions and regulations to be observed by companies. Information is afforded under the several heads, and it would have been an improvement provided a classification of the projects registered had been made. It seems that 1,520 joint-stock companies were provisionally registered last year, of which railways form the principal portion. Only "457" were completely registered in the year, some of which do not appear in the class "provisionally registered," having been either registered in the year preceding, or registered as existing previous to 1st November, 1844 (when the Act came into force). Of the fifty-seven there are only four railways. Under the third head already mentioned the return is nil. Under the fourth it appears that 1,464 companies in the year "provisionally registered," but did not in the time become completely registered. By the Act, the provisional registration is for a certain period, mentioned therein. Under the fifth head the return is nil; and under the next the officers appointed are mentioned. It appears that the total fees paid at the office in London in the year amounted to 9,857l. 19s. 9d. for which 7,190l. was paid for certificates of provisional registration, and only 36l. for renewals of the same (the fee for registration being 5l. 6s.). The fees paid at the branch office in Dublin amounted to 505l. 9d. of which 410l. was for certificates of provisional registration, and only 15l. for certificates of complete registration. The total fees in London and Dublin, on account of joint-stock companies in the year, amounted to 10,363l. 0s. 6d. Under the three next heads the return is nil. Under the eleventh, it appears that only one bankruptcy had occurred—"The Forth Marine Insurance Company;" the debts and assets had not been ascertained when the return was prepared. The Board of Trade, under the twelfth head, modified the deed, &c. of the Lewes Gas-Light Company. The returns are signed by Mr. F. Rogers, the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies.

H. S. CHAPMAN, Esq. (New Zealand).—Copies of the documents relating to the appointment of Mr. Chapman as a Judge of the Supreme Court at Wellington, in 1843.

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.—Returns for the year ending 5th January, 1846.

LUNATICS.—Returns made to the Lord Chancellor by the Commissioners in Lunacy, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100.

SUGAR.—Further correspondence respecting the claim of Spain, that the sugars of Cuba and Porto Rico should be admitted into the United Kingdom upon the same terms as the sugars of the United States and of Venezuela.

POPULATION, POOR-RATES, &c.—Returns of the population, the amount levied for poor-rates, and the ratio of the amount levied to the population, in each county of England and Wales, for the years ending Lady-day 1813, 1824, 1834, and 1844. Also, of the amount levied for poor-rates in England and Wales (exclusive of Kent, Middlesex, and Surrey) for the years ending Lady-day 1826 and 1841, with the amount and the proportion per cent. levied on landed property, dwelling-houses, and other kinds of property. Also an account of the expenses of medical relief in each union and parish of England and Wales, under the regulations of the Poor-law Commissioners, for each of the three years ending Lady-day, 1845, together with the total cost of relief to the poor in each union. The general ratio of poor-rates to population in England and Wales appears to have been, in 1813, 17s. per head; in 1844, it was only 8s. 7d. per head, or about one-half. Among the counties, the ratio seems to rise pretty regularly in proportion as the district is purely agricultural; and to fall nearly with the extent of employment afforded in mines, manufactures, &c. The three highest (in 1844) are Essex, Huntingdon, and Wilts, average 12s. 5d. per head,—the three lowest, Chester, Cornwall, and Cumberland, average 5s. 5d. per head. The amount expended in medical relief in England and Wales, in 1844, was 157,409l. showing a slight increase on the previous years.

Bills in Progress.

HIGHWAYS.—The Government Bill on this subject, brought into the Commons last week, renders it compulsory on the part of parishes and districts to combine for the management of the highways. Under the existing Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), a permissive power to combine is given; but so few parishes have availed themselves of the advantage, that it is deemed advisable to make the arrangement compulsory. The sum levied annually in England for highway-rates amounts to 1,600,000l.; and the number of officers employed in managing the rate and the highways is from 14,000, to 15,000. Under the compulsory system it is expected that from 500 to 600 persons will suffice. The new Bill repeals the present Act, and consists of 116 clauses; but with the exception of thirty-five, they are merely a re-enactment of the present law, with very slight modifications. Certain parishes are to be united, and the districts thus formed are to be placed under the management of local boards, the repairs of the highways in each being conducted by a competent paid surveyor. The formation of the districts is to be arranged by the Commissioners of Enclosure; and these gentlemen are to perform important functions of various kinds under the Bill when passed. The Board in each district is to be elected for two years, by the rate-payers of the several parishes; each of which is to be represented by one or more waywardens, as the Commissioners of Enclosure shall determine. No hamlet or division of a parish containing less than four miles of highway is to have a separate waywarden, but is to be combined for highway purposes with the parish of which it forms part. The waywardens, when elected, are to serve for two years. They are to be elected precisely in the same manner and according to the same scale of voting as the guardians of the poor. They are to appoint a district surveyor, a clerk, and treasurer—the latter unpaid, as he would probably be the banker of the district; and they are to fix the salaries of the two former, subject to the approval of the Enclosure Commissioners. At the annual meeting the accounts are to be submitted, and at the same time the surveyor is to present his estimate of the probable expenses of maintaining the several highways in the district for the ensuing year. He is to have power, with the unanimous consent of the waywardens, to convert the charge into a union, instead of a township or parochial charge. Except where it is settled otherwise by such consent, there will be two rates to be contributed by the parishes of each district,—first, a rate for the joint expenses of the district, viz. the salaries of officers and necessary expenses of the board; the Commissioners of Enclosure to determine in what proportion each of the constituent parishes is to contribute to this rate: second, a rate for the separate repairs of the highways in each parish. The accounts are to be audited by the poor-law auditor. It is also proposed that the maximum to be levied, viz. 10d. at one time, or 2s. 6d. in the pound per annum, shall be retained as in the repealed Act. South Wales is exempted from the operation of the Act.

THE WIND UP.

Ministers have lost no time in fulfilling the promise given by Sir Robert Peel on Wednesday last, that directors of railway companies, and through them shareholders, should without delay be put in possession of an outline of the Government measure for facilitating the wind up of their speculations. The following circular and inclosure have been forwarded to all provisionally registered railway companies from the Joint Stock Companies Registry Office:—

"Joint Stock Companies Registry Office, Serjeants'-inn, April 11, 1846.

"Gentlemen,—I annex a copy of a letter which I have received from the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, and which I am directed to communicate to such provisionally registered railway companies as it may concern. I forward it to you, as I do not perceive that your company has notified to this office either its dissolution or its incorporation by Act of Parliament.—I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

"FREDERICK ROGERS,

"Register of Joint Stock Companies."

"Office of Committee of Privy Council for Trade, Whitehall, 9th April, 1846.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to communicate to you the following information with a view to your making it known, with the least possible delay, to those provisionally registered railway companies to which it relates.

"It is the intention of her Majesty's Government immediately after Easter to propose to Parliament a Bill to enable any railway company, which at the time of the passing of the Bill shall not have obtained an Act of Parliament, to dissolve itself.

"By the Bill it is intended to provide for the calling of a meeting of the shareholders, either by the managing body, or by a given number of shareholders, at which meeting it is intended that the holders of a majority of the shares in the company, or the holders of three-fifths of the shares belonging to those present or represented by proxy at the meeting, shall have the power to determine upon the dissolution of the company.

"Due provision will be made for a sufficient public notice being given of the time and place of meeting, and of the mode in which absent shareholders are to be represented by proxy.

"Upon the dissolution being carried at the meeting, the property of the company is to become vested forthwith in certain persons to be appointed for the purpose of winding up the concern, and after discharging the liabilities, for distributing the surplus.

"The actual holders of scrip are to be taken as shareholders entitled by themselves, or their proxies, to attend the meeting.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed)

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No topic of interest has engaged attention during the holidays.

POINTS IN MAGISTRATES' LAW.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE WORD "FORTHWITH."

THE 4th section of statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101 (the Bastardy Act,) provides for an appeal by the putative father against an order in bastardy, as follows:—"And if, within 24 hours after the adjudication and making of any order on the putative father, as aforesaid, such putative father give notice of appeal to the mother of the bastard child, and also within seven days give sufficient security, by recognizance or otherwise, for the payment of costs, to the satisfaction of some one justice of the peace, it shall be lawful for such putative father to appeal to the general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden after the period of fourteen days next after the making of the said order, &c."

And the Amendment Act, 8 Vict. c. 10, s. 3, enacts that "in respect of any order to be made after the passing of this Act, the party entering into any such recognizance shall forthwith give or send a notice in writing of his having so entered into such recognizance to the woman in whose favour the said order shall have been made.

At the last quarter sessions the construction of the word "forthwith" in this section came under discussion.

In that case the putative father had suffered eight days to elapse between the time of entering into the recognizance and giving notice of such recognizance to the mother.

It was contended that this was not a compliance with the statute, which requires the notice to be given forthwith. This word, in its ordinary sense, was equivalent to "immediately," "without delay;" in its legal sense it means as soon as practicable. In this case, allowing the utmost latitude of construction, eight days could not be said to be "forthwith." It would involve this practical difficulty—that if the putative father were to take the seven days allowed to find recognizances, and then eight days to give notice of their being completed, and the appeal were to be within fourteen days from the making of the order, the mother might receive no notice at all. Besides, the whole spirit of the Act is to discourage appeals and protect the mother. Notice of appeal must be given within twenty-four hours; then the reasonable period of seven days was allowed to the appellant to procure sureties; and then, going back to its first strictness, the notice of the recognizance was to be given "forthwith," such notice being equivalent to a notice of trial.

On the other hand, it was strongly urged that the word "forthwith" was to be construed liberally, and that it meant in law a reasonable period. In this case no practical inconvenience had arisen, and the mother had in fact ample notice.

The Court, however, held that the statute had not been complied with.

In the same case, a question was raised as to costs. The statute empowers the justices to "order such costs to be paid by either party as to them or him may seem fit." Costs were refused to the respondent, on the ground that the decision was purely on a technical objection, and not on the merits.

But it appears to us that this rule, excellent as it is when applied to an appellant, bears very hardly against a respondent, who is forced into court against her will, and, being there, is bound to take every objection of law as well as of fact. If the rule were to be generally applied, there would be no end to appeals in bastardy; the rich father would successfully struggle against the poor mother, and the object of the law would be defeated.

NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—F's letter and his form of petition, which appear in your paper of the 11th inst. have called to my recollection that on reading the copy of that Bill, as inserted in one of your late papers, I fancied I discovered that it would not affect settlements in, or removals from, townships.

This pressed so much upon my mind as to induce me to address Sir James Graham upon it; and I then took leave to suggest to him that, as the law now stands, removing townships, parishes, or unions, are hardly dealt with in this; that, if they effect a removal of paupers, they are compelled to lose the expenses of procuring the order, which, in some instances, have been equal in amount to the maintenance of the paupers for some years.

This I submitted was capable of remedy in the following manner:—

By enabling the removing parish, township, or union officers to give notice to the officers of the parish, township, or union supposed to be the place of settlement of the paupers that it is intended on a day and at an hour, and place named, to apply to two justices for an order for the removal of the paupers; at which time and place the officers of the township, parish, or union to which it is intended to remove the paupers may, if they see fit, attend by themselves, their counsel, or attorney, and cross-examine the witnesses and examine the documentary evidence to be adduced by the removing township, parish, or union. And by giving the magistrates power to order, if they see fit, repayment by the respondent officers to the applying officers of their expenses in obtaining the order of removal.

It has since been suggested to me by an intelligent member of the board of guardians for this district, that with the notice of intention to apply, copies of the evidence intended to be adduced ought to be sent; and this, I think, would be a great addition to my plan.

Because the officers so served would have an opportunity, before attending the magistrates, of ascertaining how far they could hope to alter the facts disclosed by the evidence, and might with propriety accept the paupers as proposed by the bill, or by their cross-examination of the vis a voce evidence discover grounds to justify the justices in withholding an order of removal.

This plan would not do away with the right of appeal; but would much lessen the chance of necessity for it.

And would lead to meetings of the parish officers, and, whilst securing the rights of every one, would much lessen litigation.

I am, Sir, Yours, &c.,

A. T. STRAVENSON.

THE PRACTICE OF SUMMARY CONVICTIONS.

By T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

PART III.—CHAPTER V.

The warrant of commitment.

THE power to commit a defendant to prison upon a summary conviction being altogether of statutory origin, and in some degree repugnant to the principles of the common law, must be exercised with caution, since it is ever watched with jealousy. Such commitments are inflicted either as original punishments or as a consequence of the non-payment of the penalty or costs imposed, or other disobedience to the order of the justices. In these cases the enactments applicable to the individual cases should be consulted and strictly pursued. It has before been seen (ante, page 49) that, by the 5 Geo. 4, c. 18, s. 1, whenever a penalty is directed to be recovered, and the justices, in default of payment, may distrain on the offender's goods, and may commit him if a sufficient distress for the whole penalty and costs cannot be found, the justice may order him to be detained in custody until the return of the warrant of distress, unless the defendant shall give security for his appearance at such return, and that in case it shall appear by the confession of the defendant or otherwise that he has not sufficient goods to satisfy all the penalty and costs, the justice may, at his discretion, without issuing a warrant of distress, commit the defendant for such period, and in like manner as if a warrant of distress had issued and nulla bona returned; and also, by s. 2, that whenever penalties are directed to be recovered by distress, but no remedy is provided, where sufficient distress cannot be found, or in case it shall appear that the defendant has not sufficient goods within the justice's jurisdiction, the justice may proceed in like manner as upon a return of nulla bona, and may commit the offender to the common gaol for any term not exceeding three calendar months, unless the sum adjudged to be paid and the costs shall be sooner paid; and that, by sec. 4, the justice is empowered, where it shall appear to him that the recovery of the penalty is likely to be attended with rainous consequences to the defendant, to withhold any warrant of distress, and to commit the offender instead, provided it be with the consent in writing of the defendant. It has also been seen (page 43) that, by the 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, where any complaint shall be made before any justice of the peace, and any summons or warrant shall in consequence have issued, it shall be lawful for any justice, who shall have heard and determined the matter of the complaint, to award costs to be paid by either of the parties to the party injured; and in case of default, or of not giving security for the same, to the satisfaction of the justice, he may by warrant cause the said sum to be levied by distress and sale of the goods of the party, and, in default of goods, he may commit such party to the House of Correction for any time not exceeding one month, nor less than ten days, or until such sum, together with the expenses of the commitment, be first paid.

The foregoing enactments should be borne in mind in all cases in which a commitment is about to be made as a subsidiary punishment in default of payment of a penalty, since, should the commitment be made primarily when it is only authorised to be made in default of payment or a sufficient distress being had, it will be bad, and will expose the magistrate to an action of trespass for assault and false imprisonment.

It has been seen (page 50) that where a defendant is convicted in one penalty under a statute inflicting imprisonment on the failure of a sufficient distress, and he has goods sufficient to satisfy a part only of the amount to be distrained for, the goods ought not to be taken at all, but the imprisonment should be inflicted; but where he is separately convicted in two penalties, and his goods are sufficient to satisfy one penalty but not the other, they ought to be distrained upon for the one penalty, and the imprisonment should be imposed for the other. (R. v. Wyatt, 2 Lord Raym. 1195, 11 Mod. 54.)

When a defendant is committed for a second offence, the imprisonment may be directed to commence at the determination of the first imprisonment. (R. v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2577.)

In every case in which the imprisonment takes place as a substituted or subsidiary punishment, the fact and reason of its being such should be stated upon the face of the warrant of commitment.

Form and requisites of the warrant of commitment.—The commitment is usually made by the justices, or one of them, who convicted the defendant; but by the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, s. 2, a commitment may in all cases be made by one justice, even though the conviction must be made by two, and this whether such justice were one of the justices making the conviction or not. Where, however, the Act of Parliament providing for the conviction requires the justices who make the conviction to be the same who grant the summons, a conviction not by the same justice will be bad, and a warrant issued thereupon will consequently be illegal. (Jones v. Gurdon, 2 Q.B. 600.)

The warrant of commitment must in all cases be in writing (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 13; Hutchinson v. Lowndes, 4 B. & Ad. 118), under the hand and seal of the justice by whom it is made, and should be directed to the officer who is to apprehend the defendant, and the gaoler (R. v. Smith, 2 Stra. 934) into whose custody he is to be delivered. When the justices have authority to detain a defendant in custody until return shall be made to a warrant of distress, such order of detainer need not be in writing. (Still v. Walls, 7 East, 533.) The warrant also should describe the justice by whom it was granted, shewing his authority, and designating him according to his style and jurisdiction. (R. v. York, 5 Barr. 2684; Ex parte Addis, 2 Dow. & Ry. 167; 2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 13.)

The cause of the commitment must be stated with clearness, and it must shew that the complaint was one over which the justice had jurisdiction. (R. v. King, 13 L.J. M.C. 43; Johnson v. Reid, 6 M. & W. 124; R. v. Chaney, 6 Dowl. 281; Re Peerless, 1 Q.B. 143.) And it must state specifically that the defendant was convicted of the offence, which fact must not be left to inference. (R. v. Rhodes, 4 T.R. 220; R. v. Cooper, 6 T.R. 509.) So, too, there must be no ambiguity in the description of the offence, but it must be stated with certainty. (R. v. Harpur, 1 Dow. & Ry. 222; R. v. Dugger, 5 B. & Ald. 791; Re Copestick, 1 New Sess. Ca. 181.) It must not state the offence in the alternative or disjunctive. (R. v. North, 6 Dow. & Ry. 143; R. v. Pain, 7 Dow. & Ry. 678.) In general it will be sufficient to follow the words of the statute (R. v. Remnant, 5 T.R. 169), but there are many cases which have already been referred to in which this may not be enough. (Reg. v. Chaney, 6 Dowl. 281; Re Fletcher, 13 L.J. M.C. 16; Fletcher v. Culikarp, 1 New Sess. Ca. 529; Reg. v. Johnson, 2 New Sess. Ca. 170.)

It is never necessary, in a mere warrant, to set out the evidence (R. v. Waller, 8 Mod. 5), but where the warrant is itself in the nature of a conviction it has all the attributes of this latter description of instruments; therefore a warrant of commitment under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, which is in effect a conviction also, was set aside in Rex v. Tordoff; 5 Q.B. 933; 1 New Sess. Ca. 171, for not shewing that the witnesses had been examined in the defendant's presence; and also in Re Gray, 1 New Sess. Ca. 354; 1 New Mag. Ca. 116, S.C. for not stating that the evidence was given upon oath. (R. v. Lewis, 13 L.J. M.C. 46.) It is, however, imperatively necessary to shew clearly all that is required to give the justice jurisdiction. (Wilkins v. Wright, 2 Crom. & M. 191; R. v. King, 13 L.J. M.C. 43; Wicks v. Clutterbuck, 4 Bing. 333; R. v. Johnson, 7 Dowl. 702; Johnson v. Reid, 6 M. & W. 124; R. v. Peerless, 1 Q.B. 143.)

So the commitment must correspond with the conviction in every material particular, for if it shew an offence of a different nature, it will be bad. (Rogers v. Jones, 3 B. & C. 409; Wood v. Fenwick, 10 M. & W. 195; Daniel v. Philipps, 1 C.M. & R. 662.)

The warrant must be precise as to the time and manner of the defendant's imprisonment, and of the conditions of his discharge. Where, therefore, a party was committed to prison for three months, and the warrant omitted the day of the month upon which it was granted, the imprisonment was held bad. (Re Fletcher, 13 L.J. M.C. 16.) It should specify clearly whether the imprisonment is for a certain time, at all events, or only until the payment of a penalty, &c. (Dr. Groenvelt's case, 1 Lord Raym. 213; R. v. Rogers, 1 Dow. & Ry. 156; R. v. Helps, 3 M. & S. 331; Ex parte Addis, 2 Dow. & Ry. 167), and should not direct him to remain in confinement until discharged by due course of law. (Foxley's case, 1 Salk. 351; R. v. Barnes, 2 Stra. 917; R. v. Hall, 3 Burr. 1636; Robson v. Spearman, 3 B. & Ald. 493.)

The condition upon which the defendant is to be discharged should be plainly stated, such as the payment of a certain sum of money or otherwise. (Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & S. 314; Ex parte Leake, 9 B. & C. 234; Robson v. Spearman, supra; R. v. Elwell, 2 Lord Raym. 1575; R. v. Hall, Cowp. 60; R. v. Catherall, Fitz. 266; R. v. Payne, 4 Dow. & Ry. 72; R. v. Rogers, 2 B. & Ald. 778; see also Re Reynolds, 1 New Sess. Ca. 51.) The warrant also should state to whom the amount (if any) is to be paid. (R. v. Helps, 3 M. & S. 331.)

The warrant should be accurately dated; but if not issued too soon, it will not be vitiated by being dated before the proper time. (Newman v. Hardwicke, 3 Nev. & Per. 368.)

If the warrant be bad in part, it is bad for the whole. (Ex parte Addis, 2 Dow. & Ry. 167; Morgan v. Brown, 6 Nev. & Man. 57; Goff's case, 3 M. & S. 203.)

Some Acts of Parliament give justices a power to amend a warrant of commitment, but where such an amendment takes place under such an authority, the fact of its being so, should clearly be shewn upon the amended warrant. (Re Elmy and Sawyer, 1 Ad. & Ell. 843; 3 Nev. and Man. 733, S.C.) As a general rule, however, warrants of commitment cannot be amended after they are once signed and sealed, and in this respect they are like orders of justices; where, however, a return to a habeas corpus stated that the prisoner was committed for three months, by warrant of a justice (set forth in the return), reciting a conviction by the justice on which the warrant purported to proceed, for an offence under stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3, the recited conviction in which was bad; and the return then stated that a week after such commitment, the prisoner being still in custody, the same justice delivered to the gaoler another warrant of commitment, reciting and grounded upon a conviction of the same date as the first, by the same justice, setting forth the same offence, and imposing the same punishment, in which conviction no material defect appeared; it was held that the prisoner was not entitled to be discharged; the return shewing a good warrant under which he was in custody. (Reg. v. Richards and Others, 5 Q.B. 926; Reg. v. Walker and Others, 1 New Sess. Ca. 182, S.C.) In this case it appeared to be admitted, upon the authority of Elmy and Sawyer's case, supra, that a warrant of commitment can be amended after it is issued, a position the very reverse to that which that case bears out. In that case, Elmy and Sawyer were convicted under the Smuggling Act, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 53, and committed to gaol until they should pay a certain forfeiture. Section 90 of that Act empowered justices to amend any conviction or warrant of commitment. Four days after the commitment, the warrant, which was defective in point of law, was withdrawn from the gaoler's possession and another substituted, it not appearing by whom. The second warrant was of the same date, and signed and sealed by the same justices as the first, and did not materially differ from it, except that in the recital of the conviction certain words were said to be adapted for "slinging" casks instead of "slinging or sinking," and the name of the place at which the party was said to have been detained for his offence was altered. The above facts and copies of the warrants being returned on certiorari and habeas, the Court held that they could not presume, either from the facts returned or from the warrants, that the second warrant was substituted by the justices as an amendment of the first, in pursuance of the authority given them by the Act; and the prisoners were therefore ordered to be discharged. This, then, is an express authority that (except where a power is given by the statute) a good warrant cannot be substituted for a bad one; and if this point had been made in Reg. v. Richards and Others, it is difficult to see how the decision which was pronounced in that case could have been come to, since it clearly appeared by the gaoler's return that the second warrants, upon which he detained the prisoners, were nullities, from the fact of their having been made long after the committal of the parties for the offence with which they were charged by them.

As a general rule, if there be a warrant of commitment defective in form, and it shews a conviction, the conviction itself should be brought before the Court, together with the warrant, and if the conviction appear to be good, the Court will not interfere (R. v. Taylor, 7 Dow. & Ry. 622); but where the writ of certiorari is taken away from the defendant, so that he cannot remove the conviction, the Court will assume that the warrant correctly sets out the conviction; and if this appears to be defective, will discharge the defendant, it being the duty of the prosecutor in such cases to bring the conviction before the Court. (R. v. Chaney, 6 Dowl. 281.)

It has already been seen, that where the defendant is of sufficient ability to pay the expenses of his committal to gaol, they may be recovered of him by distress. (3 Jac. 1, c. 10; 27 Geo. 2, c. 3.)

The warrant of commitment, unless it be made returnable at a certain time, remains in force until it is executed, however long, if the magistrate granting it be living. It cannot be executed on a Sunday (R. v. Myers, 1 T. R. 265); and if the defendant tender the amount for which he is apprehended to the officer, it should be taken, and the prisoner set at liberty (Smith v. Sibson, 1 Wils. 153); and by the 3rd section of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 18, it is enacted that "if the offender, after commitment to prison, shall pay the amount of the penalty and the costs, he shall be forthwith discharged." If the defendant requires it, a copy of the warrant should be given to him (see the chapter on Habeas Corpus); and by the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 5, a gaoler is subject to a heavy penalty for neglecting to give a copy of the warrant within six hours after demand.

The manner of executing a warrant has before been shown. (Part 2, chap. 1, p. 46, ante.)

It may here be observed that by some Acts of Parliament, as the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 73 (the Larceny Act); 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 39 (the Malicious Mischief Act); 9 Geo. 4, c. 31 (the Act relating to offences against the person); and the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32, s. 45 (the Game Act), it is provided that no warrant of commitment on a conviction upon such Act shall be held to be void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party has been convicted, and there is a good and valid conviction to sustain the same. But as there is no general enactment upon the subject, a good conviction will not help a bad warrant where the statute providing for the proceedings does not contain such a clause. (Wickes v. Cluttorch, 2 Bing. 485.)

If the defendant be in custody upon an insufficient warrant, his immediate means of release are by a writ of habeas corpus.

TAWELL'S CONFESSION.—At the meeting of the Bench magistrates in quarter session last week, a resolution, moved by Dr. Lee, was carried by six to three majority, calling on the chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Cox, to give up the document handed him by Tawell just before his execution. Mr. Cox, who was in court just before the vote was taken, said, "I have made up my mind from the first that no earthly power shall extort from me that which was committed to my custody, let the consequences be what they may. I do not hesitate to say that, standing up in conference with a fellow-creature on the brink of eternity, and on being supplicated by him, I consented to hold as private and confidential that which was committed to me. I did give that promise."

The following building has been duly registered for the solemnisation of marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—The Presbyterian meeting-house, situated at Shaw's-lane, in Altrincham, in the parish of Mowden, in the county of Chester, in the district of the Altrincham union.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE term has begun with about the average quantity of business. But we understand that a vast number of writs have been issued, and a multitude of suits are in progress relative to railway affairs. These will probably occupy the Nisi Prius courts at the sittings after Term, but they will scarcely swell the term business till Michaelmas. It is, however, to be hoped, for the sake of all parties, that the government measure will enable an amicable arrangement to be made of all disputes, and a winding up of the affairs without further litigation. Until that Bill becomes law, it would be prudent to suspend proceedings of every kind. The question as to the liability of allottees is still fiercely debated, and the most contradictory opinions are given. Of this liability as a matter of fairness and justice there can be no doubt, but in affairs of this sort no man seems to dream of moral obligation. To save himself, he cares not what injustice he inflicts upon others. So the allottees, on the faith of whose agreement to pay their deposits the expenses were incurred, are now trying to shift the burden from themselves upon those who trusted to their promises, and some of the newspapers actually speak of a demand for contribution towards those expenses as extortion, and denounce the attorneys for threatening proceedings. At least, the demandants have justice, if not law, on their side, and our strong opinion is that they have law as well as justice.

A rule was obtained yesterday in the important case of Woolmer v. Toby, on all the points reserved at the trial. We shall report it fully next week.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

(Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.)

Her Majesty has been pleased to appoint R. Ingham, esq. Attorney-General, and J. L. Adolphus, esq. Solicitor-General, for the County of Durham.

IN TERM.—LONDON.

1st sitting, Wed. April 22 | 2nd sitting, Thurs. Ap. 30
 And by adjournment, if necessary, Friday, May 1.

AFTER TERM.—MIDDLESEX.

Saturday May 9.

LONDON.

Monday, May 11, to adjourn only.

The Court will sit in Middlesex, at Nisi Prius in Term, by adjournment from day to day, until the Causes entered for the respective Middlesex sittings are disposed of.
 The Court will sit, during and after Term, at ten o'clock.

EASTER TERM EXAMINATION.

The examiners appointed for the examination of persons applying to be admitted attorneys, have fixed Thursday, the 30th day of April instant, at half-past nine in the forenoon, at the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, in Chancery Lane, at ten o'clock precisely, to take the examination. The articles of clerkship and assignment, if any, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations approved by the judges, must be left on or before Wednesday the 22nd instant, with the secretary.
 Where the articles have not expired, but will expire during the Term, the candidate may be examined conditionally, but the articles must be left within the first seven days of Term, and answers up to that time.

A paper of questions will be delivered to each candidate, containing questions to be answered in writing, classed under the several heads of—1. Preliminary.
 2. Common and Statute Law, and Practice of the Courts. 3. Conveyancing. 4. Equity and Practice of the Courts. 5. Bankruptcy and Practice of the Courts. 6. Criminal Law, and Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.

Each candidate is required to answer all the preliminary questions (No. 1.); and it is expected that he should answer in three or more of the other heads of inquiry—Common Law and Equity being two thereof.
 Law Society's Hall, 9th April, 1846.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

BIRMINGHAM BOROUGH SESSIONS, APRIL 11.
CONVICTION OF A SHAM LAWYER, AND SENTENCE TO SEVEN YEARS' TRANS-PORTATION.

This morning after the grand jury had been impannelled before M. D. HILL, esq. Recorder of the borough, a man named Thomas Latham was called on his recognizances to take his trial on a charge of having obtained money under false pretences.

Miller appeared for the prosecution; Miller for the prisoner, a person heretofore very respectably connected in the town.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty, and by permission of the Court was allowed to stand close to and instruct his counsel.

There were five counts in the indictment. The first count charged that certain goods of one Peter Booth having been taken under a distress for rent, the prisoner falsely represented to Booth that he was an attorney, and could cause the goods to be restored; and by that false pretence obtained from Booth certain moneys amounting to 6s. 8d. with intent to defraud him thereof.

The second count charged the pretences to be only that the prisoner was an attorney.

The third count charged the prisoner, by similar false pretences as the first, with obtaining certain other money, amounting to 15s.

The fourth count charged a similar pretence to the second, and the obtaining 15s. thereby.

The fifth count charged the prisoner with falsely pretending to one Martha Collins, that he was an attorney, authorized to practise in the Borough Court of Birmingham, and by that pretence obtained from the said Martha Collins 10s. 8d. the moneys of her husband, John Collins, with intent to defraud him thereof.

Miller stated the case: he said the charges against the prisoner were of a serious nature. The present was a prosecution instituted for the purpose of putting a stop, if possible, to a system by which many great frauds might be, and were, in fact, daily being committed in Birmingham against a class of persons above all others least able to bear up against fraud. The facts of the case were these:—
 On the 10th of February last, a distress for 17. 17s. 6d.
 rent was put into the house of a man named Peter Booth, who lived in Windsor-street, and it was supposed by Booth that there had been something illegal in the proceedings. Booth's wife having previously heard some account of the prisoner, went to his house in Bradford-street, and asked him whether he was a lawyer. The prisoner said he was, upon which Mrs. Booth told him about the distress which had been put into her house, and it was arranged that the prisoner should come to her residence and see her husband. The prisoner called according to promise, and Booth took the prosecution which had been adopted by his wife to ask the prisoner if he was a lawyer. The prisoner said he was, and he could get back their goods which had been distrained, if they would give him 6s. 8d. Booth said he would not mind giving that sum if the prisoner could do what he said. The prisoner said "he was just the man;" and having received the money he departed.
 In the evening, however, he returned again, and said he must have 17. 2s. to issue a writ against the landlord, who had been acting in a very illegal manner.
 Booth asked the prisoner why he did not tell him that in the morning? The prisoner replied that he did not think of it; but it would be all quite immaterial to Booth, as the prisoner would be sure to recover all the money back again, together with the goods. It was, in fact, just as easy as giving two halfpence in change of a penny-piece. Booth then said he had not the money, but he would borrow it, and he did raise 10s. The prisoner said he must have 6s. more, and he would put the rest to himself, as it was a dead robbery on the part of the landlord. Having thus obtained the last penny his poor dupes could borrow, he decamped, leaving the goods to be sold the following Monday. The second charge against the prisoner was for having obtained money from a poor woman, named Collins. Proceedings were taken against Collins in the Borough Court, and the day on which notice was served the prisoner called at the house of Collins, and said he was a lawyer of the Borough Court, and if she would give him 10s. 8d. he would stop further proceedings. The poor woman gave him the money, and he left the house, saying all would be right. Unfortunately, all was not right. In a few days a declaration was filed. The prisoner called again, and on being told what had happened, he said, "That is just the very thing I wanted. Now I will make him pay 10s." He then left to stop all further proceedings, and in a few days execution issued, and the poor person's goods were sold. These were the facts, which he (Miller) should prove against the prisoner; and he had no doubt the Recorder would tell the jury that if they believed that when the prisoner said he was a lawyer he meant to convey that he was an attorney, and that by means of that misrepresentation he obtained the people's money, he would be guilty of obtaining money under false pretences.

Miller submitted that they ought not to go into evidence of the second offence upon the same charge.

The Recorder said it was admissible, but it was a rule founded in justice and mercy not to press the second offence under the same charge.

Miller abandoned the evidence in the case of Collins, and Booth and his wife having clearly proved their case against the prisoner.

Miller, on the part of the prisoner, submitted that there was no case, and that it was not punishable at common law for a person to propose to do that which an attorney might do. The prisoner's conduct might be an offence against the Act for the regulation of that profession, but at common law his conduct did not amount to a misdemeanour.

The Court desisted from Miller, and

The learned gentleman went to the jury and said, the facts were these:—The prisoner was clerk to Mr.
 Page, an attorney, and in that capacity he waited upon Booth and proposed to render him the required professional assistance. He had been known and recognised in the Borough Court as Page's clerk, and if such was the case, he could not be held guilty of the charge laid against him.

Miller then called witnesses to prove his statement, and in conclusion said, there was one witness he was most anxious to have examined. He meant Mr.
 Page. The prisoner's friends had been trying to pre-cure his attendance, but they could not.

The Recorder said, he would postpone the case, to afford time for Mr. Page to attend. A subpoena was then obtained, and a messenger discharged to serve it upon Mr. Page. In an hour the man returned, and said he had seen Mr. Page, and that gentleman had said "Very well," and gave him (witness) to understand he would come to court.
 This, however, he did not do, and the Recorder sent the messenger again, to tell Mr. Page that the Court was waiting for him. The messenger went, and returned with an answer that he had seen Mr. Page at his office, and was told by him that he had not received sufficient notice, and he could not attend, as he was going out on special business.

The Recorder then said, having heard the statement of the last witness on oath, he pronounced Mr.
 Page guilty of contempt, and should order a warrant to be forthwith issued for his apprehension.

A warrant was immediately placed in the hands of Tandy, a constable, who left the court in search of Mr. Page. In about an hour he returned, and said he had searched Mr. Page's office, and every place of resort where he thought it likely to find him, but in vain.

The Recorder then directed a writ to issue to the sheriff to attach Mr. Page for contempt.

Miller said he had no further evidence, upon which Miller replied, and contended, that according to the evidence the prisoner had said he was a lawyer, when, in fact, he was no attorney, what he meant to convey, and that if he had not so represented himself the parties would not have parted with their money.

The Recorder summed up the evidence with great precision, observing that the charge against the prisoner was one of a most serious nature. Before they convicted the prisoner they must be of opinion that he did represent himself to be an attorney, not by using the word attorney, but by using words intended by himself to be understood as such. They must be of opinion that the prisoner undertook to get back the goods, and they must be of opinion that all this was false and fraudulent on the part of the prisoner.

The jury, after a short consultation, found the prisoner guilty, with a recommendation to mercy.

The Recorder said the prisoner had been imprisoned six months before for a fraud of a somewhat similar nature. The learned gentleman then addressed the prisoner in severe terms, and sentenced him to seven years' transportation.

AMERICAN LAWYERS' DIRECTORY.—We perceive that Judge Kiame, the well-known author of the Quarterly Law Compendium, has opened a Directory in the Reading Room at the Astor House, in which are entered weekly the names and residences of all the subscribers to this excellent and popular work. The catalogue already contains the names of about eighteen hundred lawyers, scattered through some seven hundred towns and cities, and embracing every State in the Union. The plan strikes us as one of the very best modes of advertising that legal gentlemen could possibly have, and we should not be at all surprised if each of the thirty thousand lawyers in the United States should send in his name, with the dollar to back it, the moment he is led to reflect upon the great advantages to be gained from so small a sum. Besides getting the Quarterly Compendium, which is worth five dollars a year instead of one, containing as it does a valuable digest of all important cases reported in the United States and Great Britain, every lawyer through the medium of this Directory will have an opportunity of making himself known to the entire Profession throughout the country, as well as to merchants, who have frequent occasion for the services of distant attorneys. The list now numbers over five hundred legal gentlemen in the State of New York alone. We think it will be speedily doubled when it is known that the trifling sum of one dollar per annum, not only entitles subscribers to an annual volume of 250 pages of carefully condensed Reports, but affords through the Directory (which is "chained up" in the Astor Reading Room, and added also as an appendix to the Compendium) the best advertising facilities. Henceforth, when a merchant or lawyer in this city requires the transaction of law business in any State or town in the Union, he need only refer to this Directory to find a suitable correspondent. The advantages of the plan are too obvious to be dwelt upon; and no lawyer, who consults his own interest, will neglect to avail himself of them at once.—New York Mirror.

COMMITTEE OF A BANKRUPT.—At the Leeds District Bankruptcy Court on Monday last, James Ramsden, of Armley, near Leeds, cloth manufacturer, a bankrupt, was committed to York Castle, by Mr. Commissioner Burge, for not satisfactorily answering the questions propounded to him.

INCREASE OF ATTORNEYS.—The number of persons who have given the required notices, and complied with the regulations, as certified by the list issued from the Law Institution, of their intention to apply in the ensuing Easter Term to be admitted attorneys of the Court of Queen's Bench, amount to 147.

CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.—The late Rev. Christopher Wordsworth, D.D., rector of Buxted and Uckfield, late master of Trinity College, in the University of Cambridge, has left the following charitable bequests; free of legacy duty:—To the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, or Repairing of Churches and Chapels, 500*l.*; to the Incorporated National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church throughout England and Wales, 500*l.*; to the Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 500*l.* He directed that each servant (male and female) should have mourning and a year's wages. His freehold estate he has devised to his eldest son, the Rev. Charles Wordsworth, M.A. second master of Winchester College; and has bequeathed his funded property, canal shares, policies on his life, and the residue of his property, to his two sons, the said Rev. C. Wordsworth and the Rev. Christopher Wordsworth, D.D. head master of Harrow School. The latter is the acting executor. The personal property was estimated at 25,000*l.* The deceased attained the age of 71, and died at Buxted parsonage on the 2nd of February last.—Observer.

CHANCERY ARREARS.—EASTER TERM.—It appears by the Equity Causes Register, that the number, including entries up to the closing of the Registrar's office, during the present holidays, of appeals before the Lord Chancellor, and original causes before the Vice-Chancellors for hearing or disposal on pleas, demurrers, exceptions, or further directions, is 285 (exclusive of those before the Master of the Rolls). Of this total, 46 are appeals before the Lord Chancellor, 135 are causes before the Vice-Chancellor of England; 71 before Vice-Chancellor Bruce, and 33 before Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

THE LATE MR. LISTON.—The will of this late popular comedian has just been proved in Doctors' Commons, and his effects were valued for probate duty at 40,000*l.* He has left his plate, jewellery, pictures, books, furniture, carriages, horses, &c. to his wife, absolutely. The residue of his property, which he directs to be invested in the funds in the names of trustees; he has left to be enjoyed by her for life, and gives a power of appointment over the same by will or otherwise; and in case so much as 6,000*l.* is by her unappointed, he gives such sum to his daughter, Mrs. Rodwell—the dividends for her own use, and the principal at her death to her two daughters, Emma and Elizabeth, or to the survivor; and in case his wife does not make any disposition of the residue, he gives the same, or so much thereof as remains unappointed, to his son, Captain John Terry Liston. He appointed as his executors his relict, and J. R. Durrant, of the Stock-Exchange; C. Turner, of Brompton; and W. Taylor, of Park-street, Grosvenor-square. The will is dated in April, 1842; and he made a codicil in January last.—Morning Post.

COOKE v. WETHERALL.—Our readers may remember that a new trial was granted in this case to try the guilt of the defendant, who is alleged to have committed the double crime of incest and adultery. It was to have been tried at the Kingston assizes, but the plaintiff declined to proceed, although he had paid his costs pursuant to the rule of the Court.—Berkshire Chronicle.

THE BRIDGEWATER ESTATE.—Some idea may be formed of the interests involved in the estate of the trustees of the late Duke of Bridgewater, and also of its magnitude, from the fact that in the present parliamentary session, agents are engaged in watching, supporting, or opposing no less than thirty-five private bills.—Liverpool Standard.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

HUGHES ON CONTRACTS.

SIR,—I could not but feel highly gratified that my suggestion as to Law Books should have obtained the powerful support of a "Leader;" and I trust the invitation given, both to authors and readers, will be duly responded to by the profession.

In reference to one of the works now in progress in the LAW TIMES, that of "Hughes on Contracts," it has occurred to me that instead of stopping short, as such works usually do, without extending to the conveyance, the profession would be greatly benefited by a companion volume, by the same author, of Precedents of Purchase Deeds, of both freehold and leasehold property. The forms should be simple as well as special, concise yet not too brief, in short in the most approved style of conveyancing, and accompanied with practical remarks and dissertations. The recent alterations in the law render such a work necessary. We should then have, in two small volumes, a complete work on purchases, and purchase deeds. Should the author be disposed so to extend his plan, and signify it through your pages, many of your readers, as well as myself, would, I doubt not, feel pleasure in stating what they require in such a work, out of which some valuable hints may be gleaned.

While I am writing, permit me to offer two or three suggestions to yourself. First, that only one treatise at a time should be published in the LAW TIMES; for works so published are of little use for reference, for want of contiguity, and of an index. Secondly, that earlier and greater attention should be paid to Bills in progress, and to the practical working of recent Acts. Thirdly, that the business of the week in Courts of Equity should be given, as well as in the Courts of Common Law, to enable solicitors in the country to ascertain the progress of business, and to form some judgment when their own cases are likely to come on—in short the reasons for giving the information as to the Common Law Courts are equally applicable to the Courts of Equity.

My desire for the benefit of the profession has induced me thus to occupy your pages, and

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

April 11, 1846.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I observe that by some accident the name of the above case, which was reported in your last number, page 30, was omitted from the heading. Perhaps, as it is a case of some importance, those of your readers to whom it may be interesting, will be good enough to supply it with the pen, so that they may afterwards be able to find it by reference to the index.

YOUR REPORTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—My attention has been called to your report in the LAW TIMES of 4th inst. of the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Wigram in Lister v. Turner and Others.

From the report it would appear that the settlement was declared void, though the settlor, at the time of executing the settlement, had property to three times the amount of his debts. Nothing of the kind can, however, be gathered from the judgment really given; for the deed was declared void only as against the plaintiff, who, as an equitable mortgagee, was to be considered as a purchaser within the 27th Elizabeth. The decision went no farther; and it is evident the settlement was not declared altogether void, as the parties taking under the settlement have a right to redeem.

I send you a copy of our agent's letter, with his note of the judgment and decree, from which you will be able to amend your report.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Northwich, April 16, 1846.

LISTER F. TURNER.

DEAR SIRS,—The Vice-Chancellor delivered judgment herein this morning.

After stating the circumstances of the deposit with the bankers, and the subsequent bankruptcy of W. Slater (which, if they had stood alone, would have given rise to no difficulty, for the plaintiff's right would then have been clear), he proceeded to the transaction which had occasioned the argument at the bar. This was the discovery by the plaintiff that in June 1841, a month previous to the equitable mortgage, the mortgagor had conveyed to a trustee for the benefit of his wife and children, so much of the property comprised in the plaintiff's security as is situate in Meadow-street and Brunswick-road.

This conveyance was voluntary. It was therefore necessary for the plaintiff to avoid this conveyance before he could enforce his security. The bill, therefore, seeks to avoid this deed as against the plaintiff on two grounds, either as a voluntary conveyance void against a subsequent purchaser under the 27th Eliz. or, if he fails in this, then the plaintiff seeks the benefit of the 13th Eliz. by which voluntary conveyances by insolvents are declared void as against creditors. The first point to decide, therefore, is whether an equitable mortgagee is a purchaser within the 27th Eliz. and the Vice-Chancellor thought the case of Buckland v. Mitchell (18 Vesey) had decided that point in the affirmative. The next point raised upon this part of the bill was as to the costs of the suit occasioned by the issue of insolvency, which, it was contended, were unnecessarily incurred if the Court should decide the question upon the 27th Eliz. and that the plaintiff ought, in that event, to pay the costs occasioned by tendering that issue, more particularly as the plaintiff's evidence was (it was argued) insufficient to prove that part of his case. But the plaintiff as a creditor had great interest in shewing the invalidity of the deed, and, in the opinion of the Court, a sufficient interest to sustain the suit; and, seeing that the evidence of insolvency is very strong, there is no ground for distinguishing the costs. Having, therefore, decided that the plaintiff is to be relieved, the only remaining subject for consideration is, in what form that relief should be given.

The Vice-Chancellor then made his decree in the following terms:—

"Declare that the plaintiff is a purchaser within the 27 Eliz. and that the deeds of the 16th June, 1841, are fraudulent and void so far as they comprise the property included in the plaintiff's security. Refer it to the Master to ascertain what is due to the plaintiff for principal and interest, and tax his costs of this suit, and decree that the defendants pay to the plaintiff what is reported due, within six months, and upon such payment let the deeds comprised in plaintiff's security be given up to such party as the Master shall certify to be entitled to receive them. In default of payment, let the Master ascertain of what property the plaintiff's security consists, other than the settled property; and if the plaintiff consent, let such property be sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the plaintiff's debt, interest, and costs, and, if the same shall be insufficient for that purpose, then let so much of the property in Meadow-street and Brunswick-road be sold as will be sufficient, and, if necessary, the whole of such property, and reserve further directions and costs."

ADVERTISING FOR BUSINESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The following advertisement in the Times of to-day is really too bad:—

"RAILWAY BUBBLES."

"Parties being sued for pretended claims by railway projectors, will be defended at a very trifling expense by a gentleman of long standing in the profession. Apply to M. Y. Mr. D'Arcy's, 5, Buckingham-street, Strand."

Surely you will reprobate so gross an attempt to catch the unwary. By the Post-office Directory Mr. D'Arcy appears to be a tailor. What gentleman of long standing could think it fit, or proper, to advertise for business through the medium of a tailor's shop?

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A SOLICITOR OF TEN YEARS' PRACTICE.

City, Thursday, March 26.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

W. thus treats of Short Conveyances:—

SIR,—I fully agree with you in your observations on the necessity of professional men coming to some immediate understanding as to a new and remunerative scale of charges in conveyancing. The profession must arouse itself and shake off the old precedent system, which certainly must fall before, or at all events be modified to suit, the increased intelligence of the age. I have myself, although a junior country practitioner, seen several instances of precedent prejudices perpetrated by some of my brethren.

In a recent instance, the verb "is," which had been inserted after the word indenture, for the purpose of making the introductory part of the deed readable before coming to recitals, was, without ceremony, struck out of the draft by a brother chip. Some concise covenants, from the printed precedent of a modern conveyancer, were also inserted; this, however, would not suit, and the whole host of synonymous terms were superadded to my operative words, thus making a curious medley, which would have added lustre to one of old Lilly's entries. The additions would have rendered another stamp necessary, and to avoid unpleasantness they were allowed to remain, and I was compelled to shorten other portions of the draft in the best manner I could!

April 11th, 1846.

"A. H." thus comments on the Transfer and Property Acts:—

SIR,—I have been waiting for some time to see whether any of your readers would take up Lord Brougham's compulsory Bill for short forms; and I am happy to say I am glad your correspondent, "One, &c." has taken, in my opinion, the proper view of the subject. If my lords Brougham and Campbell would conceive how much less they have paid for the stamp duties on their purchases of, say 10,000*l.* than purchases of 150*l.* and pay the difference over as conscience-money—follow this up by seeking for a revision of the Stamp Duties, instead of endeavouring to rob those on whose shoulders they have been placed in their present position, it would be much more to their credit than pursuing their present course as tinkers, and trying to patch up that of which they are practically ignorant.

Your correspondent's remarks are so much to the point, that I cannot do otherwise than give my cordial assent to his observations. It is so well known that the profession, I believe generally, have for some years practically endeavoured to shorten conveyances from the precedents of Hays, Coventry, Crabbe, Dickenson, and others, and have shewn more conscientious feeling towards their clients than the said tinkers have towards their former friends. If they would look into the short forms in the works I have named, surely they will find them short enough; but I presume they would like to have their deeds prepared gratis.

I trust the profession will take up the matter warmly; and with every wish of success.

Perhaps some of our readers may be enabled to assist our correspondent's researches in the "rights of a husband."

I should feel obliged if you, or any of the numerous readers of the LAW TIMES, would direct me to the law respecting the right (if any) of a husband to chastise his wife under peculiarly irritating circumstances, and, in particular, where I could find Mr. Justice Buller's memorable opinion of the right of a husband over the wife, to the exercise of the thumb-stick.

"S. M. J." transmits the following remarks on the case of Angell v. Angell reported in No. 155:—

May I apologise for officiously remark upon your report of this case, merely for my own information?

After stating that the right to bring an action of ejectment accrued to the lessor of the plaintiff in 1784, upon the father of the defendant's first receiving the rent reserved by the lease wrongfully or adversely, and by the lapse of twenty years from that time was barred in 1804, you add in conclusion, that the word "rent" in the 16th section, means "rent reserved on a lease" which saved the right of the lessor of the plaintiff. Can this be correct? For though the possession and receipt of the profits of the land were not adverse to the right or title of the lessor of the plaintiff at the time of the passing of the Act, yet the receipt of the rent reserved on the lease must surely have been so. But construing this word "rent charge," the former part of the sentence, that is, the first alternative, would alone protect the plaintiff.

THE LAW DIGEST.

The first number of "The Law Digest" (Index Legum) is published to-day. Another number is in the press, and both will be forwarded to the subscribers next week. This Digest includes all the decisions reported between the 1st of July and 31st of December, 1845. The arrangement has been adopted with a view to practical convenience and ready reference; and we believe, from the labour and pains which have been bestowed upon it, the Digest will be found in every way useful. It will be continued half-yearly.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1846.

SOLICITORS' INSURANCE OFFICE.

WE may now congratulate the Solicitors on the formal establishment of their own Insurance-office. On the 6th inst. it was completely registered, and the society has at length a legal existence, with the powers and privileges of a corporate body as conferred by the recent statute.

And already has business begun to flow into it from all quarters. We understand that more than twenty proposals for policies were received during the first week; thus more than justifying the anticipations we ventured to indulge, when first we submitted the plan to the regards of the Profession.

It now remains only for the Solicitors cordially to support the society they have so auspiciously founded, and thus to make it, as it is undoubtedly in their power to do, the most extensive and most flourishing insurance-office in Europe. As the profits are regulated by the amount of business, and the Solicitors will obtain in their own office a fairer share of the profits they produce than elsewhere, while, at the same time, equal advantages are given to their clients, it depends upon themselves whether they will realize the benefits which the Deed of Settlement has secured to them.

It must be borne in mind, that it is not to the shareholders only that these benefits are secured—they are offered equally to all members of the Profession transacting their business in the Solicitors' Office; all, therefore, are equally interested in promoting its success. It is established, not for the advantage of the members of the Society alone, but for the common good of the whole Profession. There is not a Solicitor in the United Kingdom who may not, if he pleases, secure large personal benefits from this establishment; none whom its prosperity does not concern; none who might not obtain a direct interest in its existence, and a share in its profits, by transacting his business there; and so making for himself an annuity, whose amount will grow with the profits, as the profits will grow with the amount of business.

If the principle upon which this establishment has been founded be fully understood, it cannot fail to be approved; and if supported as it deserves to be by those for whose benefit it was intended, sure we are that the 6th of April, 1846, will be a memorable day in the annals of the Profession, as the commencement of an institution from which still increasing benefits will flow to the Solicitors, and to which they will hereafter point with pride as an honour to the Profession to which it belongs, from the fairness of its principles and the caution but liberality of its conduct, and as yielding peculiar advantages to all who resort to it.

If so it should prove, as we doubt not it will, we shall ever look back upon the labour we bestowed upon its design and execution as the best return that could be made to the Profession for the confidence they have so generously reposed in the LAW TIMES, and through which alone it was enabled to bring about the establishment of the SOLICITORS' INSURANCE OFFICE.

INCAUTIOUS COMMITTALS.

ALL who have watched the proceedings at the Assizes and Quarter Sessions, must have noticed with surprise how frequently bills are thrown out by the grand jury, or prisoners acquitted, with a remark from the judge that there was not the slightest evidence against them.

But it has seldom occurred to the spectators that this was proof of some great defect in the administration of justice by the tribunal that sends the prisoner to trial upon such defective evidence; and it is not until some case of more than common hardship occurs, when the evil has fallen upon a party whose position in life attracts to him more of public attention than is usually bestowed upon criminals, that people begin to ask why such a wrong should be, and who is in fault? and the public press echoes the public feeling, and lifts its potent voice against the mischief.

Such a case occurred at the last assizes for Somerset; and as it forcibly illustrates the evil of which we have more than once made complaint in these columns, we narrate it, hoping that it may serve as a caution, at least, to those whose duty it is to administer justice in the earliest stage of criminal prosecution.

A respectable farmer, an old grey-haired man, possessed of considerable fortune, highly respected in his neighbourhood, of unstained character, was charged by a neighbouring farmer with sheep-stealing! It appeared that one of the prosecutor's flock had strayed into the prisoner's field, had joined his flock, and had been—not killed and cut up, and hidden away, but—marked with the prisoner's mark! It was, moreover, suggested that there was some sort of enmity on the part of the prosecutor against the prisoner.

As may be supposed, the case broke down. The learned Judge who presided at the trial told the jury that there was not the slightest pretence for charging the prisoner with stealing the sheep, and directed an acquittal; and so thought everybody who heard the trial; so thought the jury; and the prisoner left the dock amid the general sympathy of the audience.

But what a poor consolation to be told that he quitted the court without the slightest stain upon his character, after having been taken up on a charge of felony, committed to prison, arraigned with a herd of thieves and prostrated, put to the cost of a hundred pounds at least for his defence, and condemned to months of torturing anxiety! And to what does he owe all this? To the culpable carelessness of the committing magistrates. If they had exercised any judgment upon the evidence, they must have come to the same conclusion as the Judge, the jury, and the audience,—that there was no pretence for a charge of felony. But so it is, not in rare instances, but repeatedly, an assize or sessions seldom passing without them; they commit for trial upon the merest shadow of a case, hoping, we presume, that more evidence will afterwards be procured. They forget the ruin and the wretchedness they thus produce, the families they plunge into want, the burdens they throw upon the parishes, the cost to which they put the county for a trial that can end only in an acquittal, the destruction of a man's character and virtue, if he have any, which is the certain result of a prison.

We do not accuse the magistrates of intended harshness; or wantonly using their powers; we believe that it arises from thoughtlessness. They do not reflect rightly upon the serious consequences of a committal, or they would refuse it when the evidence was not such as a judge would allow to go to a jury. We cannot disguise from ourselves that there is a leaning towards a committal where there is doubt, while, in propriety, the doubt should turn the scale the other way. It is no secret that there is a sort of rivalry among magistrates to appear the most frequently on the calendar—it is deemed a proof of activity; nor can we forget that their advisers also have some interest in a similar result. Far be it from us to impute to either any intentional departure from justice. But we know how the judgment is biased unconsciously towards any object we deem desirable. We have noticed the matter here, hoping that it may not be without an influence upon the many members of the magistracy who are our readers, and that our newspaper contemporaries may be induced to lend their powerful aid towards the removal of a mischief much more extensive than would be believed by those whose duties do not compel them to close attention to the proceedings of our criminal courts in the provinces.

CONVICTION OF A SHAM LAWYER.

AT length, through the spirited exertions of some members of the Profession at Birmingham, an example has been made which will do more to put to flight the whole tribe of Sham Lawyers than all the exposures of their practices which have appeared in the LAW TIMES.

Acting in accordance with the recommendation we have so often and so strongly urged to indict for obtaining money under false pretences, this form of proceeding was adopted against a Sham Lawyer who has more than once figured in these pages. The charge was maintained; a conviction was procured, and after a suitable address from the Recorder, the severe punishment of transportation for seven years was awarded.

A full report of this very important case appears among our Legal Intelligence. We trust that it will be widely diffused as a warning to the many others who are pursuing similar practices in all parts of the country. If, after this emphatic notice, they continue their misconduct, it will be the duty of the Profession to institute similar proceedings.

The evidence in this case proves that the race of Sham Lawyers is a serious public evil. They plunder the poor and the ignorant. The mischiefs to the Profession are trifling compared with the injury they inflict upon society, so that their suppression is really a public duty.

LIABILITY OF ALLOTTEES.

THE letter of our correspondent, "A Barrister," published last week, and the conflicting opinions daily put forth in the newspapers and prevailing in the Profession, induce us to return to this subject, for the purpose of testing our conviction by the arguments of those who dissent from it. We have no other desire than to arrive at the truth, and add our humble mite to the arguments by which it must ultimately be determined.

Our correspondent, it will be observed, admits our conclusion, but disputes the reasons upon which we have founded it. He has no doubt about the liability of an allottee, but he thinks that it exists independently of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, and, indeed, that this statute in no way affects the question, our argument being based entirely upon the consequences of that enactment.

The argument of the "Barrister" is, that the Joint-Stock Companies Act is a restrictive and not an enabling statute; that it gives no new powers, and recognizes no new form of partnership; it only prescribes limits to such associations, and their proceedings, as previously recognized; therefore, that former principles and decisions are still applicable to them, and that the provisions of the new statute do not at all affect the point at issue.

This is a substantial objection. Let us examine its validity.

The purpose of the statute is stated in the preamble to be "to make provision for the due registration of Joint-Stock Companies during the formation and subsistence thereof; and also, after such complete registration as hereinafter mentioned, to invest such companies with the qualities and incidents of corporations, &c." "and also to prevent the establishment of any companies which shall not be duly constituted and regulated according to the provisions of this Act."

Here are three objects distinctly defined:—

1st. The registration of companies during their formation.

2nd. After their formation, investing them with certain privileges.

3rd. The prevention of companies otherwise formed.

Thus the Act is both an enabling and a disabling statute.

The term "Joint-Stock Company" is defined to mean, "Every partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares, and so as to be transferable without the express consent of all the copartners."

The promoters of a company are first required to register it provisionally.

The seventh section prohibits "any joint-stock company" "to act otherwise than provisionally, in accordance with this Act" until complete registration; thus recognizing its existence as a company before complete registration.

We come now to the important section, which, in our opinion, enables the promoters of companies provisionally registered to do certain defined acts, and consequently to enforce the powers thereby vested in them. That section is the 23rd, and we ask particular attention to its language.

And be it enacted, That on the provisional registration of any company being certified by the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, it shall be lawful for the promoters of any company, so registered, to act provisionally, &c. &c.

To assume the name of the intended company, coupled with the words "registered provisionally;" and also

To open subscription lists; and also
To allot shares and receive deposits by way of earnest thereon, at a rate not exceeding 10s. for every 100l. on the amount of every share in the capital of the intended company, &c. &c.; and also

To perform such other acts only as are necessary for constituting the company, or for obtaining letters patent, or a charter, or an Act of Parliament.

If this be not a legislative recognition of the existence of a company, and an express power given to the promoters to allot shares and take deposits, no language would convey such an intention.

And if such a power be hereby given, contracts made in pursuance of it must be valid and may be enforced. Where the law gives a right, the Courts always find a remedy.

Let us now trace the further proceedings.

Thus empowered, the promoters publish a prospectus, setting forth a scheme, and ask the public to take shares in it; in other words, to join them in a limited partnership to carry it out.

Certain persons, called "subscribers" in the Act, approving the plan, say they will become such partners, and will take so many shares, upon which they will pay the deposits required by the promoters and allowed by the statute.

The promoters accept the offer, and request the payment of the deposit accordingly.

They incur certain expenses necessary for constituting the company, and to which the subscribers have, by their promise to pay the deposit, agreed to contribute.

The subscribers do not pay the deposit they had agreed to pay, and upon the faith of which those expenses have been incurred.

Upon this agreement, made up of the application for shares and the allotment, an action is brought.

Upon the face of it there can be no doubt that this agreement is good. Its subject-matter is expressly authorized by law. It is in its terms clear and unconditional. "If you will allot me so many shares, I will pay the deposit thereon." "We do allot them. Pay." Such are the terms. Here is a proposal, an acceptance, a bargain completed.

The defences set up are numerous.

1st. That it was a condition that all the shares should be taken, and the project carried out.

But where is such a condition either expressed or implied? The promoters have asked you to join them in an endeavour to effect a certain scheme. You have consented. You did not make it a condition that you should not pay unless it succeeded. You agreed to share the chances with them.

2nd. That the scheme was a bubble, impracticable and absurd.

But you should have looked to that before you agreed to join it. You were as competent to judge of its worth as the promoters. The rule caveat emptor applies here.

3rd. That the promoters were guilty of fraud. This would be a good defence, but the onus of proof falls upon you.

4th. That they spent more money than they had a right to do.

This is no answer to your agreement. When you have paid, you will have a right, as a member of the company, to question their management of its affairs in a court of equity.

Such are the substantial defences, and such the answer to them. With technicalities we do not deal here. Our purpose was to examine only the broad question of the liability of allottees, apart from the form of action. That is altogether a distinct inquiry.

For the reasons assigned above, we therefore still maintain the opinion we first expressed, unshaken by the argument of the "Barrister," and the various objections put forth in the newspapers.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Practice of the High Court of Chancery. By EDMUND ROBERT DANIELL, F.R.S., Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy. Second Edition, with considerable Alterations and Additions, adapting the Text to the last General Orders and the most recent Decisions of the Court. By THOMAS EMERSON HEADLAM, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. In 2 vols. London: Stevens and Norton. 1846.

Daniell's Practice is now, we believe, in equity, that which "Chitty's Archbold" is in the common law—the authority to which everybody refers, and which everybody uses: and undoubtedly to this distinction it is well entitled, for it is one of the most practical of books of practice; methodical in its arrangement, precise and perspicuous in its composition, and assuming nothing as already known to the inquirer, and, therefore, too familiar to be stated.

Mr. DANIELL having been promoted to an office that has necessarily diverted his attention from the immediate subject of his treatise, and prevented him from keeping pace with the progress of this branch of the law, he very prudently committed to Mr. HEADLAM the task of preparing for the press a second edition, when the approval of the profession had exhausted the first.

And Mr. HEADLAM's duty was no light one. As he truly observes, during the period that has elapsed since the publication of the first edition, more extensive changes have taken place in the Practice of Chancery, than in any other period of similar duration in the annals of the Court. "Not only have numerous and most important Orders been issued; but the increase in the numbers of the Courts of Equity, and the great attention now bestowed in reporting their decisions, have multiplied the sources from which conclusions of Law and rules of Practice are ordinarily deduced." These have necessitated the introduction of a great deal of new matter, and the substitution of much that is recent for much that was thus rendered obsolete. Avoiding, therefore, the inconvenient but favourite practice of preserving the original entire, and introducing, in the form of notes, cautions against reliance upon it as having been altered by recent orders or decisions, Mr. HEADLAM has adopted the more rational plan of so remodelling the text "as to render it, as nearly as possible, what I conceive it would have been, had Mr. DANIELL now published it for the first time." Therefore, where a case, for instance, cited in the original, has been affirmed by a more important one of recent date, the most modern authority has been substituted for the other. This is very preferable to the book-making practice of many editors, who cite case upon case, though all resolving the same point, to the grievous burden of the pocket and patience of the reader.

The changes introduced by the recent General Orders have compelled the entire omission of some chapters in the original, and the replacing of them with others adapted to the existing state of the practice. The Orders of last May were, it seems, though promulgated, not in operation at the time when the body of the text was prepared for the press. But Mr. HEADLAM preferred to introduce the Orders themselves in their proper place in the text, to stringing them together in an appendix, and troubling the reader with double references. But this arrangement deprived him of the advantage of subjoining the decisions since given upon those Orders. To meet the difficulty, he has collected those decisions, and added directions how they may be inserted in the text so as to bring down the authorities, throughout both volumes, to the present time.

To make the work still more complete and acceptable, Mr. HEADLAM has added some entirely new chapters on subjects not treated of in the first edition, such as, "on Writs and Orders in the nature of Injunctions;" "The Payment of Money and Transfer of Stock out of Court;" "The Production of Documents;" "Petitions for the Appointment of Guardians, and Orders of Maintenance;" and "The Statutory Jurisdiction of the Court."

It will be unnecessary to describe minutely the plan and divisions of a work with which most of our readers must be well acquainted. Enough that we have stated the alterations and improvements effected in this new edition. Nor will any extracts be required to justify the opinion we have expressed, for already it has been approved by the judgment and experience of the Profession.

The New Chancery Practice: comprising all the alterations effected by the New Orders, 8th May, 1845, and an Appendix of Forms. By HERBERT AYCKBOURN. Second edition, enlarged and carefully revised. By THOMAS H. AYCKBOURN, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and HERBERT AYCKBOURN. London, Butterworth.

THIS is the pocket-book of Chancery practice, and DANIELL's is the text-book. In a small volume, without inconveniently small type, Mr. ARONSON has contrived to condense the substance of the existing practice in Chancery with many of the cases down to the present time.

The first edition of this work was noticed very favourably in the Law Times. We observed then that the author had cited largely from our reports. Glancing over the present volume, we cannot find that he has availed himself of the much more numerous and valuable reports of the Equity Courts now published in these pages. This is a serious omission. In the Law Times alone, is every practice case decided in the Courts of Equity fully and carefully reported; there many important ones are recorded of which no other report exists, and they are brought down to a much more recent period than any other. To have overlooked such a source of information deprives a book of practice of half its value, for the practitioner requires every decision, and especially the latest ones, and he who proceeds depending upon Mr. ARONSON's cited cases as the last and only ones will not improbably find himself tripped up by his opponent who chances to have noted some of the numerous decisions only to be found in these pages, because here alone is the rule adopted of reporting every practice case without exception.

Many applications have been made to us to take advantage of our large corps of reporters to give to the profession a work which is stated to be much needed—a series of Reports of Equity Practice Cases. If approved, we would willingly add Equity Cases to the Common Law Practice Cases now publishing for the Verulam Society, but page separately, so that it may be purchased and bound as a distinct work.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A Practical Treatise on the Law of Auctions: with Forms, Tables, Statutes, and Cases, and Directions to Auctioneers. By JOSEPH BATHMAN, LL.D., of Lincoln's Inn. 3rd edition, 12mo. London, 1846. Maxwell and Son.

This is a work that needs no other introduction than its name. It has been long the standard authority upon the subject of which it treats, and the new edition has been called for by the recent abolition of the auction duty. It describes, first, the auctioneer's license; then the authority to sell; the preliminaries of a sale under a distress for rent; appraisements and valuations; particulars and catalogues; and conditions of sale. The second part examines the incidents of sale, and, successively, the sale itself; private biddings and puffers; the contract, and the formalities required for it; and the deposit. The third part, devoted to the posterior regulations, treats of the enforcing of the contract; of the auctioneer's commission and expenses of sale; and of the auctioneer's responsibility for the property and the sale proceeds. There is an appendix of statutes, cases, forms, rules, and tables; a list of cases cited, and a copious index. The work is indispensable to the auctioneer, and will be found very useful to the solicitor.

The following will afford a good specimen of the matter and manner of this work, and will be acceptable information to our readers, both solicitors and auctioneers:—

THE AUCTIONEER'S COMMISSION AND EXPENSES OF SALE.

An auctioneer who is employed to conduct a sale, is, in general, entitled to recover from his employer a fair remuneration for his trouble. The amount of this remuneration is either regulated by a particular contract between the auctioneer and his employer (a), or is determined by the usage of trade (b); the usage yielding in this, as in all other cases, to positive agreement. The usual mode of compensation is by a per centage upon the purchase-money, called a "Commission" (c). Sometimes the expenses of advertising, catalogues, warehouse rent, and warehousemen, are included in the auctioneer's commission; but if not, he is entitled to charge the same to his employers, in addition to his claim could be supported were private agreement. When there is a particular commission commonly charged, and the seller was aware of the custom, that would, in most cases, be the measure of the allowance. (1 Sugd. 71.) But if there be no contract, express or implied, and no usage, it seems that no commission can be recovered. Thus, where a person performed work for a committee, under a resolution entered into by them, "that any service to be rendered by him should be taken into consideration, and such remuneration be made as should be deemed right," it was held that an action would not lie for such work, the resolution importing that the committee were to judge whether any remuneration was due. (Taylor v. Brewer, 1 M. & S. 290.) For cases where certain sums by way of commission have been allowed on agency transactions, as being regulated by usage of trade, see Ricke v. Meyer (3 Camp. 412); Cohen v. Paget (4 Camp. 96); Roberts v. Jackson, 2 Stark. 226. (See also Levi v. Barnes, 1 Heist. 473; Chapman v. De Tustet, 2 Stark. 204; Stewart v. Kable, 3 Stark. 361; Paley, P. & A. 101.)

(b) For example, although a broker has in general no claim for compensation, except as against his employer, whether he be the vendor or vendee, yet it appears that, where colonial produce is sold through the intervention of such an agent, he is entitled by the usage of trade, in London, if there be no express stipulation to the contrary, to one-half per cent. commission from the purchaser as well as the seller. (Ricke v. Meyer, 3 Camp. 412.)

(c) Commission, when applied to factors and brokers, is either ordinary or del credere—the former being a mere compensation for the trouble taken by the factor or broker in performing his employment; the latter includes, in addition to this, a certain premium given in return for a guarantee by the factor or broker of the solvency of the persons with whom he may deal on his principal's behalf. (Russell's W. & B. 154.) The amount of commission to which a broker is entitled has, in some instances, been regulated by Act of Parliament. Thus by 16 Anne, c. 39, s. 121, brokers are restricted from taking more than 2s. 9d. per cent. for buying or selling any tallies, orders, exchange-bills, exchange-tickets, bench-bills, or any share or interest in any joint stock created by act of Parliament, or by letters patent under the great seal, or bonds of any company thereby created. So, by 12 Anne, stat. 2, c. 16, and 53, Geo. 3, c. 141, s. 9, certain rates are established for procuring loans. (See Pryce v. Wilkinson, 3 Bing. 470.)

The following list of charges, on sales by auction, and other business usually entrusted to auctioneers, is copied from the printed circular of a London establishment:—

For conducting sales by auction of stock in trade, furniture, and effects	5 per cent.
For conducting sales by auction of estates under 1,000l.	2½ per cent.
For ditto above 1,000l.	1½ per cent.
Surveys, advertisements, printing, &c. extra.
For the sale of estates, &c. by private contract	2½ per cent.
For ditto above 1,000l.	1½ per cent.
For letting houses and estates on the first year's rent	2½ per cent.
(If let for a longer period, the commission is chargeable on two years' rent.)
For registering particulars	5 shillings.
For the valuation of furniture, fixtures, stock in trade, libraries, and effects	2½ per cent.
For an inventory or schedule of fixtures from 1 to 4 guineas.
For estimates and valuations for compensation under Acts of Parliament for public improvements, railroads, &c.	2½ per cent.
For estimates of loss or damage by fire, and making claims upon insurance offices	2½ per cent.
For surveying and making a report as to the state of repair of a house and premises prior to a tenancy 1 to 4 guineas.
For specification and notice of dilapidations 2 to 5 guineas.
For specification and valuation of ditto	5 per cent.
For estimating the annual value of house property 1 to 2 guineas.
For valuations of houses and estates for mortgages, as security prior to advances, under 1,000l.	1 per cent.
For ditto above 1,000l.	½ per cent.
For collecting rents, and the general management of houses and estates	2½ per cent.

commission (d). And in some cases the commission is recoverable, although the estate be not actually sold by auction, or by the direct agency of the auctioneer employed (e). Notwithstanding this general right to remuneration, the auctioneer may be deprived of it, if, in consequence of his negligence or unskillfulness, no benefit accrues to his employer from the service performed (f). And when through his blunder the auction duty attached on a sale which would have been otherwise exempt, he could not recover such duty from his employer, although he might have been compelled to pay it out of his own pocket (g). If the payment of the commission is, by contract or usage, made to depend on a contingency, it cannot be recovered until after the contingency shall have happened (h). When the transaction has been regular on the part of the auctioneer, he has a lien for his commission and expenses on any goods of his employer which may be in his possession (i), and he may lawfully retain

(d) Paley, P. & A. 107. Where, by agreement between a factor or broker and his principal, it is stipulated that the former shall be paid a certain commission, but the agent claims a further remuneration on account of extra attendance, it will be for the jury to say whether, in giving such attendance, the agent was merely performing a duty contemplated by the agreement; and if they find that this was the case, he will not be entitled to any extra charge. (Marshall v. Parsons, 9 C. & P. 656; Russ. F. & B. 156.) As to the cases in which an agent is entitled to advances made on goods consigned for sale, and interest on such advances, see Russ. F. & B. 179; 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 28, s. 28.

(e) Rainey v. Vernon, 9 C. & P. 550. In this case the plaintiff was employed to sell ground-rents by auction, on terms of receiving a commission of 1 per cent. "on sale." After he had advertised the sale, but before the day of sale, the defendant sold the ground-rent by private contract. On the ground of custom, the jury found for the plaintiff for the full commission. In another case it was held that a spirit-broker was entitled to a commission of half-a-crown per purchaser for putting a quantity of rum up for sale by auction, although each sale turned out to be ineffectual. (Stewart v. Kable, 3 Stark. 361; Ellenborough.)

(f) Denco v. Daverell (3 Camp. 451); Jones v. Nanney (13 Price, 76; M'Clell. 25). And see Hammond v. Holday (1 C. & P. 354); White v. Chapman (1 Stark. 113); Hurst v. Holding (3 Taunt. 35); Mortimer v. Abbas (1 Marsh. 76; 5 Taunt. 861). But in general an agent is not liable for loss if he act bona fide on the best advice he is able to obtain. (See Miles v. Bernard, Fane's Add. C. 61; Smith, Merc. Law, 55.)

(g) Capp v. Topham (6 East, 392; 2 Smith, 443). In this case Lord Ellenborough said, that "even if there was no warranty on the part of the auctioneer, and it was only a mutual error between him and the vendor, he could not call upon his companion in error for a contribution." (See Christie v. Attorney-General, 6 Bro. C. C. 520). So that in cases of this nature, the burden will remain upon the person upon whom it is charged. And it even seems to have been considered, that if an auctioneer, through ignorance, adopted an improper mode of saving the duty, upon an undertaking by the seller to save him harmless, the duty must be paid by the auctioneer; and that he could not recover under the undertaking, because it is illegal to indemnify against penalties. (Owen v. Perry, Sitt. West. Dec. 6, cor. Lord Ellenborough; 1 Sugd. 22.)

(h) Russ. F. & B. 158; see Winter v. Mair (3 Taunt. 531); Roberts v. Jackson (2 Stark. 226). Thus where an agent was to be paid a per-centage on the sum obtained, it was held that he could not recover until the money was received by the principal. (Bull v. Price, 5 M. & P. 2; 7 Bing. 287.)

(i) A factor has a lien upon each portion of goods in his possession, for his general balance, as well as for charges arising upon those particular goods. 46 T. R. 262; 6 East, 23, n.; Man v. Shipner, 3 East, 529; Curtis v. Barclay, 5 B. & C. 141. See 1 Burr. 494; 1 Bl. R. 102; 2 Burr. 937. And the lien attaches not only upon the goods in specie, but upon the proceeds. Drinkwater v. Goodwin, (Covp. 261, 255); 2 East, 277; 3 B. & P. 496; and securities received in the course of his business. (Willis, 400; Paley, P. & A. 120). But the lien must be claimed in respect of similar dealings between the agent and the principal, and not in respect of dissimilar and collateral transactions. (Weiden v. Gould, 3 Esp. 268, per Lord Kenyon, C. J.; Houghton v. Matthews, 3 B. & P. 494-5, per Heath, J.; Mortimer v. P. 403.) Property detained as a lien cannot, it is said, be sold, used, or disposed of, by the party detaining, unless with the consent of the owner, but he may plead his lien as a defence to any action which may be brought against him for the recovery of the property, or he may assert it as a matter of title whereon to ground an action for the purpose of reclaiming such property, if he have such commission and expenses out of any deposit or sale proceeds which may be paid to him on account of his employer(k). And should he be compelled, by reason of a defective title, to repay the deposit, he can recover the same from his employer(l).

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

6. Tenants for Life.

A tenant for life, unless restrained by condition, may alienate his lands to the extent of the estate he takes in them; or he may create any lesser interest out of it (Cru. Dig. tit. 3, ch. 1, pl. 32); but then it must not exceed, in point of duration, the extent of his life interest in the premises, as a long term of years for instance: though even this will still be effectual as long as the lessor's estate endures. But he cannot create a larger estate; and an attempt to do so by a tortious mode of assurance, as a feoffment or the like, has been held to be a forfeiture of his estate. (Gilb. Ten. 38; Wright Ten. 203; 1 Ins. 251.) But if he had adopted an innocent mode of conveyance, as a lease and release (Cru. Dig. tit. 3, c. 1, pl. 36; Fearn, C. R. 473; Willes Rep. 383; 2 Blac. Com. 275), or bargain and sale enrolled (Cru. Dig. tit. 32, c. 10, pl. 32, 33; Seymour's case, 10 Rep. 95), which have not the effect of divesting estates in remainder or reversion, it would not have effected a forfeiture; nor, it seems, will even a feoffment have that operation; for the future the recent statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 6, enacting that a feoffment made after the first day of October, 1845, will not have any tortious operation, the cause of forfeiture altogether ceases as far as concerns future feoffments; but as the Act is only prospective, feoffments made previously will still retain their tortious property.

How far tenant for life may be restrained from alienating his estate.—A tenant for life may be restrained by express condition from alienating his estate in the lands either during the whole or any part of his term: and notwithstanding that a distinction seems formerly to have been taken between a lease made to a man and his assigns, and where the word assign was omitted, and that in the former case he could not be restrained from alienating his estate, though in the latter he might, that distinction has been long exploded, and the doctrine above laid down fully established. (Hob. 170; 1 Ins.

been unlawfully dispossessed of it. The rights of a broker in enforcing his lien are, it is believed, measured strictly by this rule; those of a factor, however, are somewhat more extensive. Thus, it is clear, that, where a factor has a lien on goods which have been entrusted to him for the purpose of sale, he may claim this right, not only on the goods whilst they are in his possession, but likewise on the price of the goods when sold; and hence it follows, that, having the lien, he may sell the goods and enforce payment to himself in opposition to his principal. (Per Bayley, J., Hudson v. Granger 5 B. & A. 27, 31; see also, per Mansfield, C.J., Drinkwater v. Goodwin, Cowp. 256.) So, it is said, that when the principal consigns a cargo of goods to his factor for sale, with a limit as to price, the latter may bring the goods into the market against the will of the principal, in order to satisfy his own advances; provided the principal does not, on receiving notice of the factor's intention so to do, repay him the amount. (3 Kent. Comm. 642.) And a sale by a factor under such circumstances would, even without notice, bind the principal to the third party. (Per Lord Abinger, Warner v. M'Kay, 1 M. & W. 591, 528; Russ. F. & B. 210; but see ib. 511, &c.)

(k) And the buyer cannot defend himself from the claim on the ground that the vendor principal is indebted to him in a greater sum, which debt he sets off against the price; because the principal himself can never say that, except when there is nothing due to the factor. (Drinkwater v. Goodwin, ubi supra; and see Hammond v. Barclay, 2 East, 227; but see Coppin v. Craig, 7 Taunt. 243; Morton, V. & P. 431.) And in case of an action of trover by the assignees on the bankruptcy of his employer, he is entitled to deduct any sum that he may have paid for rent, and a reasonable sum for expenses of sale, but not for removing the goods from the premises. (Grimshaw v. Atterwell, 8 C. & P. 6.)

(l) But not the costs of defending the action brought by the purchaser for recovery of the money, unless the vendor had authorised the defence, nor without declaring specially. (Spurrier v. Elderton, 5 Esp. 1.)

204, a, 223, b.) But a tenant in tail cannot, as I have already shown, be restrained by any condition from barring his estate tail (see ante); neither can a protector of a settlement, though he may chance also to be a tenant for life under the settlement, be restrained from giving or withholding his consent to dispositions made in pursuance of the fine and recovery substitution Act. (See ante.)

Tenant by the curtesy.—A tenant by the curtesy is a tenant for his own life; and, consequently, the rules above laid down, with respect to assurances by ordinary tenants for life, are also applicable to him. (Cru. Dig. tit. 57, c. 5; 2 Ins. 309.) In one respect, however, it seems that a tenant by the curtesy has a more extensive power of disposition than an ordinary tenant for life; the former takes by operation of law, and not by way of conveyance; and consequently his estate is not burdened with any restrictions against alienation, as we have just before seen that of the tenant for life may be subjected to.

7. Tenants pur autre vie.

Tenants pur autre vie, unless restricted by some express condition, may alienate their estates and pass an interest commensurate with the lives of the cestuis que vie, or for any lesser interest, so that it does not exceed that duration. Tenants pur autre vie are also liable to forfeit their estates in like manner as tenants for life by attempting to dispose of them by a tortious mode of conveyance; but as all tortious modes of conveyance seem now to be done away with (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 2; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 6), it appears as a necessary consequence that no mode of conveyance, made by a tenant for life or tenant pur autre vie, can, for the time to come, or more correctly speaking, subsequently to the 1st of October, 1845, operate as a forfeiture of his estate. The grantee of a tenant for life becomes, as a matter of course, tenant pur autre vie; but if he reconvey the estate to his grantor, the latter will again become tenant for life, the estate pur autre vie being the lesser, merging in the estate for life, which is the greater estate; as it also will where lands are limited to one person for the life of another, with remainder to himself for his own life: the latter, in the eye of the law, being considered as the greater estate.

Tenants in dower.—Tenants in dower were subject to the same restrictions respecting alienation as other tenants for life. But where a doweress aliened any feoffment, and the feoffee died seised, whereby the entry of the person in reversion was taken away, he could have had no writ of entry ad communem legem, until after the decease of the tenant in dower; and then the warranty, which was at that time usually inserted in all deeds, barred the reversioner if he was heir to the doweress. To remedy this evil, it was provided by the statute of Gloucester (6 Ed. 1, c. 7), that upon the alienation in fee, or for life of a tenant in dower, she should forfeit her estate, and that the heir should have a writ, in casu proviso, in her lifetime. By the statute 11 Hen. 7, c. 20, also, and 32 Hen. 8, c. 36, no feoffment, fine, recovery, or warranty by a tenant in dower will take away the right of entry in the heir or reversioner, but shall be a forfeiture of her estate; so that even previously to the act of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 39, the heir might have entered upon the lands, or have brought his action of ejectment for the recovery of them; but it would have been no forfeiture of her estate unless she had conveyed by some tortious mode of conveyance, which it seems she is now no longer able to do. (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 2; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 4; see also note.)

8. Tenants for years.

A tenant for years, unless prohibited by the express terms of his lease, may assign over his term or grant an underlease (Cru. Dig. tit. 8, ch. 2, pl. 45); but this power of alienation may be restricted by the lease (Hob. 107; 1 Ins. 204, a, 223b); which restriction will be equally binding upon the representatives as upon the lessee himself. (Moore's case, Cro. Eliz. 26; Berry v. Taunton, ib. 331; Pennant's case, 3 Rep. 64; Roe dem. Gregson v. Harrison, 2 T.R. 425.) Yet, although a voluntary assignment by a lessee or his representatives, where there is a restriction against assignment, will be a forfeiture of the lease, it will be otherwise where the assignment is made by operation of law, as where the lease is taken in execution, and sold in pursuance of it (Doe dem. Mitchinson v. Carter, 8 T.R. 57), unless it be fraudulently and collusively done by the lessee, in order, by such means, to evade the condition; as, for example, if the lessee were to give a warrant of attorney to confess in judgment to a creditor, for the express purpose of enabling such creditor to take the lease in execution under the judgment, which would be construed as such an act of fraud upon the lessor, that the latter would be enabled to recover the premises from a purchaser under the sheriff's sale, (Doe v. Carter, 8 T.R. 300.) In the case of a lessee who is, by the terms of his lease, prohibited from assigning, becoming bankrupt, the prohibition will be discharged, and his assignees may sell and assign his interest, without incurring a forfeiture (6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 75; Doe dem. Cheere v. Smith, 1 Marsh. 359; 5 Taunt. 795; 2 Rose, 280; Doe dem. Mitchinson v. Carter, 8 T.R. 300; Lloyd v. Crispe, 5 Taunt. 249; Holland v. Worsley, 1 Camb. N.P. c. 20), unless such interest is, and as it undoubtedly may be, made determinable on the lessee's becoming a bankrupt, and the lessor enabled, on the occurrence of that event, to enter upon the demised premises, as if for a forfeiture (Roe v. Galliers, 2 T.R. 133; Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. 429.)

Conditions in restraint of assignment not favoured.—Conditions to restrain a lessee from assigning are not favoured; therefore, a condition of this kind will not preclude the lessee from underletting the property. (Crisoe and Blencowe v. Bugby, 3 Wils. Rep. 234; 2 Blackst. 766.) And conditions of this kind affect the original lessor and his personal representatives only, and do not extend to his assignees; consequently, if the lessee assigns the term with his lessor's assent and license, such assignee may assign to any other person, without any further assent on the part of the lessor. (Dumpon's case, 4 Rep. 119, b.) So a demise to A, B, and C, with a like condition, if the license to alien be granted to, and A aliens accordingly, the condition will thereby be determined with respect to B and C also. (Leeds v. Crompton, cited 4 Rep. 120, a; 1 Roll. Abr. 472, G. pl. 7; Taylor v. Shum, 1 B. & P. 21; Steph. N.P. 1124; Selw. N.P. 480, 9th edit.) And where the condition is that the lessee shall not alien any part of the land without the lessor's consent, and the lessor afterwards consents to his alienating a part, the condition will thereby become discharged as to the residue (4 Rep. 120, a). There is, however, one species of assignment by license of a lessor which will not discharge the condition, and which we must be careful not to lose sight of; which is, where there is an exception out of the usual restriction to alienate, in favour of an assignment by will, and the lessor assigns by will accordingly, and after the lessee's death his executors make another assignment, and not by will, in which case, it seems, the last assignment will be invalid. (Lloyd v. Crisp, 5 Taunt. 249.) And although a condition not to assign without license will not affect an underlease, yet a lessee may be restricted as well from underletting as from assigning, if a proviso to that effect be inserted in the lease. And a Court of Equity will not relieve against a forfeiture occasioned by a breach of covenant against assigning or underletting without the consent of the lessor. (Davies v. Moreton, 2 Cha. Cas. 127; 2 Cru. Dig. tit. 13, ch. 1, s. 52; 1 Mad. Pract. 40, 2nd edit.; Selw. N.P. 481, 9th edit.; Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 63; Loyal, Lord, v. Ranalagh, Lord, 3 Ves. & Bea. 31; Rob v. Harrison, 7 T.R. 245; Doe dem. Holland v. Worsley, 1 Campb. N.P.C. 20.) There is, however, a distinction between those cases where the lease contains a condition for avoiding the lease in cases of alienation, and where the lessee merely enters into a covenant against so doing; for it is only in the former case that the lease will be forfeited by the alienation; in the latter the lessor's only remedy is by an action for damages for the breach of covenant. (Paul v. Morse, 8 B. & C. 488; see also Whickot v. Fox, Cro. Jac. 398; Fox v. Swann, Sly, 483; 2 Cru. Dig. tit. 13, ch. 1, pl. 40, 41.) But if a lessee for years attempts, by a tortious mode of conveyance, to create a larger estate than by law he is entitled to do, and thereby divests the estate in remainder or reversion, it will operate as a forfeiture of his estate. (Dy. 362, 366; 1 Ins. 251; Cro. Eliz. 332.) But where a lease may be avoided for breach of a condition, if the lessor should accept rent due afterwards, or distrain for the same, after notice of the cause of forfeiture, it will restore the validity of the lease. (Cru. Dig. tit. 13, ch. 1, pl. 52; Selw. N.P. 481, 9th edit.; Goodright dem. Walter v. Davids, Cow. 804; Whickot v. Fox, Cro. Jac. 398.) But it would be otherwise if the lessor, at the time he received the rent, or distrained for the same, was ignorant of any cause of forfeiture having been incurred. (Roe dem. Gregson v. Harrison, 2 T. R. 425.)

9. Copyholders and tenants of customary estates.

A copyholder, although he formerly held his tenements merely at the will of the lord, has now established his right so firmly, that as long as he continues to render the services and observes the customs of the manor, he can neither be turned out of his possessions (Wat. Cop. 52, 93; Williams v. Lonsdale, 3 Ves. 572), nor precluded from transferring his estate and interest in the copyhold premises. But notwithstanding this extensive power of alienation, a copyholder, in the absence of an express custom, cannot, without the license and authority of the lord, make a lease for more than a single year (4 Rep. 26, a; Bulstr. 190; Jackson v. Hoddeston, Cro. Eliz. 35; East v. Harding, ib. 498; Moore, 393; Mathews v. Wheaton, 6 Vin. Abr. 119) even by parol (East v. Harding, supra, Wat. Cop. 327); nor even for one year, if it be to commence in futuro (ib.); and should he presume so to do, he will thereby incur a forfeiture of his estate; as he will even where he has a license, if he exceeds it, and grants a longer term than by the terms of such license he is empowered so to do. (Jackson v. Neale, Cro. Eliz. 395.) Where, however, there is a custom in the manor for copyholder to grant leases, a term granted in pursuance of the custom would be good, and of course no forfeiture. (Vin. Abr. 118; Cru. Dig. tit. 10, ch. 5, pl. 8.) And if a lease be made with the lord's license, no matter how long the term, it will be effectual; nor can any forfeiture accrue thereby (6 Vin. Abr. 217); and the lessee in such case may assign his term, or make an underlease, without any new license being requisite for that purpose; the interest of the lord during the continuance of such term having been already discharged by the license. (Turner v. Hodges, Hutt. 102.) In order also that a copyholder's lease may operate as a forfeiture, a common law interval must pass; consequently, a mere covenant or an agreement for a lease, ~~and not a lease~~ (Gibb. 233; Richards v. Clegg, 3 Keb. 688; Wat. Cop. 328; Hamlen v. Hamlen, 1 Bulstr. 190; Doe v. Elare, 2 T. R. 739; Doe v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 52; Doe v. Luffin, 4 East, 221; Denn v. Cartwright, 38. 29.) Upon the same principle, therefore, a feoffment without livery, or a bargain and sale without enrolment, whereby the copyholder professes to convey a freehold interest, will not effect a forfeiture of his estate (East v. Harding, Cro. Eliz. 498; Co. Litt. 59, a; N. (3); Wat. Cop. 327; Godb. 369; Gibb. 255); because, from the imperfection of those assurances, they were incapable of passing a common law interest; yet in order to work a forfeiture, it is not requisite that the conveyance should be made by a tortious mode of assurance, for if it be made by such an instrument as is capable of passing common law interest in freehold property, it will be sufficient (Lit. s. 84; Cru. Dig. tit. 10, ch. 5, pl. 5); the ground of which is, that a copyholder being but a tenant at will, such an act of alienation would be treated as a determination of his will. But a bargain and sale, although enrolled, will not produce this consequence; because a bargain and sale only passes an use till the statute operating upon such use transfers the possession; and as a copyholder is incapable of being seised to an use, the statute cannot attach, the consequence of which is, that no estate passing, there can be no forfeiture. (Wat. Cop. 328.) And it also seems that a surrender by a copyholder for life, to the use of another in fee, will be no forfeiture (Oldcott v. Leveil, Moore, 753; Wat. Cop. 328; Bullock v. Diblay, 4 Rep. a.); as a surrender is incapable of passing more than the party making it can lawfully transfer; and even if such a surrender could pass the fee, it would be no more than the fee of the copyhold interest, and not an estate at common law; which, as I have before remarked, is essential to work a forfeiture; besides, where a surrender is made, it must be done with the privity of the lord, or, which is the same thing, of his steward; and if the lord accept the surrender in fee from the copyholder for life, and admit the appointee accordingly, it will be his own act. (Wat. Cop. 329.)

Relief in equity.—Relief is sometimes afforded by a Court of Equity where a copyholder has inadvertently incurred a forfeiture (1 Mad. Prac. 44, 2nd edit.); but this has rarely, if ever, been done when the act occasioning the forfeiture was a wilful and voluntary one; consequently whenever it has been incurred by the copyholder, having conveyed a common law estate (Sir H. Peachey v. Duke of Somerset, 1 Str. 447; Pre. Cha. 574), or a lease without license, relief has been always refused. (18. 1b.; see also 1 Mad. Prac. 44.)

Copyholders, tenants in tail.—With respect to copyholders who are tenants in tail, the most usual mode by which they barred the entail was by suffering a recovery in the lord's court; but in some manors there was a custom to bar them by a mere surrender, whilst in others it was optional to adopt either a recovery or a surrender for that purpose; either mode of assurance producing precisely the same result. The late statute of the 1 Wm. 4, c. 65, which re-enacts the statute 47 Geo. 3, c. 8, s. 2, and extends to lands in ancient demesnes, as well as to copyholds, empowered all persons not being under coverture, and every fewer covert also, (provided she was solely examined by the lord or steward of the manor), to appoint an attorney for the purpose of surrendering the lands, in order to constitute a tenant to the plaintiff, for suffering a recovery in the lord's court. These Acts have been since repealed by the Fine and Recovery Substitution Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), by which last-mentioned Act the barring of estates tail in copyholds must for the future be governed; which, in the case of legal estates, must be effected by surrender; and, where the estate is merely equitable, either by surrender or by deed. (Sec. 50.) And where the consent of a protector is necessary, the deed by which he consents must be produced to the lord or his steward at or before the surrender, which the lord or steward must indorse, and enter the deed and indorsement on the rolls; and the indorsement is to be evidence of the production; and the lord or steward is to endorse upon the deed a memorandum of such entry. (Sec. 52.) In case the protector does not consent by deed, his consent must then be given to the person taking the surrender; and if the surrender be out of court, the consent should be stated in the memorandum of the surrender, and the memorandum signed by the protector; which, when entered on the rolls, will be evidence both of the consent and surrender; but if the surrender be in court, the surrender must be entered on the rolls, and a statement of the consent, which entry, or a copy, is to be available as evidence, as any other entry on the court rolls, or a copy thereof. (Sec. 52.) An equitable tenant in tail may dispose of his copyhold estate, by a deed, to be entered on the rolls; and, if the protector consent, by a separate deed, the latter must be executed either previously to or simultaneously with the disposition, and entered on the rolls by the lord or his steward, who must indorse on the deeds a memorandum of them; and unless the deed be so entered it will be void, as against a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration. (Sec. 53.) But neither disposition will require enrolment, otherwise than by entry on the court rolls.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

March 10, 12, and 13.

WHITMALL v. FRATHERSTONEHAUGH.

Practise—Amending bill—68th Order of May, 1845—Due diligence.

In granting upon an application to the discretion of the Court, the judge properly looks to the spirit and intention of the New Orders, although the application was made, but not finally disposed of, before the promulgation of the New Orders, and therefore upon a motion for leave to amend under the old practice, the Court considers whether due diligence has been used, within the meaning of the 68th Order of May, 1845. Where the time for amending expires when the Master's office is closed, and therefore application for time to amend cannot be made to the Master, the application must necessarily be made to the Court: Where fair diligence has been used to obtain the papers from counsel, who was prevented by press of business from advising on the amendments, the Court will not attribute to the client on that account want of due diligence.

This was an appeal from an order of the Vice-Chancellor of England, refusing a motion for leave to amend the bill, on the ground that the plaintiff had not shown that he had used due diligence. The Vice-Chancellor held that the affidavit in support of the motion in the Court below, only went to show that due diligence had been used during one part of the time; and that notwithstanding the motion had stood over since April, 1845, the motion was to be treated as governed by the New Orders of May, 1845. The affidavit did not appear to his Honour to have been made according to the spirit of the 68th Order; and decided that the diligence must be co-extensive with the whole time. From that decision the plaintiff appealed. The answer was filed on the 29th of November, 1844, and the plaintiff's solicitor did not lay the answer before his counsel until the 14th of January, 1845. The interval was thus accounted for. On the 12th of December, the copy of the answer was sent by the agent in London to the plaintiff's solicitor at Worcester, when some time was required for communication between the plaintiff who lived several miles from Worcester, and it was sworn that the instructions for the amendments could not have been prepared as to lay them before counsel until the 14th of January. The amendments required were extensive and complicated, so that counsel had not completed them till the 12th of February. The draft of the amendments was then sent into the country, and in a few days returned to town, and again laid before counsel for final settlement. The time for amending expired on the 20th of March, and the amendments, as settled, were presented from counsel on the 31st of March, 1844. The Master's offices had been closed since the 31st of March, and were not opened until the 3rd of April, consequently no application for time to amend could have been made to the Master. The first seal was on the 7th of April, but notice of motion for leave to amend was given for the 15th of April, the first day of Easter Term, and stood over from time to time until July, when the motion was in part heard, was heard again in November following, and finally disposed of on the 15th of December last.

Relit, for the appellant.

Walker and Bacon, contra, referred to Bartolozzi v. Johnson (2 Hare, 633); Attorney-General v. Fishmongers' Company, 1. They contended that the materiality of the amendments ought to have been shewn, by informing the Court what were the nature and scope of the amendments; and that due diligence had not been used.

Relit, in reply.—The affidavits were sufficient under the 13th Order of 1828, which in July was the order by which this motion was governed; that the plaintiff was bound to use fair and reasonable diligence, which had been done in this case. In Phillips v. Goding, Vice-Chancellor Wigram said, that in order to shew that the proposed amendments are material, the plaintiff must either have the certificate of counsel, or an affidavit as to materiality.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I am satisfied that the amendments which were asked in this case are material and necessary. Then comes the question, whether reasonable diligence has been exercised in preparing the amendments; and first as to the New Orders. The application was made on the 1st of April, that is, the notice of motion was given for that day. That was long before the New Orders came into operation; some considerable time before they were even promulgated. The question came on for consideration before the Court in July; that was after the promulgation of the New Orders, but before they came into effect. The motion was not finally disposed of until after the 28th October; it came on in December. Although this was after the New Orders, yet, as the Court had possession previously to the orders being promulgated, I think it was proper for the decision of the Court to consider the effect of the New Orders. As to what was said by the Vice-Chancellor, or is supposed to have been said as to the New Orders being applicable to the case, satisfactory explanation has been given. It is an application to the discretion of the Court, and the Court might very properly have declined to exercise that discretion, by its consideration of the New Orders. The Vice-Chancellor is said to have been of that opinion, and I entirely concur in it. He would look to the New Order, consider the spirit of the Order, and that would assist him in guiding his discretion in the case. Then, with respect to the bill. The 29th of March was the time within which the application for leave to amend ought to have been made. The amendments were not completed till the 31st of March. If the amendments had been completed in time, that is, if they had been completed two or three days earlier, the application must have been made to the Master under the order of October 1838. But the Master had closed his office on the 31st of March, which was Good Friday, and the office was not open again until the 3rd of April, a few days before Easter Term. If, therefore, the plaintiff had been in time, four or five days earlier, which would have been in complete time, he could not have applied to the Master, who alone had jurisdiction in the first instance, for leave to amend. He would have been placed in precisely the same situation as he now stands; he would have been under the necessity of making his application to the Court, because the six weeks would have expired before the office was again opened. It seems to me that the defendant has, in this view of the case, sustained no prejudice. The material fact to be considered is, that applications of the kind are applications made to the discretion of the Court. In this respect, the parties would have been precisely in the same situation as they are now placed, if the amendments had been made four or five days earlier; as they would have been precisely in time. That brings me to the consideration of the delay; and as to what took place in the chambers of the learned counsel, unless I were perfectly satisfied from some facts brought before me, that there had been unnecessary delay by the learned counsel, I should have been unwilling to refuse the plaintiff leave to amend on that account.

Gentlemen in the profession will not in each case consistently with other avocations and other claims upon their time, and both solicitor and counsel have done all that was necessary and proper on this occasion. I agree, therefore, that it must be taken that due diligence must be considered to have been used. Every one must know how counsel are occasionally pressed; how difficult and laborious Chancery drawing is, and how much attention and care it requires, so that no gentleman could undertake, within a certain time, to do work of that description. The solicitors appear to have done all they could. They applied at the chambers over and over again, and could not obtain the amendments in time. They did all that was possible. Now I am to consider the time from the 29th of November until the 12th of December, and I am to consider the time which elapsed from the 12th of December to the 14th of January. As to these distant periods, my attention was directed to them, and I have read the affidavits. From December 12th to January the 14th, is, I think, well accounted by the necessary preparation of instructions for counsel, but the interval between the 29th of November and the 12th of December, affords some ground for doubt. The solicitor in town had in that time obtained the office copy of the answer, and prepared and sent the brief copy of it to the solicitor in the country, and this appears to be rather a long delay; yet, as the defendant has experienced no injury, I think I should be exercising a sound discretion by allowing the amendments to be made. It was said that the plaintiff might file a new bill, but that would occasion a considerable difficulty in the shape of costs, and I do not think it necessary to drive the plaintiff to that by refusing the application. As this matter came before me upon a rehearing and upon an improved state of facts, and a further affidavit making a different case from that before the Vice-Chancellor, the plaintiff must pay the costs of the appeal; and as the application is for indulgence, the plaintiff must likewise pay the costs of the application to the Vice-Chancellor.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

March 14, 16, and 17.

MATTHEW v. EDWARDS.

Mortgagee and mortgagee—Power of sale.

A mortgagee having a power of sale cannot, as between himself and the mortgagee, exercise it in a manner merely arbitrary, but is bound to exercise some discretion, so as not to throw away the property, but to act in a proper and business-like manner, with a view to obtain as large a price as fairly and reasonably, with due diligence and attention, can, under the circumstances, be obtained.

Circumstances under which the Court set aside a sale made by a mortgagee under his power of sale.

By a settlement made upon the marriage of the Rev. Hugh Matthie, in 1837, two sums of 3,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* secured by mortgage on freehold lands, were assigned to trustees, upon certain trusts, for himself, for life, and, after his death, for his wife for life, and after her death, for the children of the marriage; and in default of children, for the Rev. H. Matthie absolutely. Between November 1842 and July 1843, Mr. Matthie, through his solicitors, Messrs. Harper and Parry Jones, of Whitechurch, raised four sums of 200*l.*, 100*l.*, 250*l.*, and 120*l.* respectively, and mortgaged his reversionary interest under the settlement to secure the repayment of them. The last-mentioned sum of 120*l.* was lent by Thomas Wilkinson, and the mortgage-deed, dated the 6th of July, 1843, contained a power of sale by public auction or private contract, upon default being made in payment of the principal, together with interest, at 5*l.* per cent. upon the 1st of September, then next. The trustees of the settlement were Mr. Harper and the Rev. R. B. Home. After the death of Mr. Matthie, which occurred on the 9th of December, 1843, Mr. Wilkinson exercised his power of sale in the manner stated in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment. This suit was instituted by Mrs. Matthie, to set aside the sale, and the defendants to the suit were the mortgagees, Messrs. Harper and Jones, and Eyton, the purchaser.

Wigram and Renshaw, for the plaintiffs.
Russell and Hall, for the mortgagees, and Messrs. Harper and Jones.

Anderson and Torriano, for the defendant Eyton.
The VICE CHANCELLOR.—I hope, for the credit of society—especially of a certain class of society—that proceedings such in character as these which accompanied the sale which is now impeached in this suit are not of frequent occurrence. I have the satisfaction of believing that they are not. The sale in question, which it is the object of the bill to set aside, although it may have been, as I think it was, far from commendable—although it may have been, as I think it was, a measure of striking and extraordinary harshness—is not, therefore, necessarily to be set aside in a court of justice. The question is, whether there are judicial grounds upon which it ought to fall. Mrs. Matthie was married to her late husband, the Rev. Hugh Matthie, a clergyman, in December 1837, she being about twenty-three years of age. Previously to the marriage, a settlement was made of sums amounting to 4,000*l.* due on mortgage. His Honour then stated the particulars of the settlement and the first three mortgages, and said, "The fourth is that of Wilkinson, for 120*l.*, lent in July 1843, who, through the defendants Harper and Parry Jones, made, or attempted or professed to make, under the power of sale contained in his security, the sale in question in this case. It is admitted that Harper alone, or together with his partner Jones, was concerned as solicitor for Mr. Matthie on the matter of each security. As to that to Mr. Wilkinson for 120*l.* the principal and interest were made payable on the 1st of September 1843, eight weeks after the advance, for which, therefore, Mr. Matthie, being charged with the expense of the security, itself not a short instrument, may be considered as having become liable to pay at a rate somewhat of the dearest. In default of payment upon the first of September, Wilkinson had the pre-emptory and absolute power of sale, without notice, and without agreement to give notice, conferred on him by the deed. That any man having a solicitor should have been allowed, for the sake of borrowing 120*l.* to execute such a deed, may be reasonably thought a matter of wonder. So, however, it was; Mr. Matthie must be considered as bound, as between him and Wilkinson, by the instrument. Mr. Matthie died on the 9th of December, 1843, without having paid the money, not leaving any child of the marriage, as was ascertained in the following year. It was not believed, and I cannot assume, that in or before March 1844, when this suit was commenced, it was known to the plaintiff, or any one else, that there would be no issue of the marriage. By Mr. Matthie's will and codicil the plaintiff and Mr. Hone were appointed executrix and executor. The latter has not proved, but probate was granted to the widow alone on the 23rd of January, 1844, and not till so late a day as that. The mortgagees, by virtue of the securities, were specialty creditors, Messrs. Harper and Jones were simple contract creditors of Mr. Matthie. The assets left by him were supposed to be insufficient for the payment of all his debts in full. The defendant, Wilkinson, through the instrumentality of Messrs. Harper and Jones, his solicitors, put up the reversionary interest in the 4,000*l.* to sale by auction on the 27th of January, 1844, knowing that the plaintiff and her friends and advisers objected to it. An agent on the widow's behalf attended at the auction-room, and protested against the sale, and it nevertheless proceeded, the agent making one or more biddings. The highest bidder was the defendant, Eyton, at 1,020*l.* and Harper and Jones, for the vendor, bid the reserved bidding, 1,500*l.* and the property was bought in. On the 3rd of February, Wilkinson, through the same solicitors, contracted to sell the reversionary interest to Eyton, who had been the ward of Harper and was the brother-in-law of Jones, by private contract, for a thousand guineas, upon the terms and stipulations of the auction conditions, when the same was professed to be intended to be publicly sold. This was followed by a more formal contract, under seal for the same purpose, dated Feb. 5; for what good reason it does not seem very easy to understand. This was the state of things which it is the object of the suit to set aside. A correspondence commenced, exactly one week after the death of Mr. Matthie, with a letter to Mr. Hone, the brother of the widow, from Mr. Jones, dated the 16th of December, 1843, as follows:—"As you did not make any definite arrangement with Mr. Parry Jones yesterday as to the most important matter in which we are concerned in the affairs of my late lamented friend Mr. Matthie, namely, the payment of his debts, I send a special messenger with this, to say that if you do not give to us on Monday next an irrevocable authority to Messrs. Churton, the auctioneers, to pay what shall be found due to us, upon reference to some respectable solicitor, in case we do not agree about the same, we shall file a bill in Chancery for the due administration of his estate and effects." This letter was written just one week after the death of Mr. Matthie; to it Mr. Hone on the same day replied that he was not in a situation to make any statement (and no wonder he was not, for his brother-in-law had been dead but a week) with regard to the affairs of Mr. Matthie. Three days after, Messrs. North and Orred, that is, on the 19th of December, wrote a letter thus:—"Some of the friends and connections of the late Rev. Hugh Matthie have advised with us as to his affairs, and particularly with reference to a letter written to Mr. Hone on the 16th inst. by your clerk, Mr. P. Jones, which we feel confident that you cannot have seen before it was dispatched. The parties we have alluded to have under their consideration the propriety of coming forward, if they can see their way clearly, to provide a fund for the payment of the just debts of the late Mr. Matthie, a design in which they are influenced solely by the great reluctance which they feel that any thing like the discredit of insolvency should attach itself to the memory of so near a connection; but as yet, of course, they cannot commit themselves to any such engagement, the performance of which must altogether depend upon the state in which they may find the affairs of the deceased, of which their knowledge as yet is extremely limited. But as the first step towards obtaining the information necessary to enable them to decide, we are instructed to say that they will provide means for the payment of what you and we may agree to be justly due to you on being put into possession of all the papers of the deceased in your custody. We have not yet seen the Rev. Mr. Hone, but are instructed that he will sanction the above arrangement as executor, if he determines to assume that office, but as to which he has by no means made up his mind." The correspondence then proceeded by letters, in which Messrs. Harper and Jones inquired whether Messrs. North and Orred would undertake to appear to process for Mr. Hone, and offering to transmit to them an account of what was due to Harper and Jones from the estate of Mr. Matthie. On the 21st of December North and Orred, after referring to the difficulties that stood in the way of proving Mr. Matthie's will, proceeded—"Our instructions are confirmed to pay all that may be found to be due to you from the deceased, upon receiving all his deeds and papers, of which, together with an account, we should be glad to receive a list at once, including the three mortgages and title-deeds, which it will be most necessary, for the security of all parties to the new proposed arrangement should be placed in the control of those who may come forward to pay the general debts (a proposal still under the consideration of the family); and to this end we presume you would have no objection, under the circumstances, to resign the trusteeship, in order to the appointment of one of the relatives or connections we have mentioned. Indeed, an undertaking to this effect seems the necessary preliminary of any arrangement." On the 2nd of January, 1844, North and Orred wrote, "We have also since our last been instructed to act on behalf of Mr. Hone, one of the trustees, and of the parties beneficially interested under Mr. Matthie's settlement, and should be glad of such information as to the nature and particulars of the several investments, and the valuations, &c. on which they were made, and the rate of interest, and the punctuality of its payment, as may enable us to advise them properly as to this trust." This information was the next day offered, upon North and Orred informing Harper and Jones who was to pay their charges; but Harper and Jones declined the proposal that Mr. Harper should retire from the trusteeship, and desired that the creditors should be satisfied that nothing had been removed, of which there were said to be serious complaints. On the 6th of January North and Orred informed Harper and Jones that difficulties had arisen as to the probate, from the fact of Mr. Matthie having left children. On the 12th a letter was written to the same parties, referring to the fact that a sale of the reversionary property had been publicly advertised, and saying, "If you will now postpone the sale, and will send us an abstract of the mortgage last in date, with such particulars of the others, and of the sums due on each, as will enable us to prepare an assignment of the whole; and if you will fix a day and place for payment, at a sufficient interval only to allow us conveniently to prepare the deed, we undertake, on behalf of our clients, that the whole principal, interest, and costs, justly due on the above-mentioned securities, shall be paid on such day upon the execution of a proper assignment. If you decline to give us this information, we request to be made acquainted with the address of the several mortgagees, in order that we may make similar applications to them personally." To this, on the 16th, Harper and Jones replied, "There is due from the late Mr. Matthie, on mortgage to four clients of ours, 670*l.* with interest from the time the several advances were made;" "and also the amount due to ourselves, of which you have had particulars; in addition to which there are further charges for advertising and preparing for the sale. On receipt of this, namely, principal and interest and amount due to us, we will, on behalf of our clients, postpone the sale." On the 25th, North and Orred refused to comply with such conditions, but said, "If the sale be postponed, we hereby not only pledge to such payment," (that is, of principal, interest, and costs on the mortgages,) "our respectable clients, the Rev. Mr. Coxon, the Rev. Mr. Hone, and Mrs. Matthie, but also ourselves personally undertake to pay such principal, interest, and costs, within a fortnight from this date, upon the execution of a proper assignment. Under these circumstances, we also, on behalf of our clients, protest against the sale, as unnecessary, oppressive, and improper, and beg to give you notice, that if it be proceeded with, we shall apply to a Court of Equity to set it aside, with costs." Then followed two letters, expressing surprise that the property should have been sold, warning the parties not to complete, and again offering payment, and stating the intention, on refusal, of filing a bill. By a letter dated 5th February, the day when the second agreement was executed, Harper and Jones said that they made no claim on the reversionary interest, save the sums due to their clients. Such was the correspondence; and I regret the loss of the public time occupied in reading it, but the reading of it I consider a public duty. It is impossible, I think, for any impartial man to be made aware of this correspondence, and the circumstances I have stated, without feeling regret that the transactions which have been disclosed should have existed. Both parties, however, are entitled to have their respective rights decided upon grounds strictly judicial, as to the validity of the sale in question. I think that a mortgagee, having a power of sale, cannot, as between himself and the mortgagor, exercise it in a manner merely arbitrary; but is bound to exercise some discretion, so as not to throw away the property, but to act in a proper and business-like manner, with a view to obtain as large a price as fairly and reasonably, with due diligence and attention, can, under the circumstances, be obtained. Here, neither the particulars nor the conditions of sale stated the age of the tenant for life. She is described of a particular age, "or thereabouts." What prudent man would, upon such a statement, make a calculation of price, founded upon the age of the tenant for life? I think none. The certificate of her baptism was produced in the auction-room, but this only proves that the party was not born after the date mentioned in that document. This statement of age was of so loose a description, that it would naturally discourage and keep off prudent purchasers. I think it was in the highest degree imprudent to sell at the time the parties did sell, without a guarantee against the probability of issue of the marriage being born. It has been said, that the mortgagee was not bound to wait until the fact could be ascertained. Some cases there may be in which such a remark may have weight; in the circumstances of this case it has none. The solicitors have proceeded, in my judgment, oppressively and unreasonably to execute the right of sale contained in the security, given for 120*l.* not seven months before the mortgagor's death having happened not more than two months. Upon the fact which I have stated, an injunction to restrain a sale attempted on the 27th of January would, I think, have been most certainly granted had such an application been made. I have seldom been made aware of a proceeding equally harsh, equally oppressive; but the proceeding was not only harsh and oppressive, but it was inequitable upon the grounds which I have stated. Wilkinson may, possibly, in all this strange course of acting, have been an instrument in the hands of others, and there is reason for suspecting that he has been; but the evidence in the cause does not enable me to say that Wilkinson was so grossly ignorant—so mere, so utter a machine—as to be entitled to protection from any of the ordinary consequences of his conduct as between the plaintiff and himself. The sale must be set aside with costs as against him. The bill must be dismissed as against Messrs. Harper and Jones without costs, without prejudice to any question as between the plaintiff and any of the other defendants respectively, and without prejudice to any question as to Mr. Harper's trusteeship of the settlement. I refuse Messrs. Harper and Jones their costs, recollecting perfectly well the charges in the bill against them; but being quite satisfied also that they were the substantial movers and authors of the sale, and that their conduct has been established to have been, with regard to the matters in question, such as to have rendered it not unreasonable for the plaintiff to make them defendants, and such as to take away from them all shadow of title to receive a single shilling in the shape of costs. I declare that the agreements of 1844 cannot be sustained as against the plaintiff. I direct a reference to the Master, to inquire what was due for principal and interest, to the mortgages at the time of the tenders to them, and for costs other than of this suit. The defendant Wilkinson must pay the plaintiff her costs of the suit up to this time.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGMAN'S COURT.

WHITMORE v. RYAN.

Practice—Jurisdiction—Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 94—Orders of May, 1845—Service of subpoena abroad—Discretion.

The jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor to make orders for the administration of suits in equity cannot be questioned in the inferior courts of equity. It is at the discretion of the Court and not as of right, that the plaintiff is entitled to have an order for service of subpoena upon a defendant out of the jurisdiction under the 33rd Order of May 1845.

This motion created some surprise upon the Court, and, from its novelty, much attention in the Profession, from it being in fact a direct attack upon the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor and other judges in equity to make the 33rd Order of May 1845.

The plaintiffs were assignees of Dyer, a bankrupt, who had carried on business as a foreign merchant in London, and had large transactions with the defendant when a merchant residing at Barcelona in Spain; a large balance was due from the defendant to the bankrupt out of those dealings. The defendant left Spain previous to the year 1841, and settled in Ireland, where all his property was situated, and during his residence there, the bill in this suit was filed against him in the English Court of Chancery, for an account and payment of the balance due from him to the bankrupt. After the bill was filed, and before service of the subpoena, the defendant came to England, and some negotiation took place between the bankrupt and the defendant in respect to the debt, when nothing was concluded, and the defendant returned to Dublin without having been served with a subpoena, but it did not appear that he absconded to avoid being served.

The plaintiffs, after many attempts to have the balance between the bankrupt and the defendant settled without suit, at length, in November, 1845, they obtained an order under the 33rd general Order of May, 1845, to serve a subpoena in this suit upon the defendant, near Dublin, and in December following they obtained an order to enter an appearance for the defendants, under the same general Order of May, 1845, which was entered accordingly.

Wood and Metcalfe moved to have the orders for service of the subpoena, and entering an appear-now discharged, and the appearance expunged, on the ground that the Lord Chancellor and the other judges in equity had no jurisdiction to make the order under which the proceedings complained of were taken; and the Court had no such jurisdiction before the Act. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 94, under which the Orders of May, 1845, were framed. That statute did not extend the jurisdiction of the Court; it merely empowered the Lord Chancellor and the other equity judges to make alterations in the mode of exercising the jurisdiction of the Court, and amongst other proceedings, to make such alterations as might seem expedient in the form of writs, and the mode of sealing, issuing, executing, and returning the same; no extension of the jurisdiction is given; the power is merely to alter, not to extend; and that the words of the 33rd Order, allowing service of subpoena on a foreign defendant in any suit must be interpreted in reference to the intent of the statute, and that order, if it admitted of a different construction, was not within the authority of the statute; the consequence of allowing such service would be to transfer, at the plaintiff's pleasure, all suits from the Irish Court of Chancery to the English Court of Chancery, and that such service would be opposed to the principles of international law, by making a foreigner, who neither resided nor had property here, amenable to the courts of this country; and cited, White v. Rose (3 Q.B. Rep. 278); Journe v. Lord McDonald (Dickens, 251); Scott v. Lough (4 Ch. Cas. Brown, 213); Shaw v. Lindsey, 18 Ves. 496).

Romilly and Wilcox, for the defendants, argued, by direction of the Court, solely in support of the discretion of the Court, under the circumstances of the case, in granting the orders sought to be discharged by this motion, and cited Moslyn v. Febrzas (Purston Cooper's Rep. 27); Travers v. Buckley (3 Ves. Sen. 83); Cranston v. Johnson (3 Ves. Jan. 206).

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I do not mean to express any opinion whether the Act of Parliament, and the orders made in pursuance of it, are proper or not with reference to the questions of international law; or whether it might be reasonably expected that foreign countries would treat the judgment as conclusive, where the right had been decided in the absence of the party, and where the subpoena was served in a foreign country. I shall also abstain from considering whether the Act of Parliament was intended to give the Judge of the Court of Chancery, who framed the Orders of May, 1845, power to make an order like that now called in question; I shall only consider whether the thirty-third order did give the Court power to make the orders now sought to be discharged, and that that power has been exercised with sound discretion. Notwithstanding the argument, I can entertain no doubt about the effect of that order. It was properly admitted, that the case must be dealt with as if the very words of the order were contained in the Act. Great weight was due to the observation that had been made about the extensive nature of the 33rd Order; that it empowers the Court, in substance, if it thinks fit, to order a subpoena to be served upon a foreigner who has never been within the jurisdiction, or upon a British subject who has not been within the jurisdiction within two years of the filing of the bill; that argument, however, to be good, must be good to this extent, that if a party is within the jurisdiction, and leaves England, having actually stated in the presence of witnesses that he is going to Boulogne, for instance, to avoid process, the Court cannot order subpoena to go against him. My opinion is, that the order does in terms give authority to do so, and being in the Act of Parliament, it must be taken to embrace the case in question. Being of that opinion, the only ground to consider is, whether the defendant has shewn sufficient circumstances attending the grant of this order to satisfy the Court it has not exercised a sound discretion in making the orders now sought to be discharged. If the discretion were soundly exercised, no rule of natural justice appeared to be violated by the order for the service of the subpoena in Ireland; the object of such service being to give an absent party notice of a proceeding in England, so as to prevent any decree being made against him, without having an opportunity of being heard; previous to the power now given to effect service on parties out of the jurisdiction, there were serious difficulties in the way of parties in obtaining an adjudication of their rights. I shall not attempt to define in what cases the Court ought to make orders, and in what it ought not; a simple case might be put of two men living in Ireland, having dealings together, and accounts arising out of those dealings, the witnesses living there; one of the parties might come to this country, and file a bill against the other; probably, in a case of that kind the Court might not think it right to make an order for service upon the absent party; but in a case where there were numerous parties, all living here, and witnesses also living here, if one of the parties chose to go to Ireland, it might be extremely proper to say that service should be made upon that party in Dublin, in order to prevent a failure of justice; but in the present case, had the Court been as well aware of all the circumstances, when it made the order now complained of, as it is now, I do not think I should have made such an order, unless the defendant had given a better reason than appeared upon the affidavits for not having filed the bill in Dublin; the order, however, had been made, and was quite regular; there had been no improper concealment on the part of the plaintiff; and the question was what was to be done in the existing state of things? With regard to the affidavits which had been filed on either side, I give both parties credit for intending to speak the truth; parties swearing in 1846 as to the effect of the conversations which had taken place in 1843, might, with the fullest intention to speak the truth, be unable correctly to represent what had passed. The plaintiff, it appeared, did intend to serve the defendant in England before he returned to Ireland, and the defendant might himself have been alive to that, and yet without conceiving himself under an obligation to say what he was going to do, he might have taken the other party by surprise by going back to Ireland sooner than was expected; it was clear an opportunity had existed for serving the defendant in this country, which would have been taken advantage of if he had not returned to Ireland sooner than was expected. By allowing the appearance to stand the Court would not be placing the defendant in a worse situation than he would have been, had he been then, or on any other occasion, served with a subpoena in England. There was no ground to suppose the plaintiff's conduct to be fraudulent, though it did not appear why the bill had not been filed in Ireland; and the balance of the testimony in which both parties intended to represent the truth, was in favour of the plaintiff. The 32nd Order of May, 1845, does not give a plaintiff a right to call upon the Court to order service of subpoena abroad; it was intended merely to empower the Court to do so when in justice to the plaintiff it ought to be done, and when it might be done without injustice to the defendant. The only question, therefore, which remained to be considered, was, whether the Court, having an order regularly served, saw any reason to discharge it; in the present case I do not; but in future I shall be more circumspect as to the cases in which I make such orders. Let the present orders, therefore, and the appearance, stand, reserving the costs.

COMMON LAW COURTS.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, April 16.

Dox dem. RICHARDS and ANOTHER v. EVANS.
Stamp—Letters of administration—Demand of possession.

Ejectment tried at Swansea, at the last assizes, before Wightman, J.—The declaration contained two demises; and the verdict was for the plaintiff on the demise by Richards.

Chilton, Q. C., moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter the verdict on that demise, for the defendant, on the ground, 1st, that letters of administration, produced as a necessary part of the case, on the part of the lessor of the plaintiff, were insufficiently stamped with a 1*l.* stamp, the property being above the value of 100*l.*; and 2ndly, that there had been no demand of possession.

Rule nisi.

Dox dem. DARE v. BOWDITCH.Stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28—Construction of lease.

Ejectment, tried at the last assizes for the county of Devon, before Rolfe, B. Verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff.

Greenwood now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a nonsuit, on the ground that no sufficient right of entry had been proved to satisfy the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28. The question turned entirely upon the construction of a clause in the defendant's lease, whereby it was agreed that if the rent should not be paid within twenty days after it became due, that then the landlord might distrain "or enter on the premises for the same until it be fully satisfied." That was not an entry for the purpose of avoiding the lease, such as the statute contemplated.

Rule nisi. Cause to be shewn within four days; a certificate for immediate execution having been signed by the counsel on both sides.

GIRDLESTONE v. MCGOWRAN.Replevin—Right to distrain.

Bequest to the use of A. of the lease of one house, and to B. of the lease of another, providing that the rent of both shall be charged upon A.'s house, and that if B. should at any time be called upon to pay any part of the rent, he might distrain upon A. C. became assignee of B.'s interest, and was also executor under the will. Being called upon to pay rent, and having paid it, he distrained upon A. for the amount. In an action of replevin, to which he avowed that he had been compelled to pay as assignee: Held, that he was bound to give evidence that he had been called upon and compelled to pay in that character.

Replevin.—A rowry that one Francis McGowran died possessed of a term in three houses, Nos. 75, 76, and 77, Webber's-row, under a lease from the city of London; that he bequeathed Nos. 75 and 76 to Mrs.

Smith, one of his daughters, and No. 77 to trustees, for the benefit of Mrs. Girdlestone, the wife of the plaintiff, and provided by his will that the whole rent payable to the city for the three houses should be charged on No. 77; and that if at any time Mrs. Smith should be called upon and obliged to pay any part of such rent, she should be entitled to distrain upon No. 77 for the amount which she should so pay; that the testator appointed the defendant his executor; and that Mrs. Smith had assigned to him, the defendant, all her estate and interest in No. 77; that he being such assignee, had been called upon and forced, and obliged to pay to the city of London a certain sum, being part of the rent due and payable for the said houses; that he had paid such sum as such assignee as aforesaid; and had distrained for that amount upon the plaintiff's houses.

Pleas in bar (amongst others).—

10th. That the defendant paid the said rent voluntarily, without this, that he was called upon or forced or obliged to pay as in the said avowry alleged.

11th. That the defendant did not pay the said rent modo et forma.

At the trial before Alderson B., at Kingston, the evidence consisted of the lease from the city of London; an assignment of that lease to Francis McGowran; his will; and the assignment of Mrs. Smith's interest thereunder to the defendant. Evidence was also given, that a printed notice to pay the rent (according to the practice of the city) had been served upon the defendant; but the notice itself was lost; and a receipt for the rent as "of Jas. McGowran" (the defendant) was proved. The verdict was for the plaintiff on the first two issues, and for the defendant on the rest, subject to a motion to enter it for the plaintiff on those issues; a rule nisi having been obtained for that purpose on the ground that there was no evidence that the defendant had been compelled to pay as alleged in the avowry.

Petersdorff and Willes now shewed cause.—The evidence is perfectly clear that the payment made by the defendant was not a voluntary payment; he paid in obedience to a formal notice requiring him to pay; and terror of suit is a sufficient compulsion. (Brough-ton's case, 5 Rep. 24.) If it be said that it is not proved in what character the defendant paid the rent, the answer is twofold: 1st, the character is not put in issue here; 2ndly, even if it were, it is immaterial and irrelevant; and would involve an inquiry into matters of trust; which is the province of a Court of Equity.

E. James and Lush, contra.—The whole question here is in what character the defendant paid this rent. He filled two characters, that of executor under the will, and that of assignee of Mrs. Smith's interest. In the former character he was bound to pay the rent out of the house on which this distress was made, and prima facie, the presumption would be that he paid it as executor out of the assets. It was only a payment in his character as owner by the assignment of the houses 75 and 76 that would entitle him to distrain, and therefore the avowry alleges that he was called upon and obliged to pay as assignee. Upon that allegation issue is taken; and the defendant was bound to give evidence that he was called upon in that character; but no evidence of that sort was given; and the verdict must, therefore, be entered for the plaintiff upon that issue.

By the COURT.—The plaintiff is entitled to a verdict on the 10th issue. The foundation of the defendant's right to distrain is, that he was assignee; and therefore he ought to shew, by distinct evidence, that he was required to pay, and paid in that character. The only evidence is that of a receipt given to him, not at all expressing in what character the money was paid; and that certainly cannot satisfy the express and necessary averment contained in this avowry, and put in issue by the 10th plea. The issue raised by the 11th plea is different, for that only denies the fact of the payment.

Rule absolute.

STRICKLAND v. MANFIELD.

Banker's cheque—Exemption from stamp duty—Date of place.

A country banker's cheque in the usual form, but headed "Dorchester Old Bank, established 1786." Held, to contain a sufficient date of place to bring it within the provision of stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 15, exempting such cheques from stamp duty; there being no evidence that those words did not describe the place where, in fact, it was drawn.

Assumpsit for money had and received; to which the defendant had pleaded (amongst other pleas) that he had given to the plaintiff a cheque on a banker, which the plaintiff had received in full satisfaction and discharge. At the trial before Rolfe, B. at the last Dorchester Assizes, the defendant, in support of his plea, produced a cheque, which was in the usual form, addressed "To Messrs. Williams, Cox, &c. Pay to my order, &c." but contained no date of place except the following heading: "Dorchester Old Bank. Established 1786." It was objected that the cheque was invalid, for want of a stamp, it not being within the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 15, which exempts from stamp duty drafts on bankers, provided that the place where they are issued be specified therein. The learned judge overruled the objection, and a verdict was found for the defendant.

Cockburn, Q.C. now moved for a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. "Dorchester Old Bank" is the name of the bank, not a description of the place where the cheque was drawn. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—That involves a question of fact. The drawer ought to state upon the face of the cheque where he actually drew it; and if in this case it was drawn at the Dorchester Old Bank, it was right. Did you prove that it was not drawn there?] No.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—Then this may be a date of place; and you do not prove that it is not so. That is an answer to the objection.

The other judges concurring, Rule refused.

PEMBERTON v. VAUGHAN.

Sale of good-will—Agreement stamp—Restraint of trade.

This was an action upon an agreement for the sale of the good-will of a business, tried in Middlesex, before Lord Denman, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff.

Pearson now moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, and also in arrest of judgment; first, on the ground that the agreement was improperly stamped with an eighteen-penny bill-stamp, instead of a one pound agreement-stamp; the declaration claiming above 20l. although at the trial the plaintiff only sought to recover a smaller sum. Citing 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched. part 1; and Pinner v. Arnald (2 Cr. M. & R. 613); secondly, in arrest of judgment, for the insufficiency of the declaration. The declaration set out an agreement which contained an absolute prohibition upon the defendant from exercising the trade within a mile; that is an unreasonable restriction, for it would continue after the plaintiff had ceased to require any such protection, and cannot, therefore, be supported. (Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Add. & Ell. 438, 454.)

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It protects the house, not the plaintiff's business. Take a rule. Rule nisi.

CURTIS v. PUGH.

Acceptance of goods within 17th section of the Statute of Frauds.

Debt, for goods sold and delivered. Plea, never indebted.

The trial took place before Lord Denman on the 28th February last, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. The question was, whether there was any acceptance of the goods within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds; the evidence being, that two hogsheds of glue, for the price of which this action was brought, were sent to the defendant; that for the purpose of examination, the glue was taken out of the hogsheds, and upon that examination, declared by the defendant to be deficient in quality; and that the glue had been partially injured by the removal, and could not be re-packed in the hogsheds. The learned judge was of opinion that the injury done to the glue by its removal from the hogsheds was sufficient to constitute an acceptance.

Martin, Q.C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered, on the ground that there was no sufficient acceptance of the glue within the statute. The acceptance must be an acceptance with the intention of taking to the goods; there must be a transfer and taking possession of the goods. (Baldev v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 37; Phillips v. Bistolfi, 2 B. & C. 511; Elliott v. Thomas, 3 Mee. & W. 170.) If injury has been done, an action for that injury may be sustained; but it cannot affect the question of acceptance under the Statute of Frauds. Rule nisi.

ROLLS v. SENIOR AND ANOTHER.

Trespass—Indorsement of writ—Attorney.

An attorney indorsed a writ of execution thus, "The defendant resides at Wolverton, and is an innkeeper," and delivered it to a sheriff's officer, by whom it was executed at an inn, in Wolverton, in which the execution debtor resided, but which belonged to his mother-in-law. The execution-debtor was not himself an innkeeper, but he managed his mother-in-law's business. Held, that the attorney was liable in trespass for seizing the mother-in-law's goods; especially as he had become the assignee of the debt, for which the execution had issued.

Trespass, for seizing the plaintiff's goods. Pleas, not guilty, and a justification under a writ of execution.

At the trial, it appeared that the writ of execution had issued in a suit of Gandell v. Daw, and that one of the defendants, named Cheshire, was the attorney in that suit; that Cheshire had indorsed the writ in these words, "The defendant resides at Wolverton, and is an innkeeper," and delivered it to an officer, who executed it at the house of the plaintiff, which was an inn at Wolverton. The defendant in that action, Daw, was the son-in-law of the plaintiff, managed the business of the inn, and resided there; but the jury found that the goods seized belonged not to him but to the plaintiff, and the verdict was entered accordingly. A rule nisi for a nonsuit had since been obtained, on the part of defendant Cheshire, on the ground that there was no evidence for the jury as against him; and also upon an affidavit stating that he had taken an assignment of the debt, for which the action against Daw was brought.

Pashley and Power now shewed cause.—There can be no doubt that the defendant Cheshire is liable in this action; the rule is perfectly well settled, that a party who sues out process, and causes it to be executed, is liable in trespass, if the goods of a wrong person are seized (Barker v. Braham, 3 Wils. 368); and in this respect there is no distinction between the attorney and the party in the cause. (Green v. Elgie, 5 Q.B. 99; Codrington v. Loyd, 8 Ad. & Ell. 449; Sedley v. Sutherland, 3 Esp. 202; Bates v. Pilling, 6 B. & C. 38; Bryant v. Clutton, 1 M. & W. 408.) But further, if there be any case in which an attorney could so completely avoid interference as to escape liability, the present is not one of that sort; for here the defendant misled the sheriff by a false indorsement on the writ. Jarman v. Hooper (6 M. & G. 827) and Sowell v. Champion (6 Ad. & E. 407) are quite distinguishable.

O'Malley, contra.—It is admitted that there is no difference between the attorney and the client; if the one is liable, so is the other; neither is it disputed that if the attorney direct the sheriff to take the goods of A, and they are wrongfully taken, he is liable; but in this case the defendant Cheshire directed the attorney to do one thing and he did another. The writ required him to seize the goods of Daw, and he seized those of the plaintiff; but then reliance is placed upon the indorsement. Now the attorney is required by a rule of Court to give the best description of the defendant he can; and the description given in this case was sufficiently accurate to be a compliance with that rule. Besides, if a mere mistake would make the attorney liable, he would be so in the case of every interpleader rule which comes before the Court. At all events, if he were liable at all, case and not trespass would be the proper remedy. In Sowell v. Champion (6 Ad. & Ell. 407) the circumstances were much stronger to shew that the attorney knew where the writ would be executed, yet the Court held that he was not liable in trespass.

Lord DENMAN, G.J.—The only principle established by Sowell v. Champion is, that the attorney is not a trespasser, unless he directs the particular goods to be seized; but the question here is whether he did direct them to be seized, and it seems to me that he did so. He desired the officer to go to an inn at Wolverton, kept by Daw, for the purpose of seizing Daw's goods; he therefore stated that which naturally led the officer to believe that Daw was the owner of the house; and that is clearly enough to make him liable. This view of the case is greatly strengthened by the position which the defendant had taken as assignee of the debt; for he had become substantially the plaintiff in the former action. There is no ground for questioning the case of Sowell v. Champion, but it is not applicable here.

PATTESON, J. concurred.

WILLIAMS, J.—In Sowell v. Champion nothing was done which could mislead the sheriff.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurring, Rule discharged.

Friday, April 17.

WOLMER v. TOBY.

Railways—Liability of allottees—Provisional committee—Allotment of the whole number of shares—Readiness and willingness to allot shares.

The defendant had applied for shares to the directors of the Direct Exeter, Plymouth, and Devonport Railway Company, which had been allotted him by the company, and he was sued for his proportion of the expenses upon the project, which had failed, and had been abandoned. The trial took place at the late assizes for Exeter, and a verdict given in favour of the plaintiffs.

Kinglelake, Serjt., in pursuance of leave granted, now moved for a rule nisi for a nonsuit upon the following grounds.—First, That the action could not be maintained, inasmuch as the project was a quasi partnership between the plaintiffs and defendant, who were to be associated in the undertaking, under which circumstances there could be no action maintained by any one or more partners against another by the rules of the common law. 2nd. That the parties to the undertaking at the time of the defendant's offer to take shares were not the same persons as those at the time the allotment of shares was made. The defendant had offered to take shares from one set of managers, whilst the allotment took place when there was another set of persons intrusted with the management. If he were to be thus bound, the greatest injustice might be inflicted; for it might possibly be that when the defendant thus offered, all those intrusted with the management were able, honourable men, whilst the managers at the time of the allotment might be men of incompetency, or men of straw. It might be a quite different scheme from that in which he proposed at first to take shares. For, it was to be observed that, more than two months had transpired from the period of the offer to the time of the allotment of the shares. In effect the defendant was prepared upon the 13th of October to accept of shares and embark in a scheme with certain substantial individuals; but it was not until the 15th of December that he was informed by the plaintiffs that he was associated by them with parties, other and quite distinct. Was he bound to accept their offer, or was this acceptance of the defendant as a subscriber and partner in the terms of the defendant's offer? 3rd. They had allotted but 36,000 shares, whereas by the prospectus it was admitted that their capital was to be raised by the issue of 40,000 shares, and the defendant's offer was to take 50 shares out of the 40,000 to be created; and it would appear to be the duty of the committee not to make any allotment till they made the whole. 4th. In point of fact the scheme had been abandoned, and that without going before Parliament. That abandonment was actually before the allotment, as was proved by the preparatory steps towards that object. According to Neckels v. Crosby (3 B. & C. 814), as the scheme had been abandoned, these plaintiffs could have no right to recover the money agreed to be subscribed. The same principle had been recognized in the case lately tried in the Exchequer. (Walstab v. Spottiswoode.) [PATTERSON, J.—Had you a plea to meet the state of facts at the time? The being ready and willing to perform the plaintiffs' part of the contract might mean that they were so ready when the deposits should be paid up.] That question had not been submitted to the jury. The main question was the reasonableness of the time taken up in the allotment. [PATTERSON, J.—Upon the issue of their being ready and willing to allot you the shares, you should have insisted on that issue being found for you. I cannot understand how you suffered that issue to be found against you.] 5th. There was a variance between the contract as stated and the contract really proved. The actual consideration stated was, that there should be 40,000 shares issued, and that the company should go to Parliament for their bill. This should have been alleged in the declaration and the contract set out correctly. The letter of application was in these terms: "That the defendant would accept a certain number of shares, and would pay the deposit on them when required so to do." The plaintiffs had no right to reject the less convenient phrase and insert the terms "pay the deposits upon the 20th December." [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—What says the letter of allotment upon that point?] That letter announces the fact of the shares being allotted to defendant, and requires payment on the 20th December. That letter, however, would not, in law, affect or alter the contract or its terms, as stated in the prospectus. 6th. Admitting the plaintiff had any title to recover any thing at all, the verdict was excessive, being for the whole deposit, 105l. whereas the plaintiffs' estimate of damage was only to the extent of 6l. This, therefore, was all they could recover, if they could recover at all. 7th. The learned judge misdirected the jury upon the only question left to them. The 13th of October was the day of application for shares; the allotment did not take place till the 15th December following. Upon the 30th of October there had been a resolution come to, by which the directors were to be at liberty to absorb all the shares themselves. On the 1st December, in consequence of some alarm or panic, a resolution was passed not to incur further expense in the engineering department of the railway line, but on the 15th of December they proceeded to allot the shares. On the 17th they proceeded to take the opinion of counsel as to the liability of the allottees. In fact, that allotment, at so late an hour, had been devised merely as a pretext to give the managing directors, or committee, a colour for instituting an action to recover back the expenses incurred in the project. The learned judge, Mr. Baron Rolfe, had told the jury that he did not see that two months was an unreasonable time to occupy in allotting 40,000 shares. That might be true as a general proposition, but the question the learned judge should have submitted was whether, under all the circumstances of the project, it was proper and reasonable to have allotted all the shares upon the 15th of December? There had been enough of evidence adduced to shew that had there not been circumstances of an alarming nature disclosed with respect to the state of the railway share-market, they had no intention to make any such allotment, but that the shares on hand would all have been appropriated by the provisional directors themselves; and these disclosures should not have been withheld from the jury in the learned judge's charge to them. Finally, the judgment in this case should be arrested, upon the ground that the direction contained no averment that the provisional directors had allotted the 40,000 shares.

The Court granted the rule upon all these grounds. Rule nisi.

LEWIS v. SAMUEL.

Money paid—Attorney—Agreement to charge only the money out of pocket.

An attorney agreed to conduct a criminal prosecution, and not to charge his client "full costs, except the money out of pocket." Held, on the jury finding that the prosecution had failed in consequence of the negligence of the attorney, that he was not entitled to recover

The money out of pocket as money paid to the defendant's use.

WATSON, Q. C., moved for a rule to show cause why no damages in this case, in which a verdict had passed in the plaintiff with 38l. damages, should not be increased by a sum of 106l. The defendant employed a plaintiff to prefer and conduct a prosecution for perjury against a person who had been a witness in a case in which the defendant had been interested. The plaintiff agreed to conduct the prosecution for the costs out of pocket, and gave a memorandum to the defendant in the words that follow: "Mr. Lyon Samuel, Yourself, and The Queen v. Isaacs, I hereby undertake not to charge you full costs in this indictment, except the money out of pocket. Yours, &c." The prosecution failed, and, as the defendant thought that the failure had been caused by the negligence of the plaintiff, he refused to pay the money out of pocket. The plaintiff brought his action for the money out of pocket, and sought to recover it as money paid. The jury found that the prosecution had failed through the negligence of the plaintiff, and the learned judge before whom the case was tried held that to be an answer to the plaintiff's claim, giving leave to move to increase the damages by the amount of the money out of pocket. The ruling was wrong, or though the negligence might be ground of a cross-action, in an answer to a demand for work and labour, it was not an answer to a claim for money paid. (Jones v. Manning, 1 M. & W. 833.)

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—This motion proceeds on the assumption that there is a difference between money and money's worth. The defendant asked the plaintiff to prosecute the man; and the plaintiff did not, that is, he omitted to do that for which the defendant had promised to pay. All attorneys' bills have items that would answer the description "money paid."

PATTON, J.—I cannot see how money thus expended can be called money paid to the use of the defendant. If this claim could be enforced, an attorney who had chosen to withdraw all the witnesses, or to abandon the case, at the moment of the trial, would be entitled to claim the money out of pocket.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If a coachmaker were to agree to build me a carriage for the money out of pocket only, and were to send me one that would not go, would he be entitled to the money out of pocket?

Rule refused.

WILLIAMS v. FREDERICKS.
Damages by game—Rabbits—Immaterial issues—Agreement as to incorporeal hereditament.

CHILTON, Q. C., moved for a rule for judgment non obstante veredicto, upon an issue found for the defendant. This was an action upon an agreement between the plaintiff, as lessee of lands, and the defendant, as tenant of a house, by which the plaintiff gave the defendant leave to sport over certain lands, the defendant undertaking to make compensation for the damage done by the game; the amount to be ascertained by two referees to be appointed, one by each party, upon notice of damage done. It appeared, that under this agreement, the defendant had occupied the house and sported over the lands during 1843 and 1844. Damage was done by game. The plaintiff gave notice of damage done, but the defendant appointed no referee. In 1846, the plaintiff appointed a referee, who proceeded, ex parte, to assess the damage for 1843 at 60l., and for 1844 at 48l.; but the defendant had paid nothing. These facts were stated in the declaration, various issues were taken, all which were found for the plaintiff but the 8th, which was, that notice of the appointment of the referee by the plaintiff was not given within a reasonable time to the defendant. This was found for the defendant. The jury assessed the damages at 106l. The motion was now made upon the ground that all that had been done was ex abundante cautela, and that no notice of the appointment was necessary, and the issue found for the defendant was therefore immaterial.

V. Williams, for the defendant, also moved for a cross rule, in arrest of judgment, or for a new trial. 1. Because the agreement, being as to an incorporeal hereditament, was void, not being stated to have been under seal. (Bird v. Hippinson, 2 A. & E. 696.) The suggestion there thrown out about the enjoyment under it, meant only that use and occupation might be, not that possession under such an agreement would make it valid. 2. That the contract was to pay the damages, to be ascertained by referees appointed in a particular method; and that if the defendant refused to appoint a referee, the action should have been against him for that breach, and not in the present form. There is also ground for a new trial, as no evidence was given to distinguish the damage done by hares, or other game, and rabbits, which are not given.

The Court granted both rules, Lord DENMAN, C. J., intimating, however, his strong opinion that the case ought to be settled between the parties.

Rules granted.

FOSTER v. BANK OF ENGLAND.

A transfer of stock at the Bank of England is valid at least against the transferor, although the transfer is not underwritten by the transferee, to show that he accepts the stock.

SHAW, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict for defendant, and pursuant to leave reserved. It was an action on the case against the Bank of England for not paying dividends upon certain stock claimed by the plaintiff. It appeared that on January 23rd, 1841, 373l. 19s. 6d. was standing in the plaintiff's name in the Bank books, but that on the following day it was transferred, and as such the jury found for the plaintiff. There was no doubt she had been defrauded by one Ozley, and it was contended that the transfer was void, because the provisions of 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 13, had not been complied with. The Statute requires that no transfer shall be made except in the form specified, and that mentions that the transfer must be underwritten by the transferee. (Davis v. Bank of England, 2 Bing. 393; Coles v. Bank of England, 10 A. & E. 437; Gade's case, 2 Leach. 732.)

DENMAN, C. J.—I am of opinion that this transfer is valid. At first it appears that the Act states that acceptance is essential, but it is impossible to suppose that this could have been intended, for no person absent from London could become a purchaser of stock, and many things might occur to prevent a person from coming. Then looking more narrowly at the words of the Act, it will appear that this expressed construction is not the true one. Transfer properly refers to the transferor, and then the words as to acceptance by the transferee are merely directory, and the case in Leach is also an authority, for if no transfer would be valid without the acceptance, then he could not have been convicted of forgery.

PATTON, J.—This is not a question of the right of the transferee against the Bank—which might make some difference—but whether the transferor can say that his transfer is void, although he has received the purchase-money. I agree that this cannot be the meaning of the Statute, and in practice the acceptance is rarely made.

WILLIAMS, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

Rule refused.

DOE dem. MERRINGTON and DALY v. DALY.
Can a husband maintain an ejectment against his wife?

BRAMWELL moved for a new trial. The lessor of the plaintiff, in the only demise found against the defendant, was the husband of the defendant, and it was submitted that, as in law a husband could not maintain an action for a tort against his wife, so he could not bring ejectment, with intervention of John Doe making no difference. Or, at any rate, the judgment could not be in the usual form, and the Court could interfere.

Rule granted—not to go into the New Trial paper.

DOE dem. JACOB v. PHILIPS.
Statute of Limitations—Presumption of surrender.
8 & 9 Vict. c. 112.

GURNEY, Q. C. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff in this case. The title through which the lessor of the plaintiff claimed was an outstanding lease, granted in 1786, in respect of which there was no possession subsequent to 1787, when it was assigned to one Holyhead. Possession was enjoyed by the cestui que trusts, but this claim should have been made within five years of the passing of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. Nepes v. Doe dem. Knight (3 M. & W. 594) & Doe v. Williams, were cited. 2. The learned judge should have directed the jury that the term must be presumed to have been surrendered. The property was dealt with inconsistently with the existence of the term. 3. The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, as to unexpired terms, would operate here, and prevent the lessor of the plaintiff recovering possession, although he may recover nominal damages for the trespass. There is no provision in that Act for actions then pending.

Rule granted.

PARNELL v. SMITH.
Friendly Societies' Acts, 33 G. 3, c. 54, & 59 G. 3, c. 128.—Action by trustee of dissolved society.

BULL, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, pursuant to leave reserved. The plaintiff was surviving trustee of a certain friendly society, and brought an action for money had and received against the defendants, who, as stewards of the society, had, in pursuance of a vote passed by all the members, drawn the residue of the funds out of the Bank, and distributed it among the members. The verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 179l. 11s. 3d. The grounds of this motion were: 1. That the plaintiff had no right to sue, because the rules, as altered in 1823, had not been enrolled under the 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, as was necessary, but under 59 Geo. 3, c. 128, which did not apply. (Parnell v. Smith, 6 L.T. 315.) 2. There was no evidence of the plaintiff's appointment as trustee. In the enrolment under 59 Geo. 3, it was mentioned that he was appointed trustee, but he did not claim under that statute. Battye v. Townrow (4 Camp. 6) was cited. 3. Money had and received will not lie by the trustee against the stewards, 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 8. 4. The money was lawfully divided by a vote of all the members. 54 Geo. 3, ss. 8, 13. 5. The proper evidence of the enrolment was not produced.

6. He also moved, in arrest of judgment, that the declaration did not shew him to be trustee, according to the statute, but merely stated generally that he was trustee. (Davidson v. Bower, 2 D. N.S. 115.)

OLDFIELD v. FLEMING.

Several pleas.

The Court refused to allow a plea denying the making of a cheque in addition to a plea of illegal consideration, although it was sworn that the defendant's object was to avail himself of the invalidity of the cheque under the Stamp Laws, as not being drawn within the requisite distance of the place it purported to be drawn. A judge at chambers had previously refused to allow the plea.

M. Smith moved for a rule nisi for leave to add a plea, denying the making of the cheque. Mr. Justice Coleridge at chambers had allowed a plea of fraud and covin, and also that the cheque was given for money lent at play, but had refused to allow the plea now sought to be added. An affidavit stated that the object of the plea was to show that the cheque was invalid under the Stamp Act.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—The learned judge has exercised his discretion, and we see no reason for interfering.

DOE dem. CROSS v. CROSS.

An instrument operating inter vivos may also operate as a will, if it contains words of disposition, as a will.

Therefore, where a soldier abroad, being entitled to property under his father, sent home a document, purporting to be a power of attorney to his mother, to receive the rents during his life, and in the event of his death before his return, he thereby assigned and declared her to be the sole owner thereof during her life; and if further contained words negativing any intention to part with his power over the property during his life. Held, that by his death before his return, this operated as a devise to the mother.

KEATING moved to set aside the verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff, and to enter it for the defendant. The lessor of the plaintiff was the widow of one Cross, who had died intestate, and she now claimed through a will of the eldest son, Peter Cross. The defendant was the second son, and was entitled, if the document was not a will. It was a power of attorney executed in India, and duly attested by two witnesses, by which Peter Cross empowered his mother, as his attorney, to receive the rents and apply them to her own use during his life, and until his return; and if he died abroad he assigned and declared her to be the sole owner during her life. At the same time he negatively expressed any intention of giving up his right over it during his life. It was now submitted that this was no will, because it clearly operated as a deed inter vivos, and could not also be a will. (Attorney-General v. Jones, 3 Pridg. 368.)

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—We do not want any case upon this point. Here are clear words of disposition of property in case of death, and we can see no reason, or find no authority, whatever, to say that this is not a will because it also operates inter vivos.

Railway—Solicitor's bill.

Is an attorney who acts as a local solicitor to a railway, receiving also a commission for shares, that he promises to be taken, bound to deliver a signed bill of two claims to commission, and for non-professional disbursements?

TALFOURD, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi for setting aside the verdict for the defendants on the second and third issues. The question was, whether an attorney who acts as local solicitor, and also as local agent and shareholder for a railway company, can recover the amount of his commission and non-professional disbursements, without delivering a signed bill, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37. THOMPSON v. PIGOTT AND OTHERS.

Trespass—Agreement to assign lease and fixtures—Damages.

Trespass, for seizing goods, chattels, fixtures, and effects. Pleas: 1, not guilty; 2, not possessed; 3, that the goods, &c. were not the property of the plaintiff.

It appeared, at the trial before Lord Denman, that the plaintiff had discounted a bill for a bankrupt of the name of Smith, and received from him a written security in the following form:—"In consideration of Mr. Thompson discounting a bill, &c. I have this day deposited with him, as a collateral security, the lease of my house and premises, situate, &c. and I have assigned the whole of the fixtures, as per inventory, in and about the house in question, &c.; and if the said bill shall remain unpaid for the space of seven days, I agree to execute a mortgage of all my estate and interest in and to the said lease, together with the several fixtures, &c., such lease and fixtures to be sold by auction, &c.; but if Mr. T. should wish to sell the fixtures on the premises, I authorize him to do so, without subjecting himself to an action." That instrument was dated in September 1843; the bill was dishonoured at maturity; and in March 1844 a fiat issued against Smith. The defendants, the assignees of Smith, in May following directed an auctioneer to take down the fixtures and sell them, which was done. The value of the fixtures, as attached to the house, was 80*l.*, but when detached, only 36*l.* A verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 80*l.*

Martin, Q.C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, on the ground that, according to the proper construction of the memorandum, the lease and fixtures could not be separate; that the memorandum did not operate as an immediate assignment of the fixtures, but that both lease and fixtures were to be comprised in the mortgage; and that, therefore, they were not the property of the plaintiff. Secondly, to reduce the damages to 36*l.* on the ground that, if the action could be maintained at all, the amount of damages was the value of the fixtures, when detached from the house.

At the trial before the Lord Chief Baron at the last Hereford Assizes, it appeared that the plaintiff had paid a sum of 3*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* property-tax, and that the defendant had distrained for the full amount of rent due, without deducting for that sum. Verdict for defendant.

Huddleston moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the plaintiff on the ground that by stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, the landlord was bound to deduct the property-tax from the rent, and that the landlord had no right to distrain for more than the rent, minus the property-tax.

BLAGG v. GIBSON.

Evidence under never indebted and payment.

In an action for money had and received to recover the balance of a banking account: Held, that the bankers could not, under pleas of never indebted and payment, avail themselves of a defence that they had discounted a bill drawn by the plaintiff, and dishonoured by the acceptor at maturity.

Debt for money had and received, and on an account stated. Pleas, except as to part, 1st. never indebted. 2nd. Payment, and as to that part payment into Court. At the trial at the last assizes for Hertford, before Lord Denman, it appeared that the defendants were bankers, and that the plaintiff had had an account with them; the balance of which account he sought to recover in this action. The bankers had been in the habit of discounting bills for the plaintiff, and debiting his account with the amounts, as funds came in to meet them. On one occasion the defendants had discounted a bill drawn by the plaintiff and accepted by one Penzon, and had handed the proceeds to Penzon. That bill became due on the 16th May, 1844, and was dishonoured; but the plaintiff's account was not debited with the amount until the 31st December. The last item in the pass-book was in June; and an entry was made in pencil, stating a balance of 2*l.*; but when that was delivered to the plaintiff it was accompanied with a memorandum, informing him that that balance was subject to Penzon's bill. The plaintiff drew upon the defendants for the 2*l.*; but the defendants refused to pay that amount, claiming to deduct the amount of Penzon's bill; and the question was, whether they could avail themselves of that defence under either of the pleas, "never indebted" or "payment." Verdict for the plaintiff.

Shee, Serjt., moved to set aside that verdict, and to enter it for the defendant upon those issues, pursuant to leave reserved.

By the COURT.—The discounting of Penzon's bill is clearly not a payment; nor can it, since the new rules, be given in evidence under "never indebted." It is a question of liability on a bill of exchange; or is rather the subject of a set-off for money lent.

MILLARD P. BROOKS.

Evidence of contract—Advertisement.

An advertisement in a Colonial newspaper, announcing the time at which a vessel would sail for England, and specifying the accommodation provided for passengers, held to be evidence of the terms of the contract between the owner of the vessel and a passenger.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict given in this case should not be set aside, and a new trial granted, on the ground of misdirection. This was an action on a contract to carry the plaintiff and his wife from New South Wales to this country. The defendant was a shipowner, and the contract, if any, was made by his captain, who commanded the Achilles, a vessel belonging to the defendant. The captain had inserted in the newspaper of the colony an advertisement, in which it was stated that the vessel would sail in December, 1842, and a certain supply of food was also guaranteed to steerage passengers. The plaintiff had agreed to come to England by this vessel. The vessel did not sail till March, 1843, and the plaintiff brought his action, complaining first of the delay, and next of the food supplied, both as to quantity and quality. As to this latter complaint the jury had negatived it, but had found a verdict for the plaintiff on the other ground. The learned judge had told the jury that the advertisement was a contract, and that was the misdirection complained of.

The Court thought that the advertisement, when adopted by the parties as it appeared to have been, did amount to a contract, and therefore refused the rule.

STANDEN v. CHRISTMAS.

Breach of contract to keep in a tenant-like manner—Use and occupation—Action by assignee of reversion.

Assumpsit by the assignee of the reversion. The first count was on a special contract to keep the interior of the premises in repair; the 2nd on a contract to keep in a tenant-like manner; and the 3rd, for use and occupation; tried at Lewes before Alderson, B. who directed a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the statute 37 Hen. 8, c. 34, does not apply to cases where the lease is not by indenture.

Borill now moved for a rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The case relied upon at the trial was Buckworth v. Simpson (5 Tyr. 344); but that only decides that where there are special terms, the statute will not apply unless the lease is by indenture. If the terms are such only as arise from the relation of landlord and tenant, there the assignee may sue, though there be no indenture. For rent he may sue at common law, independently of the statute. (1 Chitt. on Pleadings, 19; Vyryan v. Arthur, 1 B. & C. 410; Hall v. Burgess, 5 B. & C. 332; Glover v. Cope, 1 Salk. 185; 3 Sw.; Isherwood v. Oldknow, 3 M. & S. 382.) He moved also on the ground that the learned judge had incorrectly told the jury that there was no evidence that the property was copyhold; or that the plaintiff was assignee of the reversion. WORTH v. GRESHAM AND ANOTHER.

Assumpsit for work and labour—Liability of provisional committee-men of a projected railway company.

This was an action of assumpsit for work and labour. The cause was tried at York, before Mr. Justice Coleridge, when it appeared that the plaintiffs were surveyors and engineers at Sheffield, and the work done was done by them upon a railroad intended to unite Leeds and Lincoln, and called the Leeds, Lincolnshire, and Midland Junction Railway. The defendants were provisional directors of the company. Two persons named Chambers and Webster were the attorneys residing at Sheffield, and they entered into the project to form this railway, and employed the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, before entering upon the work, required a guarantee from them to the amount of 100*l.* until the business of the company should be transferred to the hands of a managing committee. Upon the 15th of October the certificate of the provisional registration under 7 and 8 Vict., cap. 110, was drawn up by the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, and in that certificate it was recited that the two attorneys were the promoters of the scheme. On October 18, the guarantee asked for by the plaintiffs was given to them by Webster and Chambers. This guarantee was to cease on the scheme being transferred to the provisional committee of management. On the 26th of October, Gresham wrote to Webster and Chambers, requesting that shares in this railroad should be allotted to him, and further requesting that he might be appointed one of the members of the provisional committee. These requests were complied with, and on the 28th of the same month, Copeland (the other defendant) was likewise made an allottee of shares and a provisional committee-man. On the 3rd of November, a return was made to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies of the names of the members of the provisional committee, and this return included the names of the two defendants. On the 10th of November the scheme of the company was virtually given up. The work for which the plaintiff claimed compensation was begun on the 23rd of October, and did not conclude till the 2nd of November. Application had been made for 7,000 shares, but these were not in fact allotted until after the project had in substance been given up, when the allotment was made for the purpose of receiving from the applicants subscriptions to meet the expenses which had been incurred. No money, however, had been obtained upon the allotments. No objection was made to the work or the charges of the plaintiff. These facts having been proved, the Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

Dundas, Q.C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why that verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered, or a new trial had. The first question was, whether the whole demand could be recovered from Messrs. Webster and Chambers, or only the sum of 100*l.* upon the guarantee which they had given, because if they were liable for the whole amount on the ground that the business had not been transferred to the committee of management, then the action could not be maintained. At the trial the guarantee was read, and Mr. Webster was called as a witness. There was no doubt that the guarantee was to be void on the business of the railway being transferred to the committee of management. The question, therefore, was, whether the business had been so transferred. There was no doubt that a meeting of the committee was called, but only one gentleman attended, and there was nothing to shew that the management had ever passed out of the hands of Messrs. Webster and Chapman. Mr. Justice Coleridge told the jury that both parties looked to the formation of a committee of management, and to the transfer of the business to that committee; that the liability of Messrs. Chapman and Webster was subject to the change to be effected by the formation of that committee; that the committee had been formed, and it was clear took up all existing liabilities; and that, in his opinion, they were bound to make compensation for such services as were necessary for the maintenance and existence of the scheme itself; that the services of the plaintiff were of that kind, and that, consequently, there ought to be a verdict for the plaintiffs. This was clearly a misdirection; as, in fact, a transfer of the business of the company, in the manner in which the guarantee had contemplated it, had never taken place. The liability, therefore, remained with the Messrs. Chapman and Webster, and had not become attached to the members of the provisional committee.

DAY v. SHARP.

Retirement of partner—Action by retired partner for services—Projected railway company.

The secretary of a railway company, who had previously been a member of the provisional committee: Held, entitled to maintain an action for his services as secretary against another committee-man, who having become so whilst the plaintiff was a member of the committee, continued to act after the plaintiff had been to his knowledge appointed secretary, and attended meetings at which the plaintiff had acted in that capacity.

This was an action for work and labour, and money paid, tried at York, before Mr. Justice Coleridge, when it appeared that in the autumn of last year a project was started for a railway company, to be called the East-Riding Junction Railway. The company did not exist for more than two months. The defendant had no doubt been one of the committee-men of the company, but the plaintiff had likewise been so, and at an earlier period of the existence of the company. The defendant had become a committee-man on the 10th of October, the plaintiff being so at that time, and having been so for some days before. Their names were afterwards advertised together in that character. On the 16th of October, it was resolved that a secretary should be appointed, and the plaintiff was appointed to that office. This action was for service performed and money expended by the plaintiff on behalf of the company, and in furtherance of the scheme from the time when the plaintiff was appointed secretary to the company up to the 30th of November, when the company came to an end. Two prospectuses were issued after the plaintiff had been appointed secretary; and in neither of them was his name mentioned as a committee-man, but it was mentioned as secretary. These prospectuses were sent in the usual manner to the defendant as one of the committee-men; but he was not present when the appointment took place, though there seemed no doubt that he had been present at some meeting of the committee after that appointment had been made. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Baines, Q.C. now moved for a rule to show cause why a nonsuit should not be entered. He submitted that this action was not maintainable. The plaintiff was a shareholder, and the question was, whether such a person—one who had been so engaged in an undertaking of this kind—could at his pleasure retire from it so as to divest himself of the character of partner, and enable himself to sue those who had been his partners for money paid and for work done for the partnership. Citing Holmes v. Higgins (1 B. & C. 74); Monypenny v. Harland (1 Car. & P. 352); Kidwelly Canal Company v. Raby (6 Price, 93).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It seems to me that this is the case of several partners agreeing with one among their number that he should cease to hold that character, and should assume another. [Baines.—There was no evidence of the assent of all the partners.] Then might arise the question, whether those who made the arrangement had authority to bind such of their partners as were absent; but it does not appear that such a question can arise here. The circumstances of the case do not permit it. It appears to me very sufficiently proved that the defendant had consented to this new arrangement. That fact completely distinguishes this case from those which have been referred to, and prevents it from falling within the rule as to the general liabilities of partners.

PATTESON, J.—I think that the defendant is estopped by his own acts. The plaintiff's name was left out of the prospectus as a committee-man, and inserted as a secretary. The defendant continued a committee-man, knew of the alteration, and attended meetings after it had been made.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COLERIDGE, J.—The view now taken by the Court, is that which I took at the trial. I never thought that the question of partnership liability arose. I thought that the defendant had bound himself by his own acts. Rule refused.

LYOUD HARRISON.

Money paid in the service of a projected railway—Liability of co-projector.

This was an action for money expended in the business of a projected railway. The plaintiff and defendant were both attorneys, and the defendant had become committee-man of the "London Union Railway," the object of which was to unite the Great Western with the Birmingham Railway. This scheme was abandoned by its projectors, as it appeared that the Great Western and Birmingham Railway Companies had determined to unite their means and exertions to effect the same object, but the scheme had been in existence from the middle of October to the month of December last. The plaintiff had acted as the attorney and solicitor of the company, and had superintended much of its business, and had made payments on account of the company to some considerable extent. The cause was tried before Mr. Justice Coleridge at the sittings in the present Term, when the defence set up was that the plaintiff was himself the concoctor of the scheme, and had induced several persons to become members of the provisional committee, by giving them an indemnity from the time of their entering office up to the time when deposits should be paid upon the shares. The defendant further set up an arrangement between all the directors and the plaintiff, by which the thirty-nine directors subscribed 10l. each, and the plaintiff had accepted it in payment of his claim. It did not appear that the plaintiff had given the defendant any indemnity, because, as he insisted, the defendant had been the real projector of the company, and he (the plaintiff) was entitled to recover from him as from any ordinary director, compensation for work and labour performed for the company. The learned Judge expressed his opinion that this action could not be maintained by the one against the other of them; and the jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

Shee, Serjt. now moved for a rule to show cause why this verdict should not be set aside and a new trial granted, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence.

LORD DENMAN, C.J. did not think that there were any grounds to disturb the verdict. This was clearly not money paid to the use of the defendant.

PATTESON, J.—This is purely a question of credit, and there is abundant evidence that credit was not given to defendant. If the promoters of railway schemes will incur liabilities in order to procure the names of respectable persons to appear on their provisional committees, they must prepare themselves to endure the consequences of their own act.

DAVIS G. GIBBER.

"An Unlawful dog," within stat. 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 14. If there be evidence that a dog is brought into the Forest of Dean for the purpose of taking or destroying deer, &c. the dog is an "unlawful dog" within the meaning of stat. 10, Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 14, and if not delivered up, may be shot by the gamekeepers whilst going along a public highway which passes through the forest.

Trespass for killing a dog.

Plea, the general issue by statute.

At the trial before Pollock, C.B. at the last Gloucester assizes, a verdict was found for the defendant.

Godson, Q.C. on the 18th inst. moved for a rule to show cause why that verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial granted on the ground of misdirection. It appeared that the plaintiff and a friend were walking in the Forest of Dean, accompanied by a dog, when a noise of dogs was heard not far from them, and the plaintiff's dog, hearing the others give cry, opened too, but was immediately checked and brought back by his master. Some little time afterwards, and whilst the plaintiff and his friend had the dog behind them, the gamekeepers came up and demanded that the dog should be delivered up to them. The plaintiff refused, and the gamekeepers then shot it. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the dog, and the case turned upon the provisions of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 14, which thus described the powers to be enjoyed and exercised by the gamekeepers, "and also to take, seize, and destroy all unlawful dogs, nets, guns, and engines used for the purpose of taking or destroying deer, beasts, or birds of chase or warren, or other game or fish." Here the dog was not used for that purpose; there was no evidence to that effect. The highway on which those parties were walking ran through the forest, and was certainly within its boundaries, but it was a public highway, and was a place where many private individuals had residences, and where all the public were entitled to walk. Under these circumstances it was submitted that the Lord Chief Baron ought to have told the jury that the gamekeepers had no right to kill the dog, and his not having done so was a misdirection.

Cases cited:—Vere v. Lord Cawdor (11 East, 568); Janson v. Brown (1 Camp. 41.) Cur. adv. vult.

LORD DENMAN, C.J. now delivered judgment.—This was a case, which Mr. Godson moved a few days since, and in which it was supposed that the Lord Chief Baron had misdirected the jury. This was an action for killing a dog. The questions were, whether the dog was, within the meaning of the statute for the protection of game in the Forest of Dean, "an unlawful dog;" and whether the dog was in the forest for the purpose of killing game. The Lord Chief Baron states, that the evidence shewed clearly that the dog was brought into the forest by persons engaged in poaching, and had been set on the deer. There was poaching at the same time in the same forest by other parties, but it was not proved that they and the plaintiff were connected together. Still they were there near each other. There is no doubt about the facts, and the Court think, under the circumstances, the dog must be treated as an unlawful dog, used for the purposes prohibited by the statute. There will, therefore, be no rule. Rule refused.

EADES V. BOOTH.

Infant plaintiff—Petition to appoint next friend—Practice.

An infant plaintiff being only twenty months old, the Court appointed a next friend upon a petition prepared by the father, and signed by the father with the infant's name thus:—"A B, by me, her father, and next friend, C D."

Spinkes moved the Court to appoint a next friend to the infant plaintiff, she being only twenty months old. The only difficulty was that the infant was too young even to present a petition, for the appointment of her next friend, according to the usual practice; but the father of the infant had prepared a petition, stating the circumstances; and had signed it with the name of the infant in this form:—"A B, by me, her father and next friend, C D." Rule absolute.

DAVIS V. PALK.

Trespass—Denial of possession—Judgment non obstante verdicto.

Chilton, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi to enter judgment for the plaintiff non obstante verdicto, for the defendant on the second issue, or for a new trial. It was trespass for entering a salt mill and expelling plaintiff therefrom, with a writ de bonis appropriatis for salt. The pleas purported to answer the whole, but the second plea did not traverse the possession of the salt. The issue, therefore, found for the defendant, were immaterial. [PATTERSON, J.—Is it not a discontinuance?] According to the recent cases, plaintiff is entitled to judgment non obstante if other material issues are found for him. (Negelen v. Mitchell, 7 M. & W. 612, overruling Phummer v. Lea, 2 M. & W.) Evidence was admitted to shew that the defendant was equitably entitled to the premises which was not admissible, as the plaintiff was actually possessed. Proof of undivided possession is not necessary. (Whittington v. Bocall, 5 Q. B. 139; Mason v. Farnell, 12 M. & W. 674.) A fi. fa. was also admitted as evidence without proof of the judgment, although the plaintiff was no party to the judgment. A memorandum of the deposit of title-deeds, attested by a witness, was admitted without the attesting witness, nor was it stamped. Rule nisi.

GINGELL V. GIFFORD.

Trespass—Estoppel by admission.

In trespass quare clausum, the defendant pleaded liberum tenementum, and proved a conveyance from A, who had entered into an agreement to purchase from the plaintiff, which, however, had never been performed:—Held, that on proof that the plaintiff had, subsequently to the agreement and conveyance, spoken of himself as tenant to A, the jury were justified in finding the verdict for the defendant.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi for a new trial, for misdirection and for the verdict being against evidence. It was an action of trespass quare clausum. Plea, not guilty, not possessed; and as to part, liberum tenementum. New assignment and traverse. It appeared in evidence that the plaintiff had entered into an agreement to sell the premises to a Miss Couchman, but before conveyance executed, Miss Couchman conveyed to the defendant. After the agreement, the plaintiff frequently spoke of himself as tenant to Miss Couchman, and the jury had found for the defendant.

The Court refused to disturb the verdict.

MALLEY V. PUMFREY AND WIFE.

The voluntary relinquishment of a charge of assault, upon which the plaintiff was arrested, is not such evidence of the want of reasonable and probable cause, that the Court will set aside a nonsuit where the judge at the trial has ruled that there was not absence of reasonable and probable cause.

Pigott moved to set aside a nonsuit. It was an action for false imprisonment, in consequence of a charge of assault made by the female defendant. It appeared that the plaintiff and one Bridges had gone to the public-house kept by the defendants; that some dispute took place; that Mrs. Pumfrey made a deposition before a magistrate, and the plaintiff was brought up upon a warrant issued thereon; but that at the hearing she had not proceeded with the charge, upon which the present action was brought. Mr. Baron Platt, before whom it was tried, held that this was not proof of the absence of reasonable and probable cause, and nonsuited the plaintiff. It was now submitted that the learned judge was wrong, according to Nicholson v. Coghill (4 B. & C. 21); Hamilton v. Reddell (Rose on Evidence, p. 406).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—In Nicholson v. Coghill (4 B. & C.) it was said to be a question for the jury. If it had been left to the jury, and they had found that there was reasonable and probable cause, they would have been justified. Then if the judge takes it upon himself to decide this, as according to the later cases he may, and he decides in the same way, is he not to be justified? I should have found here that there was reasonable and probable cause. Rule refused.

KIND V. EVERSHED.

Malicious Damage Act—Owner of premises—Reasonable cause for arrest.

M. Chambers, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the nonsuit. It was an action of false imprisonment, for causing the plaintiff to be arrested and taken before a police magistrate under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30. It appeared that the plaintiff, having built several houses at Brighton, occupied one, and while superintending some alterations under the advice of a surveyor, the defendant told him to desist, and on his refusal, a policeman was sent for, and the plaintiff was taken before the magistrate, who, however, dismissed the charge. At the trial, upon cross-examination, the son of the plaintiff stated that he had heard his father say that the house in question was mortgaged, and that the defendant was the attorney to the mortgagee. Upon this it was contended that the plaintiff was entitled to notice of action under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, ss. 24, 26, 27, 41, and the learned judge being of that opinion, he was nonsuited. This was wrong, for the plaintiff was within the proviso in the section, for he was acting under a reasonable belief of his right. At least it was a question for the jury when the magistrates had discharged the case on that very ground. Then the defendant was not the owner, or servant of the owner, entitled to interfere. The only question put to the jury was, whether the defendant acted bona fide; but to entitle him to notice, he ought to have had reasonable cause for his opinion, and this should have been put to the jury. (Hopkins v. Crow, 4 A. & E. 774; Cann v. Clipperton, 10 A. & E. 582.)

The Court granted the rule, but intimated that they did so principally because it was not shewn that the defendant was connected with the premises, and entitled to interfere. Rule nisi.

TUCKER V. CLARKSON.

Trover—Scrip certificates.

Shee, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter a nonsuit.

It was an action of trover for scrip certificates. It appeared that one Tyrrell, being allottee of certain shares, sold to the defendant, who sold them to one Hull. The jury, however, found that Hull was acting for the plaintiff. Hull paid the deposit, and obtained the certificates, which he handed to the defendant, and upon his refusal to give them to the plaintiff, his action was brought. It was contended that, as the scrip certificates were not in existence at the time of the contract of sale to the plaintiff through Hull, trover could not be maintained, but that the action should have been upon the contract for non-delivery.

DOR DEM. GROVES V. GROVES.

Limitation Act—Estoppel.

Wesby moved, pursuant to leave, to enter a nonsuit, the Court to draw inferences as a jury.

It appeared that one William Hart died in 1798, leaving his son, John Hart, then fifteen years of age, heir to the premises in question. In December, 1798, the widow, who was dowable, but never had dowry assigned to her, married the defendant, and after taking out administration, occupied the premises. The son, John Hart, lived there until 1805, when he came of age, and up to 1841. The defendant's name was painted upon the door, and the shop license was in his name. He also paid chief rent, and was rated to the poor's rates. In 1842, the defendant applied to the lessee of the plaintiff for 150l. as a loan, and then, by the advice of an attorney, John Hart executed the mortgage, under which the lessor of the plaintiff now claimed, but the defendant was no party to the deed.

Under these circumstances there was no title in the lessor of the plaintiff. The defendant's title was perfect by the effect of the Limitation Act. (Doe dem. Jukes v. Somers, 14 M. & W. 39; Scott v. Dixon, 3 Drur. & Warren.) There was no estoppel. (Lyon v. Reed, 13 M. & W.; Co. Litt. 352; Pickard v. Sears, 6 A. & E. 469.)

REG. V. JONES.

Poor-rates—Exemptions under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36—Religious Tract Society.

No society can be exempted from rates under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, unless its laws expressly and in terms prohibit any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money among any of its members.

Semble, that societies established for religious purposes (as the Tract Society) are not within the meaning of the Act.

This was an appeal under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, against the certificate given by Mr. Tidd Pratt, to exempt the Religious Tract Society's premises in Paternoster-row from poor-rates. The Sessions quashed the certificate, subject to the opinion of the Court.

Robinson, in support of the order of Sessions.—This society is not within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 2. The words of that section exempt "premises belonging to any society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively," provided such society "shall not, and by its rules may not, make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money unto or among any of its members." To comply with this statute, it is not sufficient that the rules do not direct a division, but they must expressly forbid and prohibit it. The rules of the Religious Tract Society do not do this. In fact some division of the profits is made, for the 4th rule allows subscribers to purchase at reduced prices, and clergymen collecting for the society receive half the amount of the collection in books. These are supposed to be for distribution, but they may be sold if the parties think proper. But even if the rules here are sufficient, yet the Religious Tract Society is not within any of the classes mentioned. It must come under the head "literary," or none at all. Can it be said, looking at its rules and avowed objects, as shown by all its reports, to be for literary purposes exclusively? Its object is to teach Christianity, to make men religious, to give them knowledge only in such a form as shall conduce to their salvation hereafter. Incidentally, literature may be encouraged, because this must be done through books; but this is an accidental means only, not the purpose for which it is instituted exclusively. They do not teach theology generally, but only limited sectarian notions, excluding the largest portion of literature, all ancient, and a great part of modern. Influencing the mind to a particular course is their object, not instruction generally. Even their books containing scientific knowledge are professedly written with religious views, and in a religious strain. The Anti-Corn-Law League, if it confined its exertions to printing and circulating publications, might claim exemption with equal right. On both these grounds, the exemption cannot be allowed.

Talford, Serjt.—The words "shall not" or "may not" cannot have the construction contended for, or the statute will be a dead letter. It must be taken with reference to the circumstances when it was passed. Its title and preamble show that it was intended to exempt literary and scientific societies, yet no society of this kind contains such a rule in express terms. It would be an insult to insert such a rule, as much as saying the trustees shall not steal the funds. Take the Literary Fund for example. It suffices, if the rules do not authorise any such distribution, and show that it would be directly against the objects of the society, and a breach of trust and duty so to apply the funds. The Court of Chancery would interfere just the same whether there was a written law against it or not. [WIGHTMAN, J.—You say that the affirmative laws as to the disposition of the funds are equivalent to an express prohibition.] Yes. Nor is there in fact any breach of the proviso; the rules pointed out do not authorise a division or bonus of money. They only give a species of commission. But as this can be remedied by the society passing an express law, the more important question is, whether the Religious Tract Society is within the statute. Is it to be said that religion, the highest source of poetry and all literature, and the subject of all that is most permanent and great in literature, is to exclude the society from the benefit of the statute? The publication of the society in almost every spoken tongue, the circulation of such works as "Pilgrim's Progress," "Butler," &c. is in every way conducive to literature; and the higher object they have in view is not to put them beneath the societies aiming at more inferior and limited ends. Could it be denied that a society instituted for the cultivation of taste, which should seek this end solely by selling cheap models and copies of works of art, would be within the words "for the purposes of the fine arts?" It is a monstrous thing to exclude religious literature from the character of literature. Would not a writer of these tracts be entitled to the benefits of the Literary Fund? Lord Bacon terms religion the greatest of all sciences.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It appears to me that there is no doubt that this does not comply with the terms of the statute. That expressly requires that the society shall not, and, by its rules, may not, make any dividend, &c. It is not enough that the rules do not permit any such division, but they must distinctly prohibit it. We are asked as to the other point, and although we give no decision upon it, yet I must say that I entertain very great doubts upon it. It is a forced construction of the words to say that it is a literary purpose, because religion, which it seeks to spread, is the highest of all species of literature. It may seem strange that such bodies should not be exempted, but it is still more odd that, if this argument be the correct one, literature should be put after science in the statute.

PATERSON, J.—I think the first objection is fatal. The words are express and distinct, and a prohibitory law is essential. As to the other question, as at present advised, I cannot think that the Religious Tract Society can be called instituted for literary purposes exclusively. Throughout its publications the object is to spread religious knowledge.

WILLIAMS, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred. Order of Sessions confirmed.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

ROBINSON V. WARD.—Rule nisi for setting aside verdict for plaintiff, and entering it for the defendant, on the ground that proof of a tender of 7l. "for rent" proved a tender of 7l. parcel of the moneys mentioned in a declaration, which contained counts for use and occupation, work and labour, money lent, money paid, and on an account stated.—Bramwell.

R. V. GREGORY.—Motion for judgment on the defendant, who stands convicted of a libel on the Duke of Brunswick. Postponed on the ground that judgment had not been signed.—Talford, 8.

PAGE V. HATCHETT.—Sir John Bayley moved to discharge the rule obtained by the defendants, the plaintiff agreeing to abandon so much of the second count as related to certain of the goods therein mentioned. The Court, in giving judgment upon an application for a new trial in this case, had said that there was to be no rule if the plaintiff would abandon the count in trover within 14 days. Upon that count there had been a demurrer to the replication, and the plaintiff had obtained judgment upon that demurrer, so that by abandoning that count altogether they would give up the costs of the demurrer, which was not, he supposed, the intention of the Court. They were willing to abandon the whole of the second count, except that part to which the demurrer applied. Rule nisi.

In the former case Peerson subsequently applied to the Court to order the affidavits to be filed at once; but Shaw, Serjt. objected, the course was not usual; and upon his undertaking that no others but those already sworn should be used, the Court refused the order.

MOUNTAIN V.—Bullock, Q. C. moved for a rule nisi for setting aside verdict, and entering a nonsuit, for trespass, for taking sheep. The plaintiff derived his title to the sheep by having purchased them on a given day from a person, to whom the defendant had agreed to sell them on the next day, at a price certain, if that person should then be willing to take them at this price; and that, 1st, the contract between the defendant and that third person was void by the Statute of Frauds. Sed, the defendant had the whole of the day following that of the sale to the plaintiff to avoid his contract with the plaintiff's vendor; and, 2nd, that the bargain could only be transferred by the consent of all three parties. Rule nisi.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Tuesday, April 21, 1846.

TOTCH V. STRAWBRIDGE.

A contract with B, for the support of A's illegitimate child. At the time of the contract, it was contemplated that it should continue for more than a year. It was, however, agreed that B should keep the child as long as A pleased, and should be paid monthly. Held that this was not a contract within the meaning of the phrase, "not to be performed within the space of one year," in the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds.

Semble—The statute relates only to actions brought to recover damages for the non-performance of executory contracts, and not to actions, brought to recover payment of a debt due in respect of an executed consideration. This was an action of indebitatus assumpsit, for the lodging and maintenance of, and for goods supplied to, a certain child, at the request of the defendant.

Plea, non assumpsit.

At the trial before Erie J. at the last summer assizes at Bristol, it appeared that the child was an illegitimate child of the defendant, which had been supported by the plaintiff under a parol agreement. The agreement was for the payment of a guinea a month by the defendant. At the time of entering upon the agreement, when the child was only a few months old, it was proposed that the plaintiff should take charge of it for a year certain, and it was then objected by the defendant, that as the child was so young, the proposed rate of payment would be more advantageous to the plaintiff during the first, than during any subsequent year, and that it would not be fair, unless the plaintiff would continue to keep the child upon the same terms after the expiration of the year. The plaintiff then agreed to keep the child as long as the defendant pleased.

Under these circumstances, it was objected that the contract was one "not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof," and therefore by 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4, required a note in writing. Erie J., upon this, consulted the plaintiff, reserving leave to move to enter a verdict for 15l. A rule having accordingly been obtained for that purpose, cause was now shown by

Manning, Serjt.—This is a case within the latter part of the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. It is similar to the cases in which it has been held, that a contract of service or apprenticeship to commence at a subsequent day, is within the clause, and must be in writing. (Snelling v. Lord Huntingfield, 1 Cr. M. & R. 20; Bracegirdle v. Hoald, 1 B. & A. 722.) There the agreement might have been determined by the death of the servant or apprentice, yet the law looked to the fact that the parties contemplated a service of more than a year. In this case the evidence shows that more than a year's duration was contemplated, because the objection is taken that the limit of one year would be disadvantageous to the defendant. Even where it is competent for the parties to set an end to the contract upon certain terms within the year, yet if by the whole tenor of the agreement the parties have in view some more distant period, the rule applies. (Birch v. Earl of Liverpool, 9 B. & C. 392; Boydell v. Drummond, 11 B. & C. 134; Peter v. Campbell, 5 K. 11; Wells v. Horton, 4 Bing. 46.) If the defendant had pleased that the child should be kept until it was twenty-one years of age, and then a claim had been made for payment, all the mischief would have been done which the statute was designed to prevent. [TINDAL, C.J.—This action is brought on an executed contract; an indebitatus assumpsit for work and labour, not a contract executory for which the statute was provided.] That difficulty does not press. For there is no implied contract, the child being illegitimate, and the statute excludes parol evidence of an actual contract where the agreement is not to be performed within the year. If I give a parol guarantee and goods are supplied and the contract executed, I am not liable. [CHESWELL, J.—There is not in that case a primary liability. There would be if you ordered goods to be delivered fifteen months hence, and accepted them when they were delivered.]

Wilde, Serjt., in support of the rule.—This is an executed contract under ordinary circumstances. The plaintiff has done all on his part; the defendant has acquiesced and has had the benefit. Indebitatus assumpsit will therefore lie. It is just the same case as if he had put his horse out to livery at a given sum per month. Would it in that case be contended that if the horse were kept for more than a year, the stable-keeper could not recover for its keep upon a quantum meruit? Further, even were this contract executory, it is not within the statute. The payments were made monthly, and there was nothing to hinder either party from dissolving it within a year. It has been held that part performance does not take a case out of the statute, but here there was a perfectly good performance every month. So a contingency is not within the statute, which does not extend to cases where the thing may be performed within the year. (Fenton v. Kibblers, 3 Burr. 1278; 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 143.) Not only was there the contingency of either party dissolving the contract, but even the child's life was but a contingency.

TINDAL, C.J.—This rule must be made absolute. In the first place, this is not an action within the scope of the Act at all. It is founded upon a by-gone consideration, viz. the nourishment and care afforded to the child by the plaintiff at the request of the defendant. There was evidence enough for the jury that the defendant assented that the child should be taken care of, and had made partial payments. I think, therefore, that he was entitled to recover in the action in the common form. The words of the statute are "No action shall be brought whereby to charge any person (inter alia), upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof;" meaning no action to recover damages for the non-performance of a contract. That is quite different from avoiding an action of this kind.

The object of the statute was to prevent fraudulent practices, which are commonly endeavoured to be upheld by perjury and subornation of perjury, which may be instanced by an imputed promise to serve for twenty years, or to enter into a partnership for life. Matters of this last kind, not strictly to be performed within a year, are protected by the solemnity of writing. The case now before the Court was sufficiently supported by the ordinary evidence of an executed consideration. In the next place, if an action on an executed consideration could ever be brought within the statute, this is not within its terms. The words "not to be performed within the space of one year," point out a contract not capable of being performed within a year. The rule to be extracted from Boydell v. Drummond is, that a case is within the statute where it is the understanding of the parties that it is not to be performed within the year. I see nothing in these terms necessarily to extend the agreement beyond the year. If a contract be made to serve for two years, that is within the statute; but a contract to serve without the limitation of any certain time is not within it.

COLTMAN, J.—I think that this case is not within the statute. It is a contract to sustain the child for successive months, and is subject to be defeated by the defendant. It therefore comes within the rule as to a contingency laid down in Peter v. Campbell, and never yet impugned. The other point it is not necessary for us to determine, or I might have had some difficulty; as even in the case of an executory consideration, it might be necessary to refer to the contract to make out the case.

CHESWELL, J.—I also am of opinion that this rule must be made absolute. I think that the evidence shows that the contract was never within the meaning of the words "not to be performed within a year," in the 4th section. The contract was really a contract from month to month, so long as both parties pleased.

ERLE, J.—Upon consideration, I think the verdict should be entered for the plaintiff. We must not allow the treaty which preceded the contract to operate against the contract. The contract ultimately was, that the arrangement should continue as long as the defendant should think proper. If so, it is clear that there is a contingency, and the statute does not apply. Rule absolute.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, April 17.
DORRIS, BAYLEY AND OTHERS v. FOSTER.—Byles, Serjt. (with him Ogilvie), moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter a nonsuit, or a verdict for the defendant. 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17; 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 2; and Doe dem. Lytton v. Goldwin (2 Q.B. 148), were referred to.

PIGGOTT v. EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY.—Shee, Serjt. (with him James), moved for a new trial, upon the ground of the improper reception of evidence, and that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule to show cause.

ELSTON v. GASCOWNE.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a new trial, upon the ground that the damages awarded were excessive. Cur. adv. vult.

SIGGARS v. PAINTER AND ANOTHER.—Talford, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Rule to show cause.

SKELTON v. ALCOCK.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and that evidence was improperly admitted. Smith v. Kelly (4 Rep. 349) was quoted. Rule to show cause.

CAVES v. JONES.—Dowling, Serjt. moved to enter a suggestion on the roll under 23 Geo. 2, c. 30, ss. 5, 7. Rule to show cause.

HUGHES v. ABE.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial, upon the ground of the improper reception of evidence. Rule to show cause.

BIRKHONTS v. LLOYD AND OTHERS.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial, upon the ground of a misdirection. Rule refused.

FITCH v. CUTTS.—Shee, Serjt. (with him Marsh) moved for a new trial, upon the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence. Partridge v. Simmons (5 B. & A. 383); and Bird v. Boulter (4 B. & A. 443) were referred to. Cur. adv. vult.

DORRIS, GAIKSFORD AND OTHERS v. STONE.—Channell, Serjt. (with him Fitzherbert) moved, pursuant to leave reserved, for a new trial, unless the plaintiff would consent that the verdict, as to part, should be entered for the defendant. He quoted Slattery v. Pooley (6 M. & W. 674); Howard v. Smith (3 Man. & G. 254); Roe dem. Trinitown v. Kemmis (9 Clk. & Fin. 784); Carpenter v. Buller (8 M. & W. 309.). Cur. adv. vult.

BOYCE v. CHAPMAN AND ANOTHER.—Channell, Serjt. moved to set aside the judgment signed by the plaintiff, against Chapman, for irregularity. He referred to R. G. H. T. 4 Will. 4, 2; and Seaton v. Seale (3 Dowl. 537.). Rule to show cause.

HARRIS v. ROBINSON.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved to set aside the appearance entered for the defendant, and all subsequent proceedings, for irregularity. He mentioned R. G. H. T. 2 Will. 4, and Harrison v. Teit (4 Bing. N. C. 442.). Rule to show cause.

Monday, April 20.

DORRIS, GAIKSFORD AND OTHERS v. STONE. Rule to show cause.

GAMBLE v. KURTZ.—Talford, Serjt. (with him Webster) moved for a cross rule to that obtained by Channell, Serjt. on April 16, calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, or why the verdict should not be entered for the defendant upon the 1st, 2nd, or 3rd issues, or why there should not be a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Rule to show cause.

TEMPEST v. KILNER.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages to 25l. Rule to show cause.

GIBBONS v. ALISON.—Shee, Serjt. (with him Petersdorff) moved for a new trial upon the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence. Rule to show cause.

HOLDEN v. LIVERPOOL NEW GAS AND COKE COMPANY.—Argument concluded (part heard Jan. 26). Cur. adv. vult.

PRICH AND URON v. JAMES.—Channell, Serjt. showed cause. Talford, Serjt. (with him Phinns) supported the rule. Rule absolute for a new trial.

Tuesday, April 21.

ZULUSTA AND OTHERS v. MILLER AND OTHERS.—Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. showed cause. Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

KEYS AND OTHERS, Executors, v. IRVINE.—Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule. No one showing cause. Rule absolute.

BARTLEY v. CARVER AND OTHERS.—Channell, Serjt. showed cause. Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

DORRIS, ATKINSON v. FAWCETT.—Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. commenced his argument against the rule. Argument adjourned.

GORDON v. ELLIS. Judgment for the plaintiff. FOWLES, Public Officer, v. PAGE. Cur. adv. vult. NEVILLE v. TIPPIN.—Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside the judgment signed in this case, for irregularity. (Reg. Gen. E. T. 2 Will. 4; 1 Jervis's Rules, 93.) Rule to show cause.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, April 15.

HINCKER v. JAMES. Where in an action against a party for not delivering certain sacks of flour to arrive by a ship at a certain port, it appeared, from the terms of the contract, that a specific thing was contracted for.

Held, that it was not enough for the plaintiff to show that the ship arrived with an equal quantity of flour on board to that contracted to be delivered, but that he must show that the specific flour contracted for arrived in that ship.

This was an action against the defendant for not delivering certain flour. The declaration was on a special agreement, setting out that the defendant had sold to the plaintiff certain, to wit, 200 sacks of flour, at 37s. per sack, to be delivered to him when the ship Wanderer arrived at Newport, and there were allegations that the Wanderer arrived at Newport in August, 1845, with 200 sacks of flour on board, but that, although the plaintiff was ready and willing to receive and pay for the said flour, and requested the defendant to deliver the same, yet the defendant wholly neglected it, and refused so to do, to the damage of the plaintiff.

The defendant pleaded several pleas, one of which was, that although the said ship did arrive, yet she did not arrive with the said goods on board. At the trial the bought and sold note was put in, and was in form as follows:—"Sold 150 to 200 sacks of fresh flour, at 37s. per sack, to be delivered ex Wanderer, on her arrival at Newport." Evidence was also given of the arrival of the Wanderer at Newport, with 200 sacks of flour on board. For the defence it was shown that the flour was not consigned to the defendant, and that he had no control over it. Upon this, a verdict was directed to be entered for the defendant, with liberty to the plaintiff to enter a verdict for 70l. which was the difference between the value of the flour at the time the ship arrived and the time when the contract was made, flour having risen in price.

Whateley.—Q. C. now moved accordingly, and contended that as the defendant had undertaken to deliver the flour when the ship arrived, he did so at his own peril, and the fact of the flour which actually came by the Wanderer being consigned to another person and not the defendant could not affect the question.

PARKER B.—The fact of the sold note mentioning the quantity as 150 to 200 sacks, shews that the parties contracted with respect to some specific thing. Now, how do you make it appear that the 200 sacks of flour which did arrive by the Wanderer at Newport was the subject matter of the contract?

Whateley.—That, it is submitted, does not matter. The defendant undertakes to deliver the flour when the Wanderer arrives, and was therefore bound to do so on that arrival taking place; then it is clear that he could have compelled the plaintiff to take the flour.

By the Court.—It is clear, by the words of the said note, that the parties were contracting for some specific thing, and it was for the plaintiff to shew that the specific thing so contracted for did arrive; that he has not done. You may have a nonsuit instead of a verdict, so that on another trial you may have an opportunity of supplying this, which may be only a deficiency of evidence.

Whateley assenting to this course,
Talford, Serjt. (who had appeared for the defendants at the trial), consented, on behalf of his clients, to this course.
Rule absolute for a nonsuit.

OLROYD v. CHADWICK and ANOTHER.
New trial.

This was an action brought to try the validity of a warrant of distress which had been issued by the defendants, who were justices, to collect poor rates. The assessment was made under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, which, before it could be enforced, must be allowed by two justices, and notice published in the church, under 17 Geo. 2, c. 3, since the 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vict. c. 45. This notice is not to be given in the church, but to be reduced into writing, and to be affixed on or near to the doors of the churches or chapels in the parish. In this case it seemed that prior to 1832 there had been an old chapel in the parish, where divine service was performed, which fell into ruin, and a new chapel was built, under 59 Geo. 3, c. 102, s. 40, which was duly consecrated, and the galleries, pewing, sacramentary vessels, and parish chest, which had been in the old chapel, were removed to the new. The windows of the old chapel were then blocked up, but it was used for burials and occasionally christenings; divine service, however, was never performed there.

The ground on which the parties brought this action against the justices was, that they had illegally issued the distress, the rate being bad for want of sufficient notice. They contended that as it was necessary to give notice on the doors of all the churches and chapels in the parish where it was made before it could be enforced, notice should have been affixed to the door of the old chapel as well as the new, which had not been done. At the trial a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, with leave to the defendants to move for a nonsuit.

Martin, Q.C. now moved accordingly, and contended that it was only necessary to give notice on the doors of those churches and chapels in which divine service was performed; and he cited R. v. Marr (12 A & C. 779), and R. v. Whip (4 Q.B. 141); he also stated that these were points arising on the face of the warrant of distress.

Thursday, April 16.
TORK v. DARBY.
New trial.

This was an action for an illegal distress for rent, and it appeared that the plaintiff had held a farm, for the rent of which the distress was made, of one Mountain—Mountain being tenant to Darby. In October 1843, the three parties met, and it was agreed between them that Mountain should cease to be tenant to Darby in June 1844, and that Tork should be his tenant instead. In March 1844, however, Darby represented to Tork that he had the freehold of the farm, and agreed to sell it to him, but was afterwards unable to make a title to the feehold (having only a term of 1,000 years, and was unable to get in the freehold). In August 1845, Darby put in a distress for rent due from June 1844 to June, 1845. At the trial, a verdict was taken for the defendant, with liberty for the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict, damages, 22l. 6s. 6d.

Humphrey, Q.C. now moved accordingly, and contended that this distress could not be put in, as Tork was never tenant to Darby, the agreement to sell having been made by Darby before the time when Tork was to come in as his tenant.
Rule nisi.

HILLS v. CROSSLAND.
New trial.

This was an action for a malicious prosecution. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages, 50l. It appeared that the action arose out of a prosecution which had been instituted against the plaintiff for an alleged assault committed at a vestry meeting, and of which he had been acquitted.

M. Chambers, Q.C. now moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that it had been proved at the trial that the plaintiff had at the vestry done what amounted to an assault in law; and that therefore, although he had been acquitted, it could not be said that there was an absence of reasonable and probable cause for the defendant's preferring the indictment, which was essential to enable him to maintain this action.

Rule nisi.
BEAMISH v. OWENS.
New trial.

Semble—A, who was an attorney, being engaged in negotiations for the sale of an estate of his own, devolved the conduct of the business with regard to it on his partner; and then made certain statements to him, which went to shew that he could not make out his title. Held, in an action brought against A to recover back the deposit money, that the relation of attorney and client existed between them, and that the communications were privileged.

This was an action to recover back the sum of 650l. which had been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, as a deposit on the sale of an estate which had not been completed; the breach alleged being, that the defendant had neglected to make out a good title.

The defendant had had a verdict on two pleas: 1st, that the plaintiff was not ready and willing to accept and pay the residue of the money; and 2ndly, that the defendant had not had a reasonable time allowed him by the plaintiff to make out his bill; and leave was reserved for the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for 650l. non obstante veredicto, on the count for money had and received, if the Court should be of opinion that he was entitled to do so, on all the facts of the case.

Watson, Q.C. now moved accordingly, citing Jacob v. Lee (2 M. & R. 33); Morris v. Horner (1b. 392); and Rogers v. Custance (1b. 179). This was on a point relative to a notice to produce. There was also a point as to the admission of evidence. It appeared that the defendant Owens was an attorney, and at the time the negotiation relative to the sale of the estate took place, he was in partnership with a gentleman named Grice; but this partnership had since (and prior to this action) been dissolved. It also appeared that the defendant had asked him to attend to this negotiation with regard to the sale of the estate. At the trial it was proposed to call him, on the part of the plaintiff, to prove certain statements made to him by the defendant, which went to shew that he could not make out his bill, but it was objected that those statements were privileged, and his evidence was held inadmissible by Mr. Baron Platt, who tried the cause. It was now contended that the relation of client and attorney did not exist between them, and that the evidence was admissible.

By the COURT.—If the partner asked the witness to conduct this business, why should not the relation of client and attorney exist? If for any reason Owens devolved the task of conducting the business with regard to this estate on his partner, it is clear the relation would exist; and as it is clear that the statements were confidential, they ought to have been excluded; on the other points there will be a rule nisi.

ENGLEHART v. MOORE.
Attorney's bill.

This was an action on an attorney's bill; the only plea was that no signed bill had been delivered, the plaintiff had a verdict, damages 27l. 15s. 2d.

Humphrey, Q.C. now moved to set this verdict aside and enter a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that no sufficient bill had been delivered, no Court was anywhere mentioned in the bill as to where the business was done, but it was headed "Yourself at the suit of Peroy;" this, it was submitted, was insufficient. (Lewis v. Primrose, 13 L.J. Q.B. 269.) Rule nisi.

Saturday, April 18.
POTT and OTHERS v. CLEGG.
New trial.

In this action various issues had been found for the plaintiff, and one for the defendant, who had also leave to move to enter a verdict on one of the issues found for the plaintiff on a question of set-off, the question being whether the defendant could avail himself of a declared balance in his favour in a banker's book as a set-off, the balance being declared more than six years before action brought, or whether it was barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Chilton, Q.C. now moved accordingly. Rule nisi.

FENWICK v. BOYD and ANOTHER, and THE SAME v. THE SAME.

These were actions by and against the same parties on a charter-party. Verdicts for the plaintiff in the first action, damages 635l. 13s. with leave for the defendant to move for a new trial; in the second, 1,885l. 16s. 6d. with leave to move for a new trial or a nonsuit.

Jervis, Q.C. now moved accordingly, and stated that as the facts were the same in both cases, he thought it best to move them together in the first action. The grounds on which he moved for the new trial were, that the facts of the case did not bring it within the terms of the second part of the charter-party so as to let in the question of time and right, and also in arrest of judgment that the contract was not properly set out.

The same points arose in the second case, with the addition of this, that the action was, it was contended, brought too soon, as the goods were warehoused under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 87, s. 47; and as that Act enacts that the cargo, when so warehoused, shall be considered to be in the ship, this was an action for freight with the cargo in the ship.

Rule nisi in both cases.

SWINTON v. THOMPSON.

In an action on a warranty of goods alleged to have been sold by sample, Held, that an invoice which was delivered with the goods, formed no part of the contract, but was merely a memorandum of the goods so delivered, and the sum to be paid.

This was an action brought against the defendant on a warranty of champagne, which the plaintiff in his declaration alleged was sold by sample, and to be delivered equal in quality to a bottle which had been produced. The plea was, that the sale was not a sale by sample. A verdict having passed for the plaintiff, Whateley, Q.C. now moved to enter a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the invoice which was sent to the plaintiff at the time the wine was delivered contained no such stipulation; and as he had received the wine under such invoice, it, in fact, formed the contract, as the goods were there described, and the terms of credit mentioned.

By the COURT.—The jury have found the fact that there was a sale by sample; the contract was made quite independent of the invoice, which was merely sent to inform the party what he had to pay. It is nothing more than a memorandum of what the goods sent are, and of what the plaintiff was to pay, and need not include the conditions of the sale, which could not bind him in any way.
Rule refused.

WOOLLEY v. DAVISSON.
New trial.

This was an action for the value of shares in the Leeds and Thirsk Railway Company, bargained and sold. The defence was, that the defendant was only an agent in the sale, and was not liable as principal. A verdict was directed for the defendant, with leave to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict, if the Court should be of opinion that the plaintiff, on all the facts, was so entitled.

Baines, Q.C. now moved accordingly, citing Owen v. Gooch (2 Esp. 567); Story on Agency, 267 & 288; Thompson v. Dacensport (9 B. & C. 78); 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 223; Paley's Principal and Agent, 372.

WALSTAB v. SPOTTISWOODE.

Liability of a provisional committee-man at suit of an allottee of shares in a railway scheme which is not carried out.

In this case Martin, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered pursuant to leave reserved—the first count of the declaration being special, and the second for money had and received, and a verdict having been found for the plaintiff on each of these counts, with 78l. 15s. damages.

It appeared that the plaintiff had applied for 30 shares in the Direct Birmingham, Oxford, Reading, and Brighton Railway, and the letter of application contained the usual promise to accept the shares, to pay the deposit of 2l. 12s. 6d. upon each share, and to sign the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement. The letter of allotment contained directions for payment of the deposit money to certain bankers therein mentioned, and for obtaining the scrip on production of the banker's receipt.

The motion for a nonsuit was made on two grounds—1st. That from the agreement contained in the above letters, no promise could be raised for the delivery of scrip by the defendant to the plaintiff, who had paid his deposit money on the 30 shares; and, secondly, that money had and received would not lie in this case.

On the first point, Martin contended that a provisional committee-man has authority to do those acts only which are prescribed by the Joint Stock Companies' Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, in which he referred particularly to ss. 2, 23, 25; and that this Act gives no power to issue scrip before complete registration. He likewise insisted that the agreement (if any) established by the letters of application and allotment was respecting shares and not scrip, and that the first count of the declaration was consequently not supported by the evidence. On the second point he argued that, although money had and received would lie where there had been a total failure of consideration, yet in this case the committee had no power to dissolve the company, and therefore there had been no such total failure; but even if there had been, the contract being illegal, the money paid by the plaintiff could not be recovered back. On both grounds the Court granted a Rule to shew cause.

LEWIS v. CULLEWIS.

When a cause is referred at Nisi Prius to the Master, in order that he may determine the matters in difference, and direct by whom, to whom, and in what manner the costs are to be paid, and he decides accordingly, his decision is in the nature of a certificate, and not an award, and is not bad for not providing for the costs of the reference.

E. James moved to set aside the Master's award or certificate herein. This cause was referred at Nisi Prius to the Master, a verdict having been taken for 37l. the order of reference directing the Master to decide upon all matters in difference, and to direct by whom, to whom, and in what manner the costs should be paid. The Master found that the plaintiff had sustained damages to the amount of 37l. (the amount of the verdict) besides his costs of suit. The present rule was moved on the four following grounds:—1st. That the Master had not awarded as to the costs of the reference. 2nd. That the finding as to the costs is ambiguous and uncertain. 3rd. That he has not determined upon all the issues, which were five in number. 4th. That the Master has stated in his award that he had considered the evidence of the parties, but not stated that he had examined any witnesses (this point was afterwards abandoned.) (Morgan v. Smith, 1 Dowl. N. S. 617.)

COLERIDGE, J.—I think there is nothing in the first objection. The Master has proceeded correctly; he has considered this as a certificate, and not as an award. Now a certificate is totally distinct from an award, for an award is addressed to the parties, whereas a certificate is addressed to the officer of the court, and is resorted to under certain circumstances, and with the view to saving expense. Mr. James relies here upon certain particular terms in the instrument, but I think that makes no difference; you must look at the broad distinction in the case, and it appears to me that this is merely a certificate of the Master; it follows, therefore, that there is also nothing in the second objection. I will look at the third.

Rule refused on the two first points. Cur. adv. vult. on the third.

EVANS v. JONES.

Distringas to compel an appearance, where the excuse is that the defendant is ill in bed.

Corrie moved for a distringas to compel an appearance under the following circumstances. The usual calls and appointments had been made, but on each occasion the defendant had been denied, the servant saying that he was ill in bed, and could not be seen.

Distringas granted.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ANGLESEA.

Where the six months during which a party may apply for a certiorari have elapsed, the Court will not (except with the consent of all parties) permit the writ to issue, notwithstanding application was in due time made at chambers for the writ, and was not then obtained, in consequence of the absence of the judge.

Peacock moved for a certiorari to bring up an order of sessions, subject to a special case. The order in question was made on the 14th of October, now more than six months since, and beyond the time, therefore, which, by the 13 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, is allowed for moving for the writ. Application had been made to a judge at chambers on the 11th instant (within the six months), for the writ, but no judge attended chambers that day, nor until the 15th, in consequence of the Easter holidays. Application had subsequently been made to Mr. Justice Coleridge, who referred the applicants to the Court. Under these circumstances it was sought to have the writ issued nunc pro tunc.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Have you any authority for such an application, when you are out of time?

Peacock.—There is no express authority, but the chairman of the sessions consents to the application.

WIGHTMAN, J.—That will not do; you should have the consent of the other side. The only authority upon which this writ issues in such a case is by statute, and you have not complied with it.

Rule refused.

REG. v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSSES OF BATH.

Certiorari to remove an order of a Town Council in order to quash same for defects apparent on its face.

T. W. Saunders moved for a certiorari to bring up an order of the town council of Bath, made on the 25th of January, 1836, for the purpose of quashing the same for defects apparent on its face. The order in question was made under the provisions of the 87th section of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76 (an Act to provide for the regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales) which enacts "that it shall be lawful for the council of any borough in any part of which there is a local act for the lighting thereof, to make an order that any part of such borough not being within the provisions of any local act for the lighting thereof, shall, from and after a certain day to be named in such order, be taken to be within the provisions of such local act or acts for lighting any part of such borough as the common council shall specify in such order; and after such day the part named in such order shall be within the provisions of the act or acts so specified, so far as relates to lighting, or to any rates authorized to be levied for the purpose of lighting," &c. The order itself was in these words: "It is ordered that such parts of the parish of Lyncombe and Widcombe mentioned in the report of the watch committee as necessary and proper to be lighted, shall, after the 1st day of February next, be taken to be within the provisions of 'an Act for better paving, cleansing, lighting, watching, regulating, and improving the city of Bath, and the liberties and precincts thereof,' so far as relates to lighting the same." It was now contended that inasmuch as this order does not shew upon its face what are the parts of the parish to be lighted under it, it does not comply with the terms of the foregoing section, and is therefore bad. Rule absolute.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Ex parte DEPHLIDGE.—Corrie moved for a certiorari to remove into this court the depositions taken by the coroner in a case of manslaughter, and that the applicant may be admitted to bail in the county. Application granted.

CLARK v. HUGHES.—Maeulay moved for a rule to set aside the verdict herein, and for a new trial, on the grounds—1, of the rejection of evidence; 2, of misdirection; and 3, of the verdict being against evidence. The action was brought by a surveyor against one of the provisional committee of the Sheffield, Nottingham, and London Direct Railway, and was tried before the under-sheriff of Nottinghamshire, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. Rule nisi.

Wednesday, April 22.

TAGG v. SIMONS.—Dowdell moved for a rule to strike out the defendant's pleas, or that the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign judgment on thirteen of such pleas, and the defendant to pay the costs. Rule nisi.

ROWBOTHAM v. BALL, Clerk.—Butt, Q.C. moved for a rule to strike out the demurrer as frivolous. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE RECORDER OF NEW SARUM.—Stade moved for a rule for the costs of the mandamus herein. Rule nisi.

DUGGAN v. GEE.—M. Smith moved, on the part of the defendant, that the rule obtained herein by the plaintiff may be discharged, the plaintiff having neglected to pay the costs. Rule nisi.

WAGNER v. MANSFIELD.—Thomas moved, on the part of the defendant, for a new trial in this case, which was tried before the Secondary, on the ground of misdirection and the verdict being against evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

FORD v. ARNOLD.—In this case, which was moved on Monday, the Court granted a Rule nisi.

LANE v. HOLLOCK.—Bovill moved to set aside a warrant of attorney, on the ground of usury. Rule nisi.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE important work of the week has been the introduction of the government measure to enable railway companies to wind up their affairs and dissolve. Particulars will be found in a leading article. PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

POPULATION AND POOR-RATES.—An interesting return connected with the population and poor-rates of England and Wales (obtained by Mr. Woodhouse, the member for East Norfolk) has been printed. The hon. member moved, on the 9th inst. for "a return showing the population, the amount of money levied for poor-rates, and the ratio which the amount levied for poor-rates bore to the population in each of the counties in England and Wales during each of the years ended Lady-day, 1813, 1824, and 1844; also a return of the amount levied for poor-rates in England and Wales (exclusive of the counties of Kent, Middlesex, and Surrey) for each of the years ended Lady-day 1826 and 1841, distinguishing the amount levied on landed property, dwelling-houses, and all other kinds of property, with the proportion per cent. which the amount levied on each description of property bears to the total amount levied." He also moved for "an account of the expenses of medical relief in each union and parish of England and Wales under the regulations of the Poor Law Commissioners ending Lady-day 1843, 1844, and 1845, together with the total cost of relief to the poor in each union." By the first branch of the returns it seems, that in 1811 the total population of England and Wales was 10,150,615; the total money levied for poor-rate, county-rate, &c. for the year ended Lady-day, 1813, was 8,646,841l. and the rate per head on the population was as much as "17s." The population in 1821 was 11,978,875; the poor-rates, &c. in 1824 amounted to 6,833,630l. and the rate per head on the population was then 11s. 5d. In 1831 the population was 13,897,187; the poor-rates, &c. 8,338,079l. and the rate per head on the population 12s. In 1841 the population was 15,906,741; the poor-rates, &c. 6,847,205l. and the rate per head on the population, 8s. 7d. The ratio which the amount levied for poor-rates bore to the population varied very much. In 1813 the highest ratio was in Sussex, where it was as much as 36s. 11d.; and the lowest in Cumberland, where it was only 10s. 1d. In 1844 it was the highest in Wilts, where it was 12s. 11d.; and the lowest in Cumberland, where it was only 5s. 1d. In the second part of the return a statement is made shewing the amount levied for poor-rates in England and Wales (exclusive of Kent, Middlesex, and Surrey), at certain periods—namely, 1826 and 1841. In 1826 it was 5,740,436l. and in 1841, 5,154,352l. The aggregate totals of Kent, Middlesex, and Surrey, not included in the above totals, were 1,255,720l. in 1826, and 1,197,476l. in 1841. The third and last branch of the return has reference to the amount of money expended for medical relief, under the regulations of the Poor-law commissioners. In 1845, there were 591 unions in England and Wales. In 1843 the amount expended for medical relief was 147,263l. in which year the total cost of relief to the poor, including medical relief, was 4,626,356l. In 1844 the amount expended for medical relief was 152,229l. when the total relief to the poor, including medical relief, was 4,455,017l.; and in 1845, the amount expended for medical relief was 157,409l. in which year the total cost of relief to the poor, including medical relief, was 4,474,275l.

EXPIRING LAWS.—(SESSIONAL PAPER, 123.)—The report of the committee appointed to inquire what temporary laws of a public and general nature are now in force, and which laws of a like nature have expired since the date of the last report, or are about to expire. The following list comprises such temporary Acts as are to determine on fixed dates, unless renewed by the Legislature, with the period of their expiry.

Bills in Progress.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTORS.—A draft of a Bill for regulating the times of payment of rates and taxes by Parliamentary electors, and for abolishing the stamp duty on the admission of freemen. This Bill is brought in by Sir De Lacy Evans and Mr. Hawes, and consists of only one clause, by which it is intended to provide that, after the passing of this Act, no person whose name is or shall be upon the register for the time being, as entitled to vote in the election of a member or members to serve in Parliament for any city, town, or borough in England, shall be required, in order to entitle him to have his name inserted in any list of such voters for that city, town, or borough for the following year, to have paid any poor rates or assessed taxes, except such as shall have become payable from him previously to the 11th day of October in the preceding year; and that no stamp duty shall be chargeable on the admission of any freeman in any city, town, or borough in England, returning a member or members to serve in Parliament.

DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION.—A draft of an Act for securing compensation to the families of persons killed by accidents is now under their Lordships' consideration. The Bill is presented by Lord Campbell, and enacts that henceforth an action may be brought against any person causing the death of another through neglect, in the same mode as is at present the case, when the accident has not resulted fatally. The action is to be for the sole benefit of such person or persons as are entitled to the personal effects of the deceased; and in every such action the jury may award whatever damages they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties for whom and whose benefit the action has been brought.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

REFORMATION OF CRIMINALS.

TUESDAY, April 21.—Lord CAMPBELL presented a petition from the Lord Provost, the council, and the magistrates of the city of Edinburgh, to which their common seal was attached, praying that there might be established houses in which persons who had been convicted and imprisoned might be received and employed after their liberation, in order that they might thereby be enabled to be restored to society.

RAILWAY LEGISLATION.

THURSDAY.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE stated the provisions of the Bill for the Relief of Railroad Companies desirous of winding up their concerns. A meeting of share and scrip holders may be held, after due notice in the Gazette and newspapers, and at this meeting, the sole business of which is to be the consideration of the question of dissolution, proxies will be allowed. If a clear majority, comprising three-fifths of the holders, with one-third of the capital stock, shall be in favour of a dissolution, the company shall thenceforth be, ipso facto, dissolved. But the Bill will only meet the immediate case of incubate companies, where the entire body, or a clear majority are decidedly in favour of winding up their concerns. Meantime railway bills already in Parliament may be pressed forward, against the wishes of a majority of the shareholders.

The Railway Relief Bill, which he was now introducing, could be sufficiently advanced to meet all the cases to which it was intended to be applicable. There were many reasons why the governing body of a railway company should be anxious to obtain their bill, against the wishes of the holders. Pride and rivalry, the sensible benefit to be derived from a possession of the deposits, local and personal advantages, and other causes operated. It was requisite, therefore, that the Railway Relief Bill should have the aid of a sessional standing order, to be enacted by both Houses, and grounded on the resolutions already made public. They should have the power of stopping all railway bills whatever, at their third reading, unless they were warranted in proceeding, in any particular case, by a petition presented, under certain conditions, certifying the desire of the clear majority of the shareholders to obtain their bill. The necessity for the procedure was manifest. The railway acts which were sanctioned last session entailed on the country the application of between seventy and eighty millions sterling to be withdrawn from the spare capital of the country, and applied to the construction of these works. Great activity was manifested in carrying them forward, so much so that the prices of labour and materials had been augmented by fifty per cent., thereby affecting all estimates. Yet to these seventy or eighty millions to which we were already pledged, the five hundred bills now in Parliament proposed to add the enormous sum of about three hundred millions sterling. He would not enter into any speculation as to the power possessed by the commerce and trade of the country to throw off any given amount of spare capital. It was sufficient to state that these speculations were pressing severely on the industry of the country, and paralysing all commercial operations, as well as stopping the usual accommodation on which commerce and trade depended. The noble lord concluded by laying the Railway Relief Bill on the table, and reading the resolutions which he will propose as a sessional order on Monday next.—Lord BROUGHAM, while reserving to himself the power of more minutely considering details, gave a general sanction both to the bill and the sessional order. He was glad to see a prospect of a termination to that railway mania, which had reflected little credit on the character of the country, and had grievously damaged its morality. After a discussion, shared in by a number of peers, the Railway Relief Bill was read a first time, and the resolutions are to be proposed as a sessional order on Monday. Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MINT PROSECUTIONS.

TUESDAY, APRIL 21.—Mr. H. BRANLEY rose to put a question to the right honourable baronet opposite. He had seen, in a report of the Bow-street police-court, inserted in the Times newspaper of April 14, a statement of a rather extraordinary nature. There were two cases of uttering base coin to women of bad character, which were disposed of by Mr. Powell, the Solicitor to the Mint, informing the magistrate that the Mint had, by a recent regulation, declined to follow up or aid any prosecutions against persons for passing base coin to women of bad character. The question which he (Mr. Berkeley) wished to put was, whether it was the determination of her Majesty's Mint to put the law altogether in abeyance as regarded the passing of base money upon unfortunate females? and if so, whether the principle was to be carried out in all cases in which the offences were committed against females of unfortunate character?—Sir GEORGE CLERK having himself seen the statement in the Times to which the honourable member had alluded, had made inquiry at the Mint at once as to its correctness. He had ascertained that no such regulation as that mentioned either existed now, or had ever existed, and that the statement had originated in some mistake. The paragraph had also attracted the attention of her Majesty's Attorney-General, who had felt it his duty to inquire into its accuracy, and the result was that he had ascertained that some mistake must have been made by the reporter as to the expression used by the solicitor to the Mint. The solicitor always exercised a discretion as to the cases brought before the magistrates; it being for him to see whether there was a sufficiently conclusive evidence to justify the carrying on of the prosecution, and in the cases alluded to he did not think the evidence sufficient. He therefore allowed the magistrate to discharge the prisoners.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES' BILL.

WEDNESDAY.—The House of Commons was engaged at its early sitting, in forwarding the Friendly Societies' Bill through committee. Certain clauses of the proposed enactment raised discussions, and more especially that which prevents the transfer of shares.—Mr. DUNCOMBE contended that this power was necessary to protect the working class, when combining against their employers for a rise in wages. This proposition was controverted by Sir JAMES GRAHAM, while the Solicitor-General contended for the existing provision in the Bill as calculated to afford to the working man's family the amplest protection against his temporary improvidence. A portion of the clauses were reserved for discussion on Friday next.

COUNTY ELECTIONS.

Mr. ELPHINSTONE moved the second reading of the County Elections Bill.—Lord WORSLEY, Mr. BAIGT, and Mr. B. ESCOTT supported the principle of the measure, as being calculated to promote increased purity at elections, by curtailing the period of their continuance.—Colonel T. WOOD, moved, "That the Bill be read that day six months." The amendment was supported by Mr. NEWDEGATE, who apprehended from the contemplated change a terrible accession of strength to the Anti-Corn-law League at any future general election.—Mr. B. DENISON, Sir J. GRAHAM, and Lord G. BENTINCK took the same course from a fear that the county constituencies would be curtailed of their present fair proportions if less time were allowed them to record their votes.—Colonel SIBTHORP avowed himself hostile to the Bill in consequence of its tendency to check the circulation of money at an election. Upon a division the bill was lost, there being for the second reading 32, and against it 55. The other business having been disposed of, the House adjourned.

COURTS OF LAW AND EQUITY.

THURSDAY.—Mr. THORNELEY, in the absence of the hon. and learned member for Kinsale (Mr. Watson), gave notice that it was the intention of that gentleman, on Thursday, May 7, to move for a select committee of inquiry into the fees and compensation in the courts of law and equity.

THE MAGISTRATE.

SUMMARY.

THE important decision of the week relating to Magistrates' Law, is commented upon below.

EXEMPTIONS FROM RATES UNDER 6 & 7 VICT. c. 36.

THE first decision upon the construction of this Act is too interesting and important to be postponed until our usual summary, especially as the effect of it is almost to reduce the statute to a dead letter. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, as those engaged in parish business will know, was passed for the purpose of giving a wholesome encouragement to societies established for the cultivation of literature, science, and the fine arts. The title is, "An Act to exempt from county, borough, parochial, and other local rates, land and buildings occupied by scientific or literary societies;" and the preamble goes on still further, and recites the expediency of exempting societies established exclusively for literature, science, and the fine arts. By the first section the requisites to obtain this exemption are:—

1. That the premises shall belong, either as tenant or owner, to a society instituted for purposes of literature, science, or the fine arts exclusively.
2. That they shall be occupied for the transaction of its business, and for carrying into effect its purposes.
3. That the society shall be supported, wholly or in part, by annual voluntary contributions.
4. And "shall not, and by its laws may not, make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money, unto or between any of its members."
5. That it obtain the certificate of the barrister appointed to certify the rules of friendly societies, or by sect. 5, in case of his refusal, shall have appealed to and procured the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions in its favour.

Acting upon this statute, many societies have claimed and obtained exemption, and amongst them the Religious Tract Society, in respect of its premises in Paternoster-row. Against the certificate, however, in this instance, an appeal was duly entered according to sec. 6; and the Sessions decided against the exemption, subject to a case, which on Wednesday last was argued. It will be seen from the report that the only point absolutely decided was the meaning of the words "shall not, and, by its rules, may not." The statute being to exempt from a legal liability, the society was bound to bring itself within its very terms; and the Court held that "by its rules may not," could only mean that the rules must expressly prohibit any such division. It was urged strongly, and probably most truly, by Mr. Serjt. Talfourd, that no such society ever had inserted such a superfluous rule, which could only have been looked upon as a gratuitous insult to those appointed to control its funds. But as the Courts cannot consider the effect of statutes when the words seem plain, this argument was disregarded. It was urged also, that the express application of the funds being directed so as to exclude impliedly any such division, would give the Court of Chancery the same right to interfere to prevent such a misapplication of the funds as an express prohibition. We apprehend, however, that this is not quite so; for if there were an express prohibition, and the collected funds of the society were, by the consent and vote of all its members, to be so appropriated, the Attorney-General might call upon the Court to prevent such an improper transfer of funds, which had been amassed for other purposes, and in fact increased by virtue of the very exemption under the statute; whereas a mere implied prohibition would not give him equal right. The words of the statute are certainly curious, and a further reason might have been urged in favour of the view adopted by the Court, from the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 30, exempting places of divine worship from rates. There the proviso is, not that parts from which rents may be received are to be excluded from the exemption, but only parts "from which persons shall receive any rent or rents, or shall derive profit or advantage." However, the Court has now expressly decided that there must be such an express prohibition in the rules, and unless an Amended Act be immediately brought in, all societies of the kind intended by the Act, should pass such an affirmative rule. It is quite clear that an appeal against such exemption already granted, if made in time, must be successful.

Here, however, sect. 6 is to be regarded. Appeals exist only by statute, and, therefore, the time limited, and the requisites made necessary by the statute, must be strictly observed. The words give the appeal "within four calendar months next after the first assessment of such rate made after such certificate shall have been filed as aforesaid, or within four calendar months next after the first assessment of such rate made after such exemption shall have been claimed by such society." This last clause refers, we suppose, to the notice of the certificate being granted given by the society under sec. 2, or to a claim under sec. 5. On reading this clause attentively, it appears that if four months have been allowed to elapse since the certificate or notice thereof was first granted to any society, no appeal could be had under the 6th section. If this be so, then this nullifying decision will have little effect, for most of the societies in existence, when it passed, have probably availed themselves of its provisions, and established their right to exemption by obtaining a certificate unappealed against. For, however wrongly the certificate may have been given, it is a decision of a competent jurisdiction, and would be conclusive in favour of a society, if, in spite of it, the overseers were to rate it, in consequence of Reg. v. Jones. It would be like a removal upon an order unappealed against, or the decision of magistrates, under the Highway Act, as to nuisances or repairs (Mould v. Williams, 5 Q. B.), and be conclusive evidence of the facts found by it, viz. that the society is in accordance with the provisions of the statute.

The other question discussed, and decided—so far as the unanimous opinion of Lords Denman, Patteson, Williams, and Wightman, J.J., not delivered judicially, is of authority—was, whether the Religious Tract Society could be considered instituted for the purposes of literature exclusively. It is clear, from their rules and all their publications, that their main object is religious, the spreading of sound Christian knowledge, by means of tracts and cheap publications, written entirely with religious views, even when treating of scientific or historical subjects. Notwithstanding the argument that religion is the highest source and object of literature, we think that such a society was not intended to be included in the Act. And we would test it thus: supposing the statute had not been passed, would not the secretary or acting committee of the Tract Society have considered themselves much depreciated, if not scandalized, by it being said that the Religious Tract Society was instituted for literary purposes exclusively, or even for literary purposes at all? No one acquainted with the tone and character of their publications can doubt that they would have scorned such a description of their objects; and however much it may be desirable that such useful societies should be quite as much protected and encouraged as mere literary or scientific societies, yet it would have been straining the Act to have brought it within the exemption. THE PRACTICE OF SUMMARY CONVICTIONS.

By T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Of actions against justices in respect of summary convictions.

THE subject of the liability of magistrates for acts done under summary convictions is one of considerable importance, and should ever be fresh in the minds of justices, when called upon to convict summarily; since, careful as the Legislature has been to throw around these functionaries every reasonable protection in the exercise of their lawful authority, it affords them no immunity in cases in which (however innocently) they have acted without it. The great rule upon magisterial liability is this: if the justices have acted without jurisdiction in fact, or if there is an apparent want of jurisdiction upon the face of the conviction, they will be liable in trespass to the defendant. This rule is too well established, and too frequently acted upon, to render any further observation upon it at all necessary. (Crepps v. Durden, Cowp. 640; Lancaster v. Greaves, 9 B. & C. 628; Hill v. Bateman, 1 Stra. 710; Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & S. 313; Gimbert v. Coyney, M'Cle. & You. 469; Morgan v. Brown, 4 Ad. & Ell. 515; Hutchinson v. Lovendes, 4 B. & Ad. 118; Ex parte Johnson, 7 Dowl. 705, 3 M. & W. 426; Ex parte Ormrod, 1 Dowl. & L. 827; Kite and Lane's case, 1 B. & C. 101; Rex v. Hazell, 13 East, 139; Rex v. Stone, 1 East, 636; Welch v. Nash, 8 East, 394; Stevens v. Clark, Car. & Mar. 509; Chaney v. Payne, 1 Q.B. 712; Jones v. Gurdon, 2 Q.B. 600; Cave v. Mountain, 1 Man. & Gr. 267; Reg. v. Bolton, 1 Q.B. 66; Mason v. Barker, 1 Car. & Ker. 100; Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & C. 603; Weaver v. Price, 3 B. & Ad. 409; see rules of construction, ante, p. 90.) If, however, on an action brought, the justices can produce a perfectly good conviction, it will be a complete answer, and will entitle them to a verdict. (Lowther v. Earl Radnor, 8 East, 113; Brittain v. Kinnaird, 1 B. & B. 432; Fulmers v. Fotch, Holt, 287; Chaney v. Payne, 1 Q.B. 712; Gray v. Cookson, 16 East, 19; Sellwood v. Mount, 1 Q.B. 726; Fawcett v. Fowles, 7 B. & C. 394.) The conviction, however, to be a good defence, must be connected with the warrant of commitment, for if there be any material variance, as if it describe a different offence, it will be unavailing. (3 B. & C. 409; Wickes v. Clutterbuck, 2 Bing. 483; Davis v. Copper, 10 B. & C. 28; Rogers v. Jones, 3 B. & C. 409.)

In cases in which the justices shew jurisdiction, but their conviction is nevertheless defective, the 43 Geo. 3, c. 141, steps in for their protection. That statute, by sec. 1, enacts,

"That in all actions whatsoever, which shall at any time after the passing of this Act be brought against any justice or justices of the peace in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for or on account of any conviction by him or them had or made under, or by virtue of any Act or Acts of Parliament in force in the said United Kingdom, or for or by reason of any act, matter, or thing whatsoever, done or commanded to be done, by such justice or justices for the levying of any penalty, apprehending any party, or for or about the carrying of any such conviction into effect, in case such conviction shall have been quashed, the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such action or actions, besides the value and amount of the penalty or penalties which may have been levied upon the said plaintiff or plaintiffs in case any levy thereof shall have been made, shall not be entitled to recover any more or greater damages than the sum of two pence, nor any costs of suit whatsoever, unless it shall be expressly alleged in the declaration in the action wherein the recovery shall be had, and which shall be in an action upon the case, only, that such acts were done maliciously, and without any reasonable and probable cause."

Sec. 2 enacts,

"That such plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover against such justice any penalty which shall have been levied, nor any damages or costs whatsoever, in case such justice shall prove at the trial that such plaintiff was guilty of the offence whereof he had been convicted, or on account of which he had been apprehended, or had otherwise suffered, and that he had undergone no greater punishment than was assigned by law to such offence."

The foregoing enactment applies only to convictions, and to those alone that have been quashed. (Rogers v. Jones, 5 Dowl. and Ry. 268; Massey v. Johnson, 12 East, 67; Gray v. Cookson, 16 East, 13.)

It is here unnecessary to specify the various instances in which a justice may render himself liable to an action of trespass in respect of a conviction by him; suffice it to say, that if his conviction upon its face shews a want of jurisdiction, or he has been guilty in any way of excess (Crepps v. Durden, Cowp. 640; Davis v. Copper, 10 B. & C. 28; Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & S. 314), or has not followed the necessary forms prescribed by the statute (Davison v. Gill, 1 East, 64; R. v. Broderip, 5 B. & C. 240; Mitchell v. Forster, 12 Ad. & Ell. 72), or he has mistaken his powers and has committed where he should have issued a warrant of distress (Hill v. Bateman, 1 Str. 710), or if he commits a party for re-examination for an unreasonable time, he will be liable in trespass (Davis v. Copper, 10 B. & C. 28; Edwards v. Ferris, 7 C. & P. 542); and he will, in the event of an improper conviction, be liable in damages for all the consequences that generally follow upon the execution of a warrant: as the party being handcuffed, having his hair cut short at the prison, &c. (Mason v. Barker, 1 Car. & Kir. 100.)

Notice of action.—Before any action can be commenced against a justice of the peace for any thing done by him in the execution of his office, it is necessary that notice should be given him of such intended proceeding. This is provided for by the 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, which, by sec. 1, enacts, "that no writ shall be sued out against, nor any copy of any process at the suit of a subject shall be served on any justice until notice in writing of such intended writ or process shall have been delivered to him, or left at the usual place of his abode by the attorney or agent for the party who intends to sue or cause the same to be sued out or served at least one calendar month before the suing out or serving the same; in which notice shall be clearly and explicitly contained the cause of action which such party hath or claimeth to have against such justice of the peace; on the back of which notice shall be indorsed the name of such attorney or agent, together with the place of his abode, who shall be entitled to the fee of 20s. for the preparing and serving such notice, and no more." The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, which renders uniform the notice of action in all cases, provides that it shall be as above, viz. one calendar month. By section 3 of the 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, it is provided that the plaintiff in such action shall not recover, unless at the trial he proves that he has given such notice; and, by section 5, that he shall give no evidence at the trial of any cause of action, except such as is contained in the notice. The 2nd section of this enactment enables justices to tender amends and plead such tender, and pay the amount into court.

Numerous decisions have taken place upon the construction of this Act, which applies only to cases in which the justice acts as such, and under colour of his magisterial functions, and not to cases in which he had no colour of authority, and could not be supposed to believe that he had. (Heseldine v. Grove, 12 L. J. M. C. 10; Wedge v. Berkeley, 6 Ad. & Ell. 663; Cann v. Clipperton, 10 Ad. & Ell. 582, where most of the cases on the subject are collected; James v. Saunders, 10 Bing. 429.) A distress and replevin is not within the 24 Geo. 2 c. 44. (Fletcher v. Wilkins, 6 East, 283; Waterhouse v. Keen, 4 B. & C. 211.) The notice must be a formal one. (Lewis v. Smith, Holt's C. N.P. 27; Norris v. Smith, 10 Ad. & Ell. 188.) It is right also to name the description of process intended to be issued, though, indeed, this must be by writ of summons. It appears not to be essential to name in the notice all the parties intended to be sued, though the name of the party served must be inserted. (Jones v. Simpson, 1 C. & J. 174; Bar v. Jones, 5 Price, 168.) The form of action need not be mentioned, but the cause of action must be strictly described (Sabin v. Deburgh, 2 Camp. 196; Breese v. Jerdein, 12 Law J. Q.B. 234); though it is much safer to describe the form of action itself. In describing the cause of action, great care must be used to set it out clearly and explicitly. (Towsey v. White, 5 B. & C. 133; Breese v. Jerdein, supra; Martins v. Uppecher, 1 Dowl. N.S. 553; 3 Q. B. 662.) The notice, however, will not be construed with the same strictness as the pleadings in a cause, and it need not, therefore, be so precise in its allegations; it will be sufficient if it informs the party substantially of the ground of complaint (Jones v. Bird, 5 B. & Ald. 837); but inasmuch as the plaintiff will not be permitted to go into any cause of action except such as is contained in the notice, it is of importance that he should give a full description of the injury for which he seeks compensation. (Robson v. Spearman, 3 B. & Ald. 493; Stringer v. Martyn, 6 Esp. 134; Aked v. Stocks, 4 Bing. 509.) So the notice must be specific that an action will be brought, and should not leave this fact at all conditional. (Norris v. Smith, 10 Ad. & Ell. 188.) The notice, also, must be indorsed with the name and address of the attorney or agent for the party (Morgan v. Leach, 10 M. & W. 558); it need not be signed by any person. It is sufficiently indorsed with the initials only of the Christian name of the attorney (Meyhew v. Lock, 7 Taunt. 63; James v. Swift, 4 B. & C. 681), where the attorney is described as at his offices, it is sufficient. (Roberts v. Williams, 1 Gale, 315, 4 Dowl. 483; Stears v. Smith, 6 Esp. 138; Orborn v. Gough, 3 B. & P. 551; Taylor v. Fenwick, 7 T. R. 635, n.) The day both of serving the notice, and of bringing the action, must be excluded. (Young v. Higgin, 6 M. & W. 49; Webb v. Fairman, 3 M. & W. 473; Reg. v. The Justices of Shropshire, 8 Ad. & Ell. 173; Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 2 New Sess. Ca. 73.)

Limitation of action.—By the 8th section of the 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, it is enacted, "That no action shall be brought against any justice of the peace for anything done in the execution of his office, or against any constable, headborough, or other officer or person acting as aforesaid, unless commenced within six months after the act committed." Although this is the general enactment upon the subject, it will not be safe to be guided in all cases by it; since it frequently occurs that the legislature imposes other limitation in particular cases: and by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 5, it is enacted, "That from and after the passing of this Act, the period within which any action may be brought for anything done under the authority or in pursuance of any such Act or Acts (public local and personal, or local and personal Acts) shall be two years; or in case of continuing damage, then within one year after such damage shall have ceased; and that so much of any clause, provision, or enactment, by which any other time or period of limitation is appointed or enacted, shall be, and the same is hereby repealed."

The six months are to be reckoned exclusive of the day of committing the act. (Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & C. 603.) Where, however, the injury is a continuing one, as imprisonment, the period may be calculated from the last day of it. (Massey v. Johnson, 12 East, 67; Weston v. Fournier, 14 East, 491; Collins v. Rose, 5 M. & W. 194; Lloyd v. Wigney, 4 M. & P. 222.)

By the 21 Jac. c. 12, s. 5, actions against magistrates for anything done in the execution of their office, can only be brought in the county in which the acts complained of were committed.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE number and importance of the Reports compel the curtailment of every other department of the LAW TIMES. We have space only to refer to them generally. The Reports of the rules nisi granted in both the great cases of Woolmer v. Toby and Walstab v. Spottiswoode, shew that the Judges are quite as much puzzled as the Profession and the public, to know what is the real state of the law. As every contribution is useful in such a state of perplexity, we have ventured our mite of argument. The views we have taken are, we believe, novel; of their soundness the reader will judge.

It will be observed that we have been unable, for want of room, to bring down the reports of all the cases to our prescribed period of Wednesday evening. In the Exchequer they could not be completed beyond Friday last. Next week a double number will, we hope, enable us to bring up the arrears. And during the next busy two months we shall probably be obliged to resort to double numbers almost weekly, in order to keep pace with the heavy business of the courts.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

INFLUENCE OF RAILWAYS.—In the civil court at Chester last week Mr. Jervis, Q.C. applied to the learned judge, Mr. Justice Williams, to adjourn the court to half-past nine o'clock the next morning, on the ground that, as the trains did not arrive before that time, it would be a great convenience to the special jurors who were summoned for that day, and who, in consequence, were not likely to be in court before that hour. His Lordship observed, that the railways had now become the masters of almost all the trade, and everything else in the country, and even her Majesty had to submit to their arrangements. He supposed, therefore, as he was only one of her Majesty's commissioners, no alternative remained for him but quietly to strike and submit likewise.

GUILDHALL. — METROPOLITAN RAILWAY JUNCTION COMPANY.—On Monday, the magistrates, Mr. Alderman Gibbs and Sir Peter Laurie, gave their decision upon the complaint of Mr. Jones, the chairman of a committee of shareholders in the Metropolitan Railway Junction Company, against the solicitor to that company, for neglecting to file at the company's registration office a list of the subscribers, and the copy of the form of a letter of allotment. The objection raised by Mr. Wire, on behalf of the defendant, to the complaint, was that the clause which required such particulars to be filed did not apply to railways, inasmuch as the judges had decided that such works were not within the meaning of the Act, where they were not specially referred to in the clause, and there was no such special reference to railways by name in the 4th clause, on which the complaints rested. He further urged that the letter of allotment was not a circular or handbill addressed to the public or subscribers, nor did it relate to the formation or modification of the company. Sir P. Laurie and Mr. Alderman Gibbs said they were both of opinion that the 4th clause of the Joint Stock Company's Act did not affect the registration of such a document as a letter of allotment, and the 28th clause could not be made to apply to railways; so that they dismissed the first and second informations. With regard to the third, against Mr. Barber, the solicitor, for not registering the list of subscribers, they were of opinion that he should have given in the names and residences of the subscribers to the company, within one month of his obtaining them, and having neglected to do so, they adjudged him to pay a penalty of 10l. The magistrates said they had been assisted by a legal authority, so as to come to a sound judgment, and they were satisfied they were right.—An application was made for costs, but refused, when Mr. Wire said he was not satisfied with the decision arrived at by the magistrates, and that he should appeal during the month allowed him by law.

"I'M NO ORATOR."—At the East-Riding sessions, which took place at Beverley last week, a prisoner was tried for stealing an axe, and at the close of the case for the prosecution, the jury were told to consider their verdict. Having done so, they turned towards the bench, and on being asked whether they found the prisoner guilty of the offence or not, the foreman of that body hung down his head, as if ashamed of the duty imposed upon him, and would not for some time speak a single word. He was then asked by the chairman if they (the jury) had all agreed upon one verdict, to which he, in a very feeble tone of voice, scarcely audible, said, "I agree with the other," or something to that effect. On again being asked by the clerk of the peace what their verdict was, the frightened foreman, with much to do, muttered out the following short sentence, which occasioned much hearty laughter in the court—"I'm no orator." However, on being informed that he had only to say whether the prisoner was guilty or not, he rose up his head, and with a smile upon his face, the true index of good temper, in a sonorous voice replied, "Not Guilty." The emphatic manner in which he pronounced the words "Not Guilty," again threw the Court into laughter.—Yorkshireman.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS OF ARTICLED CLERKS.—It is intimated by the examiners of persons applying to be admitted attorneys, that the requisite examination will take place on the 30th inst. The articles of clerkship and assignment, if any, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations provided by the judges, must be left at the usual place on or before the 22nd inst. Where the articles have not expired, but will do so during the Term, which commences to-day, the candidate may be examined conditionally, but the articles must be left as above within the first seven days of Term, and answers up to that time. A paper of questions will be given to each candidate, containing questions to be answered in writing under the heads of preliminary, common, and statute law, practice of the courts, conveyancing, equity and practice of the courts, bankruptcy, criminal law, and proceedings before justices of the peace. Each candidate is required to answer all the preliminary questions, and it is expected he should answer in one or more of the other heads of inquiry.—Globe.

IRISH LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

On the 16th of April, being the first day of Term, the following gentlemen were called to the Bar by the Lord Chancellor, having been previously sworn in before Mr. Justice Crampton in the Queen's Bench:—Daniel Lea Lynch, Theophilus Thompson, William Irvine, jun., William Basil Orpin, George Tighe Hopkins, Robert Griffin, John Hamilton, Wilder-Cooley, William Hastings Beckett, and Hugh Halliday, esqrs.

Mr. Brewster, her Majesty's Solicitor-General, and Mr. Hatchell, Q.C. were elected Benchers of the Honourable Society of the King's Inns, in the room of the late Judges Moore and Johnson. The vacancy created by the death of J. J. Fealony, esq. Q.C. will, it is said, be filled up by the election of Mr. Tomb, Q.C. of the North-East Circuit.

J. S. Townsend, esq. Master in Chancery, has resigned; Mr. Serjeant Howley, Q.C., Mr. Baldwin, Q.C., Mr. Brooke, esq. Q.C. are severally mentioned as his probable successors.

By the death of Artrim Hill Cornwallis Pollock, esq. the situations of Clerk of the Crown for the County of the City of Dublin, and for the Counties of Dublin, Carlow, Kildare, Kings County, Leamford, Meath, Westmeath, Wexford, and Wicklow, are vacant.

THE MAGISTRACY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Christopher D. Bellow, Richard D'Arcy, and Ormsby Elwood, esqs. to the Commission of the Peace for the County of Galway.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A Correspondent thus replies to a query put last week:—

In answer to your correspondent, who wishes to be directed to the law respecting the right (if any) of a husband to chastise his wife, the following, in my opinion, may be relied upon:—"By some ancient authorities it was considered that a husband has it so far under his power that he might give his wife moderate correction. But they also held, that this right was confined within reasonable bounds, and the husband was prohibited from using any violence to his wife. Alien quam ad virum ex cause regiminis et castigationis uxoris sua licite et rationabiliter pertinet. (Moore, 874, F.N.B. 80.) The civil law gave the husband the same or a larger authority over his wife, allowing him, for some misdemeanor, flagellis et fustibus acriter verberare uxorem; for others only modicam castigationem adhibere. (Nov. 117, c. 14, and Van Leeuwen, in loc.) But with us, in the polite reign of Chas. 2, the power of correction began to be doubted. (1 Sid. 113; Lord Leigh's case, 3 Keb. 433.)"

Perhaps I need not add, for the further information of your correspondent, that a wife may now have security of the peace against her husband (vide Lord Leigh's case, ubi sup. 2 Lev. 128), or in return, a husband against his wife. (Sim's case, Str. 1207.) Yet the lowest rank of people, who were always fond of the old common law, still claim and exert their ancient privilege in this respect. And I believe the courts of common law will still permit a husband to restrain a wife of her liberty in case of any gross misbehaviour. (R. v. Lister, Str. 478; Child v. Hardyman, lb. 875; Re Cockrane, 8 Dowl. 630.)

"CAMBRIENSIS" thus writes:—

Considerable and useful discussion has lately taken place in the LAW TIMES on the subject of short conveyances, but little has lately been said on the necessity of a short and easy mode of recovering small debts in country districts. Those counties which contain no courts but only the county court are badly off, more particularly the Welsh counties.

The present circuitous, vexatious, and expensive proceedings in the different county courts, operate as a denial of justice, and honest plaintiffs are deterred thereby from attempting to recover small debts. A knavish defendant has only to instruct one of the numerous sharp county court practitioners, and lay down a few shillings, when the action is forthwith defended, and every possible delay consistent with what is termed "the practice," is resorted to. If the plaintiff perseveres, he may be able to get to trial in six or nine months' time, at the expense of from three to six pounds, and in the majority of cases the plaintiff never obtains a single farthing towards his debt and costs.

I appeal to every respectable practitioner, and to the public generally, as to the truth of the above statements, and whether it is not high time for the Augean stable to be cleansed by some master-spirits.

THE WINDING UP.

THE Bill for enabling inchoate Railway Companies to wind up their affairs and dissolve is before Parliament, and, from the outline of the plan, as stated by Lord DALHOUSIE, it appears to be efficient for its purpose.

It was intended to provide that power should be given to the provisional directors, or governing body of any of these companies, which would enable them, if they thought proper, to convene a meeting of the scripholders for the purpose of considering whether they ought to dissolve the company or not. It was intended to provide that in case the provisional directors did not think proper to convene such meeting, that then, on the requisition of a small number of shareholders, say five, the governing body should be required to call such meeting of the company, for the purpose of taking into consideration the question of winding up their affairs or proceeding with the bill, and that such meeting should have power of deciding on the matter, provided that due notice should be given in the Gazette and in the newspapers, and that a sufficient time should elapse before the meeting was held, so that so far as possible all parties interested in the matter should be aware of the object of the meeting, and should have an opportunity of being forthcoming at the meeting. It was intended that at that meeting no other question save that of the dissolution of the company should be taken into consideration. There were provisions in the bill as to the election of chairman, and other matters of detail, with which it was not necessary he should trouble their lordships. It might, however, be right that he should state that provision was made for the selection of scrutineers to examine the votes given at the meeting. The power of voting was intended to be given to all who were actual owners of the stock of the company, whether they were originally scripholders who had not parted with their first allotments, or whether they were persons who had purchased the scrip of others. He might state also, that the votes could be given by the holders in person, or, following the analogy of existing companies, that they should be given by proxy, that the production of scrip should entitle the holder to vote in person or by proxy. It was also intended that there should be a further provision to enable parties holding scrip to go before the Court of Chancery, or before a justice of the peace, and on production of the scrip, and on the numbers being verified by the court or by the justice, the certificate to that effect could be transmitted to the meeting, and allowed in the votes by proxy. If it appeared at the meeting that on the votes being taken there was a clear majority of the scripholders in the company, either present in person or by their proxies, in favour of a dissolution of the company, that then such dissolution should take place. As the bill stood, the votes would be given on the scale provided in the case of joint-stock companies; that is, a vote for every share up to ten, and then an additional vote for every five shares up to fifty, and one vote for every ten shares up to one hundred. They had taken this scale in preparing the bill; but then, as it was evident that if a clear majority of the whole number of stockholders in the company were required, in order to empower the meeting to dissolve the company, that a dissolution would be a very difficult thing to effect, it was further provided that if three-fifths of the whole stock of the company as represented at the meeting, either in person or by proxy, were in favour of a dissolution, power should be, in such case, given to dissolve the company, provided that the stock represented at the meeting shall not be less than one-third of the entire stock of the company. The object of the bill was to provide for a fair representation of the sense of the company. Of course, if a majority of the whole company should be in favour of a dissolution, there would be no difficulty; but inasmuch as it was possible that small meetings might be packed by the directors to attain their own purposes, it was required that at least one-third of the whole stock of the company should be represented at the meeting. If at such meeting it were decided that a dissolution should take place, it was then proposed that the meeting should next determine the mode in which the affairs of the company were to be wound up. It was the object of the government in preparing this bill to avoid as much as possible any alteration of the existing liabilities, or of the remedies of creditors against the persons interested in these companies under the present law. It was proposed, therefore, that it should be left to the meeting themselves to decide whether they would leave the affairs of their partnership to be wound up according to the law applicable in ordinary partnership; but if that course were objected to, then the company were to have power to elect for themselves an official trustee, who should be empowered to act with an official trustee appointed as under the Court of Bankruptcy. These two trustees were to take upon themselves the satisfying of all claims against the company, and of then dividing the remainder of the funds, if any, amongst the shareholders. It was not intended that the liabilities of those who were now liable by law should be affected by this bill. It was provided that if there were a residue after all claims were paid, it should be divided among the shareholders; but if the amount were not sufficient to meet these claims, then that the residue should be made good by those who were now liable.

Let us subjoin a few words of exhortation to the Profession. A flood of litigation, yielding a present harvest to the lawyers, has been inundating the country, carrying anxiety, distress, and ruin, into thousands of families. It is notorious that a very large proportion of the claims thus attempted to be enforced, under terror of legal process, are gross impositions or monstrous over-charges. The claimants are, for the most part, swindlers, who, having induced persons thoughtlessly to lend their names to provisional committees, now turn round upon them, and avail themselves of the absurdities of our law of partnership, to plunder the victims they had entrapped. We entreat members of the Profession to be very careful not to lend themselves to proceedings of such a character—not to multiply actions for the sake of increasing costs,—not to sanction accounts that are extortionate,—but when instructed to recover a demand upon innocent members of a committee, themselves the victims of fraud, to ask no more than, upon an examination of the account, they are satisfied is really due; and, instead of issuing a multitude of writs, to use their best endeavours to procure an amicable settlement by contributions from all parties liable. By such conduct the lawyers may not reap so great present gain as from the reckless war of writs now proceeding, but they will, in the end, secure the respect and confidence of the community, which, we regret to say, has been not a little shaken by the events of the last six months.

We feel assured that the hint will be taken in good part, and the LAW TIMES will be excused if its anxiety for the reputation and influence of the Profession should have induced it, at this moment of temptation to conduct injurious to that reputation, to trespass somewhat beyond its province, and play the part of an adviser.

VERULAM FORMS.

THE entire series of Forms in Parochial and Magistrates' Law so long in preparation by Messrs. KNIGHT, and the whole of which has, by an arrangement with them, been placed at the service of the members of the Verulam Society, at the Society's prices (that is at twenty per cent. below the published price) is now ready, and may be had in any quantity, by order, at the LAW TIMES office. A printed list of the forms will be sent to any applicant.

A number of valuable law books published by the same establishment are included in this liberal offer to the members of the Verulam Society.

THE LAW DIGEST.

Two of the five numbers that will comprise this useful work are now published. The others are in the press. As it is intended to be bound with the volume of the LAW TIMES just completed, subscribers are recommended to withhold their volumes from the binder until they can add this Digest, which will contribute so greatly to the value of the volume for the purposes of reference. In future the Digest will be completed simultaneously with the volume, so that a like delay in binding will not, we hope, be again necessary.

LIABILITY OF ALLOTTEES.

WE have received a short pamphlet by Mr. GEORGE J. SHAW, maintaining the non-liability of allottees. As this argument has been much cited in the newspapers, and especially by those who desire that allottees should escape from contribution to the expenses incurred on the faith of their agreements, we proceed to examine its validity.

We quite agree with Mr. SHAW that the case of Woolmer v. Toby is not a decision upon the point, and in all probability will not decide it, for it will go off upon one of the incidental questions.

It is remarkable that Mr. SHAW omits all notice of the Joint Stock Companies Act, and rests entirely upon the old cases. Either he was not aware of the provisions of that Act, or he considers that they do not affect the question.

Granting the latter to have been his opinion, let us see if it be a sound one.

The first step is to ascertain what were the precise points decided by those cases, and whether they are in any manner affected by the provisions of the Joint Stock Companies Act.

Mr. SHAW first cites Dickenson v. Valpy (10 B. & C. 128). In that case two points were raised: first, whether the directors had authority to bind the shareholders by drawing and accepting bills of exchange; second, whether the facts that the defendant had applied for shares, paid instalments thereon, attended meetings at the place of business, and signed the deed, were sufficient evidence that he was a partner. The case was decided upon the first point, which has nothing to do with the present question; and although a query was raised upon the second, it would not now be entertained for a moment in the face of recent decisions, in which the mere attendance at a meeting, without signing any deed or making any payment, has been held to constitute a partnership with its liabilities. If Mr. Baron PARKE'S dictum be worth anything, there can be very few valid partnerships, and four-fifths of the provisional committee-men might escape their present troubles. This case is worthless.

The next case cited is For v. Clifton (6 Bing. 776). In that the point raised and decided was simply, what constituted a partnership, so as to make the defendants liable for the debts of the concern. Only a few shares had been allotted, fewer still had paid the deposits, only sixty-five had signed the deed. The defendants had applied for shares and paid deposits, but only one of them had signed the deed. The point at issue was distinctly put by TINDAL, C. J.—“The main and important question in this case undoubtedly is, whether, under the circumstances proved at the trial, the defendants were actually partners in the company.” And it was held that they were not partners.

But very different is the question between the allottee and the parties with whom he has entered into an agreement to take shares and pay deposits. It is not pretended that allottees are partners, or the remedy would be in equity, and not at common law. This case, therefore, is altogether beside the question.

But, argues Mr. SHAW, the case of Nockells v. Crosby (3 B. & C. 824) decided that the subscriber to an abortive scheme might recover back the whole amount of deposits paid, without deduction of any part for expenses.

But is that case on all fours with the present one?

The defendants had put forth a scheme for a tonne. The plaintiffs and others had agreed to join it, and paid deposits; but nothing was done towards carrying it into execution—it remained a mere scheme. And BAYLEY, J. observed, that “on all projects some expense must be incurred before many members join the concern. Upon whom should that fall? Undoubtedly, if the scheme proves abortive, it should fall upon the original projectors, and not upon those who advance their money upon the faith of its going on.” HOLROYD, J. said, “I think that the expenses incurred in setting a scheme on foot are not to be paid out of the concern, unless they are adopted when it is actually in operation.” And LITTLERDALE, J. observed, “If persons set a scheme on foot, and assume to be the directors or managers, all the expenses incurred before the scheme is in actual operation must, in the first instance, be borne by them. When it is in operation, the expenses and charge of management should be borne by the concern, and then it may be fair that the preliminary expenses should be paid in the same way.”

The question, then, that arises in the application of this rule is, when a scheme is to be considered in actual operation; for, according to the dicta of the three judges in Nockells v. Crosby, until it is in actual operation (they do not say “until it is completed”) the subscribers cannot be compelled to contribute to the expenses, but afterwards they may.

Hence it is that the Joint Stock Companies Act comes to our aid.

Before that Act no scheme was in operation until all the money was subscribed, and the deed actually signed.

But the Joint Stock Companies Act has provided for putting schemes into “actual operation,” at an earlier period. It has given to them a provisional existence, with defined provisional powers; enabled them to receive subscriptions and take deposits, and do all other acts necessary for carrying the plan into effect. And surely the legislature did not contemplate that these necessary acts could be done without money; and for what purpose is the limited deposit of 10s. per share allowed to be taken, if not to meet that necessary expenditure?

The statute allows the promoters to assume the name of the company, on provisional registration. Is not that being “in actual operation” for the purposes permitted by the Act?

And if provisional registration be not “actual operation,” what is it? At what point does a railway company, for instance, come into “actual operation,” if not at this stage of its legally recognized existence? If not then, it cannot be till the Act of Parliament is obtained, and if that fails, the directors are, according to the popular construction of the case cited, liable to pay all the expenses.

There is another principle which has been quite overlooked in this discussion, namely, that a party shall not be suffered to take advantage of his own wrong. But this rule would be violated if it were permitted to allottees, first, by their non-fulfilment of their contract to prevent the scheme from being carried into “actual operation,” and then, to plead the consequences of their own default as an excuse for that non-fulfilment.

There remains now but one point to be considered, and that is, granting the authority of the directors to allot shares, and that provisional registration is a putting of the scheme into “actual operation,” so as to place it without the range of the case of Nockells v. Crosby, what is the nature of the contract, under such circumstances, entered into between the promoters of the company and the allottees?

Mr. SHAW lays down three propositions:—

First, he says, it is decided by For v. Clifton and Dickenson v. Valpy that an allottee enters into a conditional contract only.

It may be fairly questioned whether these cases so decide. Dickenson v. Valpy is, as we have shewn, no authority at all, and it may be argued that the terms of the contract in the other case imply conditions which cannot be implied from the express terms of the contract in the cases now contended. But, granting that the contract be conditional; that the application for shares, and the letter of allotment, together do not constitute the whole contract, but that the prospectus and a multitude of other considerations belong to it, the question still arises, what, under existing circumstances, are the conditions of the contract, failing which, it is avoided?

We contend that, if it be permitted to import into the contract more than appears upon the face of it, the implied condition on the part of the provisional committee can only be that they will do all that reasonably can be done to carry out the scheme; there is nothing from which the most forced construction could imply a condition that if the scheme failed they would pay all the expenses—still less that they would do so if it failed, not through any act of theirs, but by reason of the non-fulfilment of the undertaking entered into by the allottees. The committee contract to do precisely what the law empowers and authorizes them to do—neither more nor less. If any thing can be imported into the contract, if its terms may be construed by reference to something extra the written language, what better interpreter can there be than the law by which the entire proceeding is regulated? It is a fiction of our law, that its letter and spirit are presumed to be known to every person arrived at years of discretion; and all acts done are presumed to be done with that knowledge. If, therefore, there be a statute affecting some subject, all acts done relating to that subject are presumed to be done with reference to the statute by which these acts, if doubtful, will be interpreted. When, therefore, an allottee contracts to take shares, he does so with reference to the statute that empowers the party with whom he deals to issue them; the terms of the statute are the implied conditions (if any) of the contract, and those terms are, that the promoters shall receive deposits and do all other acts requisite for the carrying out of the scheme; and which receipt of deposits and which acts the allottee, by his implied contract, recognizes and authorizes. If the allottee fail in his part of the contract, and thereby prevent the promoters from performing their part of the contract, an action will lie.

It may be further contended that, the payment of the deposit being a necessary preliminary to the carrying out of the scheme, the allottee is first bound to perform his condition precedent; and then, if the promoters fail to perform their part, an action might possibly be maintained against them by the allottee who has performed his.

Hence it is that the cases of Walstab v. Spoffis-woode and Woolmer v. Toby, supposing them to be both supported, are not, as they appear at the first view, contradictory. Indeed, they rather support each other; and Mr. SHAW'S conclusion is not warranted by a more critical review of the cases and the principles upon which they are founded, into which the interest of the question has induced us to enter.

The results at which we have arrived are—

1st. That the contract of an allottee to pay the deposit is a condition precedent to the contract of the promoters to carry out the scheme, for breach of which an action may be maintained.

2nd. That this conclusion is not at all inconsistent with the argument in Nockells v. Crosby, that if, after the allottee has performed his condition, the promoters fail to perform theirs, an action for their breach may be maintained against them by the allottee.

3rd. That the contract is regulated by the terms of the statute under whose provisions it is made, and that the contract of the promoters is to do only that which the statute empowers them to do, namely, to the best of their ability to endeavour to carry out the scheme.

4th. That the previous cases do not bear the precise construction put upon them, and are materially modified by the provisions of the Joint Stock Companies Act, under which companies have a recognized existence, and are “actually in operation” immediately on provisional registration.

The question has here been argued abstractedly from technical questions, as to the proper plaintiffs, or conditions or exceptions in the form of application, or of the letter of allotment. These are, of course, altogether beside the main question of the liability of allottees, and must be argued on distinct grounds.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

A Treatise on the Law relating to Patent Privileges, for the sole use of Inventions; and the Practice of obtaining Letters Patent for Inventions; with an Appendix of Statutes, Rules, Forms, &c. &c. By W. M. HINDMARCH, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London, 1846. Stevens and Norton.

THIS is the most elaborate work on the Law of Patents which has been yet offered to the Profession. Its completeness will be best shewn by a short summary of the contents.

After an introduction, descriptive of the objects of letters patent, the author proceeds to treat of the grantor of a patent, and the power of the Crown to grant the sole use of inventions, and then of the grantee of a patent privilege. The fourth chapter describes the grant of a patent, and the construction of it; the fifth, the nature and qualities of an art or invention which may have been made the subject of a patent; and the sixth, of the duration of a privilege granted by a patent, and its prolongation. The next subject treated of is the very important one of the Specification of an Invention for the purpose of procuring a patent, which is followed by a statement of the law and practice relating to the confirmation of patents, their alteration and amendment, specifications and enrolments, and the nature of the right or property of an inventor in his invention, and the disposition of it. The Remedies for Patents and for the Public respectively are next reviewed, and then the evidence to be given in actions respecting letters patent. A concluding chapter treats of the Practice respecting Patents; containing the most minute instructions for preparing and enrolling specifications, and altering patents and enrolments, full particulars of the practice respecting disclaimers and memorandums of alteration under stat. 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, s. 1, and of the practice of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council respecting the confirmation and prolongation of patent privileges.

An Appendix contains a most elaborate collection of Statutes, Rules of Practice, and Tables of Fees and Stamps, and forms and entries in all the variety of proceedings both at law and in equity. There is a table of cases cited, and an extensive index. Mr. HINDMARSH has evidently bestowed a great deal of labour upon the composition of this work, which will, we doubt not, be appreciated by the Profession. The hand of a man of business is visible in its preparation, and that is of itself a great recommendation.

The subject offers nothing of sufficient moment to our readers to justify extract at this busy season, when the Reports of the Term are crowding our columns, and all other matters must give place to them.

Precedents of Conveyances and other Instruments relating to the Transfer of Land to Railway Companies; with Introductory matter and Explanatory Notes. By HENRY TRYWHIT FRENCH and T. HIBBERT WARE, Barristers-at-Law. London, 1846. Reader.

ALTHOUGH railways, and all that concerns them, present a very different aspect now from that which they offered a few months since; still they are going on, and must continue to extend, however slowly. Therefore there must be need of such a collection of precedents as this, most of which are stated to be adaptations of drafts framed under railway Acts, passed before the Consolidation Acts came into operation. The object of the work is to afford some assistance in the preparation of the instruments of more ordinary occurrence, relating to the acquisitions of land in England and Wales for railway purposes.

The Precedents are arranged in conformity with the divisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, under the heads of—1. Freeholds; 2. Copyholds; 3. Common or Waste Lands; 4. Lands in Mortgage; 5. Rent Charges; 6. Lands on Lease. But besides these, there is a collection of other general forms, such as nominations of surveyors, valuations, and nominations of trustees to receive compensation; forms for arbitration, for jury proceedings, and a variety of miscellaneous precedents.

Notes are appended, where necessary; and these seem to be written with accuracy, and to display sound judgment. The index is very copious, as that of a law book should be; and although we cannot test the accuracy or the value of precedents by perusal, they appear to be artistically drawn; and, if what they appear, the work must be an acceptable addition to the library of the practitioner.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Friday, March 13.

ANDERSON v. GARRARD.

Practice—New Orders of May 1845—Infant defendant out of the jurisdiction—Service of subpoena—Assignment of guardian.

Where an infant defendant, resident out of the jurisdiction, has been served with a subpoena under an order made in pursuance of Acts of 2 Wm. 4, c. 35, and 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 82, the Court will not order an appearance to be entered for such infant, until a guardian has been assigned under the 32nd Order of May 1845, in precisely the same way, and after the same notice, as if the infant defendant had been resident within the jurisdiction.

In this cause Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce gave leave in July last that subpoenas should be served upon two adult defendants in the cause and their infant children resident in Virginia, in the United States. By an Act (2 Wm. 4, c. 35) for "remedying the inconvenience and delays of justice, arising from the defect of jurisdiction in courts of equity, to effectuate the service of their process in such parts of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland as are not within the jurisdiction of such courts respectively," it was enacted that it might be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England, upon special motion of the complainant in any suit instituted concerning lands, or tenements, or hereditaments in England or Wales, to direct that service in any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and in the Isle of Man respectively, of any subpoena or letter missive, and of all subsequent process to be had thereon, upon any defendant or defendants in such suit then residing in such part of the said United Kingdom or Isle of Man, in which he, she, or they should be so served, should be deemed good service of, or be made upon, such defendants, upon such terms, and in such manner, and at such time, as to the Court should seem reasonable; and thereupon the Court might proceed upon the service so made, as if the same had been duly made within the jurisdiction of the Court.

By 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 82, the previous Act was extended to suits concerning any lien, judgment, or intromission upon any lands, tenements, or hereditaments in England or Wales, money in any government or other public stock, or shares in public companies; and it was enacted that the provisions authorizing the Court to direct the service in any part of the United Kingdom, &c. of any subpoena or letter missive, and of subsequent process, upon defendants residing in such parts of the United Kingdom, &c. in which they should be so served, should be deemed good service upon such defendants, &c. should be and was thereby extended to any defendants in such suits as thereinbefore mentioned, who should appear by affidavit to be resident in any place, specifying the same, out of the United Kingdom. And after directing the method of proceeding upon applications for such orders, the Act directs that afterwards, upon an affidavit of such service had, the Court might order an appearance to be entered for such party, in such manner and at such time as the Court should direct.

On the 12th March a motion was made before the Vice-Chancellor, for leave to enter an appearance for all the defendants, adult and infant, upon an affidavit that they had been duly served with the subpoenas, according to the provisions of the Act, and the order of July; the Vice-Chancellor thought the statutes did not apply to infant defendants, because the word "resident" implied an act of volition, of which infants were by law incapable, and he therefore declined to decide upon the motion, but recommended an application should be made to the Lord Chancellor.

Bevir, for the motion, said, the only authority for the application was the case of Jones v. Geddes (9 Jur. 1009), (6th Dec. 1845), in which the Vice-Chancellor of England had made an order, under the 32nd General Order of May 1845, assigning a guardian to infants resident in Scotland.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What is the course of proceeding if the infants are resident here?

Bevir.—The course is to move for the appointment of guardians under the 32nd Order of May 1845. That Order directs that, "if upon default made by a defendant in not appearing to, or not answering a bill, it appears to the Court that such defendant is an infant, so that he is unable of himself to defend the suit, the Court may, upon the application of the plaintiff, order that one of the solicitors of the Court be assigned guardian of such defendant, by whom he may appear to, and answer, or may answer the bill, and defend the suit." But no such order is to be made unless it appears to the Court, on the hearing of such application, that the subpoena to appear to and answer the bill was duly served, and that notice of such application was, after the expiration of the time allowed for appearing to or answering the bill, and at least six days before the hearing of the application, served upon, or left at the dwelling-house of the person with whom, or under whose care, said defendant was at the time of serving the subpoena, and (in case of such defendant being an infant not residing with or under the care of his father or guardian) that notice of such application was also served upon, or left at the dwelling-house of the father or guardian of such infant, unless the Court at the time of hearing such application thinks fit to dispense with such last-mentioned service."

In the present case the infants lived with their father and mother, in Virginia, who had been served with the subpoenas, and were themselves defendants.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What reason is there for dispensing with the service of the notice in this case more than in ordinary cases?

Bevir.—Your lordship then will give leave to serve the infants, in America, with notice under the 32nd Order?

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Yes; that will do.

Re PARRY, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Continuance of gratuities allowed by the lunatic.

Prior supported a petition to confirm the Commissioner's report, which, amongst other things, approved of the continuance of an allowance of 10s. a week to Mary Draper. The petitioner was the committee of the person and estate, who was also sole next of kin and heir of the lunatic. The petition had stood over to produce affidavits as to the nature of the connection between the lunatic and Mary Draper. It appeared that she was a woman with whom the lunatic had some time since cohabited, but such cohabitation had ceased at the time of his lunacy, and she was resident at Southsea, at a distance from him. The allowances had been constantly paid for some time.

The LORD CHANCELLOR was disposed to make the order, if the evidence as to cessation of cohabitation was clear. For that purpose his lordship said he would look through the affidavits and decide.

The case has since been mentioned, and the allowance made.

Thursday, April 16.

Re DYCE SOMER, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Lunatic out of the jurisdiction—Repayment of an advance made to the lunatic—Recovery.

Jas. Parker supported a petition by Mr. Solaroli, the lunatic's brother-in-law, for the repayment of 600l. which he had advanced to the lunatic in Paris, where he is now resident at large, being deemed by the French authorities a person of sound mind, and competent to manage his person and affairs. Vouchers and affidavits to verify the advance, and proof that it actually came to the lunatic's hands having been given,

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I am satisfied with the evidence, and I think the sum ought to be allowed;

as, however, there must be a reference to the Commissioner upon other matters mentioned in the petition, I must have the finding of the Commissioner that this allowance is proper, in order to form some record in lunacy.

Turner and Lloyd, for the committee of the estate; and Bethell and Calvert, for the committee of the person, consented.

HALL v. LACK.

Practice—Appeal—Costs—Injunction.

Where, pending an appeal motion from an order dissolving an injunction, the cause was heard in the court below, when the injunction so dissolved had been revived in a modified form, upon the hearing of the appeal motion, no costs, which then formed the only question, were given to either side on the appeal; but the plaintiff, the appellant, having, by the non-performance of an undertaking he had given in the court below, when the injunction was granted, rendered an application to the Court necessary, it was held that he was properly ordered to pay the costs of the motion for dissolving the injunction.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff against an order of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, by which an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant from receiving a pension. The bill was filed to enforce a security for an annuity which Lack, a retired civil servant of the government, had given upon his pension of 1,000l. An injunction had been originally granted to restrain Sir William Boothby, the officer by whose hand the pension was payable, and the defendant, Lack, from paying or receiving, respecting any money on account of the pension or retiring allowance of the defendant Lack; and upon that motion, the plaintiff undertook to take certain proceedings required by the Court, by a specified time. Having failed to do so, the defendant Lack moved to dissolve the injunction, and the Vice-Chancellor having made Lack and two sureties on his behalf enter into recognizances to pay into court all sums received on account of the pension beyond 500l., dissolved the injunction, and directed the plaintiff to pay the costs of the motion.

Lee and Heathfield, for the plaintiff, the appellant.

James Parker and Roll, for the defendant Lack.

Elderton, for other defendants.

It having been stated that the cause itself would be heard by the Vice-Chancellor, the present motion was directed to stand over until after the hearing of the cause. On the 15th of April, the cause having been heard, and by the decrees the plaintiff had been directed to bring an action at law to try the validity of his annuity, and the injunction against the receipt of the pension by the defendant Lack was revived.

Parker and Roll, for the defendant.—The respondent stated that all the questions upon the appeal motion had been disposed of by the decree on the hearing, except the costs. The judgment given to secure the annuity had been set aside by the Court of Queen's Bench, on the defendant's application, but that Court had refused to set aside the grant of the annuity, on the ground that the Annuity Act gave the Court no power to do so in a summary way. When the injunction was granted, the plaintiff gave an undertaking to file a replication, and join in a commission and examine witnesses during Trinity Vacation, 1845, but he did not act up to that undertaking, as he filed his replication in July, and did not examine his witnesses during Trinity Vacation.

The defendant Lack then moved to dissolve the injunction, on account of the plaintiff's non-performance of his undertaking, for which the Vice-Chancellor thought no sufficient excuse was offered. He therefore dissolved the injunction, requiring the defendant to enter into the recognizance above stated, and the plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs of the motion. They contended that the plaintiff had rendered a motion necessary, and had an indulgence shown to him on the terms of paying the costs of the motion, and that on that short ground the defendant was entitled to the costs of this appeal without going into the merits. That, since the injunction was granted, the Court of Queen's Bench, a court of competent jurisdiction, had held that the judgment given for securing the annuity was not a valid one, which was a new circumstance. The plaintiff had obtained the injunction originally on giving an undertaking he had not performed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In consequence of the plaintiff's default, an application to the Court became necessary, and the Court gave the defendant the costs of that motion.

Roll.—Yes; and the judgment had been since found to be invalid.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What was the blot?

Roll.—That no money had been advanced, but that the sum for which the annuity had been given was the result of various bill and discount transactions. Then there was the collateral ground of the undertaking by plaintiff not having been performed, which alone would have rendered an application to the Court proper.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant had a right to make some application to the Court, the plaintiff having failed to perform his undertaking, and the question upon this appeal motion was, whether the order made upon that application was a proper order; that order gave the defendant costs. When this motion was opened, I understood that the cause would be heard in a few days, and I directed the motion to stand over. The cause has now been heard; but if I am to determine this question of costs, I must go into the whole question.

Some argument on the merits then took place, and Lee and Heathfield, for the plaintiffs, contended that as the cause was heard pending the argument of the appeal motion, no costs of the appeal should be given.

JUDGMENT.

Thursday, April 16.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—A motion having been made before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce to dissolve an injunction which restrained the defendant from receiving his pension, that motion was granted upon an undertaking by the plaintiff to do certain things prescribed to him. The plaintiff failed to do those things, and a second motion became necessary, and the injunction was then dissolved. Under this state of circumstances, I cannot say that the second motion was an improper one; and I am therefore of opinion that the costs of it must be paid by the plaintiff. By the decree subsequently made in the cause, the injunction thus dissolved has been revived, and is now standing. There are, therefore, circumstances in this motion which prevent me from giving the costs of the appeal against the order made on the motion. There will be no costs on either side on the appeal.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 23 and 24, 1846.

SEARLE v. LAW.

Turnpike bonds—Voluntary settlement.

A. L., by a voluntary deed, made an assignment of certain turnpike bonds and shares in certain public companies to a trustee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust for himself, A. L., and his assigns during his life and as he should appoint; and in default of such appointment, and so far as it should not extend after the decease of the said A. L., upon trust for the benefit of his great nephew A. L. then delivered to the trustee the bonds and share certificates which continued in the trustee's possession; but the settlor took no further steps for transferring such bonds or shares, or completing the assignment. A. L. the settlor, died in 1840. It appeared from the report of the Master, to whom the cause stood referred, that the deed did not effectually transfer the property. Held, that nothing passed by the deed; and that therefore the personal representatives of A. L. were entitled to the property.

The will stated that, by an indenture bearing date the 25th day of March, 1836, after reciting that Alexander Law, the uncle of the defendant, was lawfully possessed of or entitled to the sum of 2,000*l.* secured by twenty deeds poll on the Totnes turnpike-roads; and that he was possessed of or entitled unto twenty shares in the West of England Fire and Life Insurance Company; and also to ten shares of 100*l.* each of and in the capital of the National Provincial Bank of England, "and also my other forty shares if not disposed of to any persons during my life." And reciting that the said A. Law, the uncle, was desirous of making a settlement of the said sum of 2,000*l.* and the aforesaid shares in the said West of England Fire and Life Insurance Company, and National Provincial Bank of England respectively, and the interest, dividends, and proceeds thereof, for the benefit of himself and his great nephew, Alex. Law, and his issue; and for that purpose he had determined to assign the same respectively unto F. Searle, his executors, administrators and assigns, upon the trusts, and for the purposes thereafter declared. It was witnessed, that for and in consideration of the natural love and affection which the said Alex. Law, the uncle, had and bore for and towards his said great nephew, and in order to settle the said moneys, shares, and premises in manner thereafter mentioned, and for the nominal consideration therein expressed, he, the said Alex. Law, the uncle, did grant, bargain, sell, assign, transfer, and set over and confirm unto the said Francis Searle, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all that the sum of 2,000*l.*, secured by the said thereinbefore mentioned deeds poll, and all those said twenty shares of and in the capital stock of the said West of England Fire and Life Insurance Company, and also all those the aforesaid ten shares of 100*l.* each, in the capital of the National Provincial Bank of England, and all bonuses and sum and sums of money then or thereafter to become payable in respect of the same, any or either of them, and all interest, dividends, and accumulations thereof respectively to have, hold, receive, and take the said moneys, shares, property, and all and every other the premises thereby assigned, or intended so to be, unto the said Francis Searle, his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon the trusts, and to and for the ends, intents, and purposes thereafter expressed and declared of and concerning the same, and for the considerations and purposes aforesaid, the said Alexander Law, the uncle, did thereby make, ordain, constitute, and appoint the said Francis Searle, his executors and administrators, his true and lawful attorney and attorneys, in the name of him, the said Alexander Law the uncle, his executors or administrators, to receive and get in all shares and all other the premises thereby intended to be assigned with the usual powers and authorities. And it was thereby declared and agreed by and between the said parties thereto, and the said Alexander Law, the uncle, did thereby for himself, his executors, and administrators, expressly declare that the said Francis Searle, his executors and administrators, should stand and be possessed of and entitled unto all and singular the moneys, shares, property, interest, and other the premises thereby assigned, or intended so to be, upon certain trusts for the said Alexander Law, the uncle, and his assigns, during his life; and upon further trust to dispose thereof as the said Alexander Law, the uncle, should appoint; and in default of such appointment, and so far as such appointment should not extend, then, after the decease of the said Alexander Law, the uncle, upon certain trusts for the benefit of the said Alex. Law, the nephew, and his issue.

At the time when the deed was executed, Alexander Law, the uncle, was possessed of only ten shares in the National Provincial Bank of England, but he afterwards purchased forty more shares, and caused the words "And also my other forty shares, if not disposed of to any persons during my life," above mentioned, to be inserted in the deed by an auctioneer. No alteration was made, however, in the operative part of the deed, which additional forty shares were held to be therein included. The twenty deeds poll and the certificates of the twenty shares in the West of England Fire and Life Insurance Company, and of the fifty shares in the National Provincial Bank of England, were, under the directions of Alexander Law, the uncle, delivered to Francis Searle, as trustee, and continued in his possession, but no further steps were taken for transferring the said bonds and shares.

The uncle, Alexander Law, died in the month of March, 1840. A question now arose between the parties entitled under the deed of 1836, and the personal representatives of Alexander Law, the uncle, touching the validity of the gift; each party claiming the whole of the property comprised in the deed. Under these circumstances the trustee filed his bill praying that he might be discharged from the trusts of the indenture of 1836, and that the rights of the parties might be determined under the direction of the Court.

The cause came on to be heard on the 28th Feb. 1844, and it was then referred to the Master to state whether, by the constitution of the above-mentioned companies, any and what formalities were necessary for effecting the transfer of shares in the capital stock of the said companies. The Master, by his report of the 30th May, 1845, found, among other things, that several formalities in each of the before-mentioned Companies were necessary according to their respective constitutions for effecting a transfer of shares by the proprietors thereof.

Bethell and Wright in support of the bill.

Stuart and Follett, for the defendant, Alexander Law, the great nephew, contended that the deed of transfer was clear, and that, therefore, the property must be held to pass under it. The case falls short of Fortescue v. Barnett (3 My. & K. 36.) According to the Master's report, the trustee has complete possession of the insurance company's shares, and he finds there was no formality requisite for their transfer. We do not require the aid of the Court as to the Bank shares, for by making a requisition to the Bank we may become proprietors at any time. Our case is distinguishable, therefore, from every other wherein the Court is called upon to take an active part.

Cases cited:—Hill v. Cureton (2 My. & K.); Ex parte Pye (18 Ves. 149); Sloane v. Cadogan (3 Sug. V. & P. App. 66); Edwards v. Jones (1 My. & C. 226); Antrobus v. Smith (12 Ves. 39); Ward v. Audland (8 Sim. 576, a.)

Anderson and Shapter, for the administrator of Alexander Law, the uncle, contended that the gift was absolutely void, the Master having declared that, according to the regulations of these companies, there must be an acceptance to constitute an effectual transfer. (Dillon v. Coppin, 4 My. & K. 647; Beaton v. Beaton, 12 Sim. 281; Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & Ph. 138; M'Fadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare, 458; Walburn v. Ingilby, 1 My. & K. 61, 77; Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 39; Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Hare, 464.)

Bethell in reply.

The VICE CHANCELLOR.—I cannot understand that there is any property in the plaintiff upon which I can make any order. It is quite plain that Alexander Law, the uncle, intended to effectuate his purpose by means of an assignment to the plaintiff; but he never did any thing besides executing the deed. He, doubtless, meant that all parties should take such provisions as were intended there through the operation of the deed; there was no general purpose of standing trustee for any one. It appears as clear as possible, that upon the Master's Report and on the Act of Parliament (3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81), to which I was referred, no interest has, in point of fact, passed to the plaintiff, and, consequently, that he is a mere holder of these documents of title, which, under the circumstances, belong to the personal representatives of Law the elder.

Declare that no legal property in the turnpike bond, the insurance shares, nor the Bank shares passed to Searle, and that the same are not affected by any declaration of trust. Searle to deliver up the securities to the personal representative of Alexander Law, the testator. Costs out of the fund as between Solicitor and client.

Wednesday, February 25.

PLAVER v. ANDERSON.

Practice.—Residence.—Security for costs.

Where the plaintiff to a bill does not appear to have any permanent residence, the Court will compel him to give security for costs.

This was an application that the plaintiff might be ordered to give security for the costs of a suit. In the bill, the plaintiff was described as residing at 15, Bury Street, St. James's; but in the affidavits in support of the present motion, it appeared that although he was resident there in lodgings at the time when the bill was filed, he left that place a fortnight afterwards, and went to Paris, and subsequently had been residing at Bath. And in a notice served a short time ago by the same solicitors who were his solicitors in the suit, he was described as of Carlisle.

Stuart and Stratton, for the motion, cited Weeks v. Cole (14 Ves. 518); Sandys v. Long, (2 My. & K. 487); Calvert v. Day (2 You. & Col. C. C. 217).

Bethell, against the motion, contended that the plaintiff having given his true residence on the bill, was not bound to remain there during the progress of the whole suit. His very employment or occupation may preclude him from having any permanent residence, and must be therefore be prevented from suing. He is not domiciled abroad, so as to bring him within the rule as laid down in Weeks v. Cole. We do not deny his having been in Paris, but he is now within the jurisdiction.

Stuart, in reply, urged that it is necessary for a man to state his permanent residence, in order that the defendant may know where to serve him with process or where to apply for costs. Whenever, therefore, a plaintiff has no permanent residence, he ought to give security.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It appears from the facts as they are stated upon the affidavits that sufficient is disclosed from which to infer the plaintiff has no fixed residence; and although this case is not liable to the observations made in Sandys v. Long, because it contained the true and proper description of the plaintiff at the time when the bill was filed, still his residence was of such a fleeting and transitory nature, that the description was not available for the purpose of giving any circumstantial information to be of any available use to the defendant.

Order made.

ROLLS COURT.

Tuesday, Feb. 17.

HEMING v. ARCHER.

Practice.—Conveyance of legal estate.—Suspension of distribution of purchase-money.—Infant.

A person who was a party to a creditors' suit purchased an estate in which he was beneficially interested under a decree made therein, but because of the infancy of certain of the other parties, and of the disclaimer of a trustee pur autre vie, he could not obtain a conveyance of the legal estate. Under those circumstances, the distribution of the purchase-money among the parties interested therein was suspended by the Court, till a conveyance of the legal estate could be made.

The facts of this case are reported in 5 Law T. 281. It was there decided that, under the circumstances, the Court had no jurisdiction by virtue of the 1 Wm. 4, c. 47, ss. 11, 12, to direct the testator's heir-at-law, or the equitable tenant for life, to convey the estates to a purchaser under a decree in the cause; the devisee in trust, pur autre vie, having disclaimed, and there being only equitable life estates. The cause having now come on upon further directions, the parties interested asked for the distribution of the purchase-money; but the purchaser objected, and insisted that there should be no such distribution till he had obtained a conveyance of the legal estate, which he was unable to do till certain of the parties should come of age. On the other hand, it was contended that, as the purchaser was himself beneficially interested in the estate, under the will, and was a party to the cause, the objection ought not to prevail, for he had bought with full knowledge of the difficulty.

Kindersley, Roupell, Daniel, Blazam, and Faber, for the several parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said, he could not order the purchase-money to be distributed till the purchaser had got a conveyance of the legal estate. The purchaser could not be supposed to know what construction the Court would put upon the Act, nor, therefore, that there was no jurisdiction to direct a conveyance. There did not appear to be any way of getting over the difficulty but by an Act of Parliament; and, if they should think proper, the plaintiff might have a reference to the Master, to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of all parties that an Act should be obtained.

Thursday, Feb. 26.
RIGBY v. PINNOCK.

Practice—New Orders of May 1845—Amendment—Traversing note—Time.

A commission to take the answer of several defendants who were abroad was obtained, and the answers were to be sent over, but, to save the expense of a special messenger, they were kept back for an opportunity to send them; under the circumstances the plaintiff obtained an order to amend and served it upon the defendants, and on taking an office copy it was found that they were required to answer the interrogatories, though, as to some of them, a notice accompanied the service of the order to amend, that they were not required so to answer. On the eighth day after service of the order the plaintiff moved that the defendants, who had been so noticed, should either file their answers or allow the plaintiff to file a traversing note against them, and the motion was refused, the defendants having six weeks to answer under the 14th rule of the 16th Order, and not being confined to eight days under the 38th rule of the same Order. The 38th rule of the 16th Order applies to the case of amendments after answer, and the 14th rule of the same Order to that of amendments before answer. If no answer has been put in, the clerk of records and writs will receive an answer to the original bill, though it has been amended before the answer is presented.

In this case the bill was filed on the 14th July 1845, and an appearance was entered for the defendants (against whom the present motion was made) on the 28th of the same month, and, therefore, the time for answering expired on the 22nd September. On the 3rd November a motion was made for a commission to take the answers of these defendants who were abroad, their solicitor stating that the answers were then engrossed, and undertaking to use all expedition; and, the commission having been executed, the answers were detained for the purpose of being sent by the first opportunity without the expense of a special messenger. The plaintiff, however, was dissatisfied with the delay, and gave notice that if the answers were not filed by the 21st of February, he would apply to the Court for leave to file a traversing note against them. On the 18th of February the plaintiff served the defendants with an order to amend, and on taking an office copy of the amendments they found that they were required to answer the interrogatories; notice, however, had been given to those defendants against whom the present motion was made, that they should not be required to answer. On the 26th of February the plaintiff moved that the defendants should either file their answers or allow him to file a traversing note against them.

Cairns, for the motion.

Kindersley (with him Hallett) for Edward and Thomas John Pinnock, two of the defendants, said that if the plaintiff would dispense with a special messenger, he might have the answers immediately. The order to amend was served on the 16th of February after the answers were prepared and ready to be sent, and on taking an office copy of the amendments the defendants found they were required to answer the interrogatories, though notice was also served that they would not be required to do so. Besides, Thomas John Pinnock is an insolvent, and his assignees must have time to answer. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Would the clerk of records and writs receive an answer to the original bill after amendment?] It is not likely he would; the answer must be not to the original bill which does not exist, but to the amended bill.

Turner, for other defendants, contended that as the plaintiff had amended by adding parties, viz. the assignees of the insolvent, they must have time to answer, as they could not answer without answering the amendments; it was the same as if an original answer was required, and they must have six weeks. Besides, the 38th rule of the 16th Order clearly applies to amendments after answer, as the 14th rule of the same Order applies only to those before answer.

Cairns, in reply, contended that the defendants, not being required to answer the amendments, had only eight days, under the 38th rule of the 16th Order, not six weeks, under the 14th rule of the same Order, in which to answer, unless they took out a warrant for further time; and as they had not done so, and it was then the eighth day, after service of the order to amend, the motion was quite regular.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question is, whether the motion can be granted. The plaintiff having, since the answers were taken (though, perhaps, I ought to take no notice of that), amended under an order obtained for that purpose, the record is altered. It is not like a case in which an answer is put in, and then the bill is amended, and precaution is taken that the defendant is not subject to any process, but is left to himself to answer or not as he pleases. But in this case there is an amendment, and no intimation contained in it, but only a notice accompanying the service that the defendants were not required to answer the amendments. Well, this notice is given, and the answers are actually ready if there was a fitting opportunity of sending them, the messenger's oath being required; but they are not to the amended bill, but to the original bill; and yet they are asked to file them, or have a traversing note filed against them. My impression is, the answers, if tendered, would not be received, because they are to a bill not now on record; and, if so, the motion is mistaken, because the answers are to the original bill; and in that case to file a traversing note would be against all principle. I will not dispose of it until I inquire.

His lordship, in the course of the day, communicated with the clerk of the records and writs, who said he would receive the answers, notwithstanding the amendments, if no other answer had been put in. This, however, did not dispose of the motion; and the Court then decided on the application of the Orders, and was of opinion that the motion was premature and fruitless, the defendant having six weeks to answer, under the 14th rule of the 16th Order.

Re SMITH.

Taxation—Constructive payment—Jurisdiction in cases of taxation—Special directions to taxing Master—His duty when no such directions.

In ascertaining what payments have been made on account of bills, questions of law and of fact may arise which may require to be determined even in the limited jurisdiction under which bills are taxed, but whatever the Court itself might feel to be its duty in such cases, the Master's duty is to confine himself, in a case where he has received no special directions from the Court, to simple payments plainly proved to have been made on account of the bills, and not to take upon himself to certify whether a certain alleged transaction, not amounting to actual payment, is or is not a transaction which a court of law or equity would, under the circumstances, adjudge to constitute a debt or payment.

An order being made, on the petition of a country solicitor, for the taxation of all his town agent's bills, the taxing Master taxed all the bills except those which had been previously taxed or paid, and as to these he called upon the town agent merely to prove his alleged disbursements. It was held that charges in a petition for leave to except to the report were without foundation, no specific error being alleged to have been made.

In this case two petitions were before the Court, one praying leave to except to the taxing Master's certificate, and the other that it should be confirmed. It appeared that Mr. George Smith was the town agent of Mr. James Husband, a country solicitor, from the year 1825 down to the close of 1840, during all which time there had been no taxation of his bills, nor any settlement of accounts in relation thereto. Mr. Husband having been, as he alleged, defrauded by Mr. Smith in a great variety of transactions, discontinued him as agent in the latter end of 1840, and employed Messrs. Bourdillon and Sons; and in May, 1841, presented a petition praying (see Re Smith, 4 Beav. 309.), for the delivery by Smith of papers, &c. of his further bill of costs, and his cash account during the years 1830, 1831, 1832, 1833, and 1834; and praying a reference to the Master to tax the bills from 1825 down to 1840 inclusive, to settle and adjust the cash account, and to take an account of all dealings and transactions between them; and that in the taxation the Master might be ordered to have regard to an agreement stated in the petition as to the employment of Smith as agent. The order made on this petition was, that the petitioner paying into Court the sum of 1,000*l.* and undertaking to pay what should appear to be due on taxation of his bills, Mr. Smith should deliver his further bill of costs, from the foot of the last bill delivered; and that the Master should tax the bills and ascertain the amount due thereon to Smith, "having regard to the sums of money which have been paid by or on behalf of Mr. Husband to Mr. Smith on account thereof." But the Court refused to entertain the question of the agreement, or to order an account of dealings, &c. for the purpose of adjusting the general cash account, on the ground that there was no jurisdiction to do so on a petition for taxation. The papers, &c. were also ordered to be delivered to the new agents. Accordingly, on the 19th November, 1841, Husband paid into Court the 1,000*l.* and on the 6th Dec. Smith delivered his further bill of costs, and on the 7th the deeds, papers, &c. and soon after the taxation commenced, and was not completed till July 1845, when the taxing Master certified that Smith's bills of costs, amounting to 9,176*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* had been laid before him, and he had taxed them at 8,751*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* and that, having regard to the payments on account thereof, he found due to Smith, on the bills, the sum of 2,632*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* In pursuance of this finding, Smith, on the 18th of July, 1845, presented a petition for payment of what was due, and of costs in the various proceedings, and Husband afterwards presented his petition for liberty to except to the certificate, and the two petitions now came on to be heard, Husband's petition being opened first. The petition complained of frauds being committed by Smith, alleging that he had charges in his bills for disbursements never made for counsel's fees, &c. and that in the course of taxation many of these were paid, and vouchers produced which would not otherwise have been paid; and that, after all, ninety-five items amounting to 107*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* for counsel's fees were disallowed, and 222 items, amounting to 173*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* overcharges, were reduced or disallowed; that all the bills had not been taxed, but that about twenty had been allowed on the mere voucher of Smith of the several sums charged therein, on the ground that these bills had been paid to Husband by his clients. It appeared that they were in bankruptcy, and had been taxed by the proper officer. But the principal objection arose out of the payments alleged to have been made in respect of the bills, that being the only extent to which the Taxing Master was directed to go into the cash account. It appeared that the cash account was not taken into consideration till January, 1844, and that Mr. Smith had been allowed all his cash disbursements, whether in relation to professional business or not, but that two particular items had been disallowed to Husband amounting to 500*l.* each; and the disallowance of these formed the principal ground of complaint. It appeared that in August, 1835, Husband and one Malachy were at the office of Smith, and Malachy being in possession of a large number of shares in the Wheal Brothers Mine, sold Smith twenty-five of them for 500*l.* which he requested Husband (as he alleged) to pay, and he would credit the same against the bills of costs, and Husband accordingly agreed to do so. At the same time, also, Smith bought twenty-five shares of Husband at 500*l.* and agreed, as was alleged, to give him credit for 500*l.* part thereof against his bills of costs, the odd 50*l.* being paid by a cheque, which stated the circumstances under which it was given. Smith also, as was alleged, made at the time an entry of the sums in his cash book, to the credit of Husband, and gave a receipt for 1,000*l.* which was produced to the Master. When the matter came before the Master, he thought the evidence insufficient as to the payment of the 500*l.* to Malachy, and as to the other 500*l.* he thought the consideration of it did not come within the terms of the order of reference, and he disallowed them both. The entries in the book of Smith were not in evidence; and as he would not produce them, the Master refused to compel him. The points then were, whether Mr. Husband should be allowed in account the two sums of 500*l.* and whether the Master was right in refusing to tax the twenty bills already mentioned.

Turner (with him Cole), for the petitioner, cited Oakeley v. Pasheller (10 Bligh, 548); Thompson v. Percival (5 B. & Ad. 925), to show that the credit given by Smith amounted to payment to him.

Kindersley and Daniel, contra.

March 5.—The MASTER of the ROLLS stated the facts, and proceeded:—The first observation to be made on the case is this, that the sums of 500*l.* each formed part of the petitioner's complaint on his first petition, in which it was stated that Smith omitted to credit him in account with a sum of 1,000*l.* for which he ought to have been credited in 1835, and for which the petitioner held Smith's receipt in his own hand, dated 5th August, 1835. That petition contained no allegation of an agreement by Smith to give credit for this sum of 1,000*l.* but only asked for relief on the general account, which I refused; and the order was made that the Master should have regard only to such sums as were paid on account of the bills. To meet the terms of the order, this petition states an entry in a book, in the presence of the petitioner and Malachy, crediting the petitioner with 1,000*l.* as against the bills of costs, but the affidavit of Husband omits the words "as against," &c. There is, however, both averment and alleged agreement, supported by affidavit, that Smith did agree that the two sums of 500*l.* each should be credited against the bills. Smith insists that the transaction as to the shares was fraudulent and void, and that the sums alleged to be paid to Malachy were, in fact, never paid, and that there was no such agreement as that alleged, and that the Master was right in not allowing the sums. Notwithstanding the importance of keeping the jurisdiction in cases of this kind within its proper limits, and the propriety of directing the Master to have regard only to sums paid on account of the bills, yet it is not improbable questions may arise as to what payments have been so made, both of law and of fact, which may require to be determined even in this jurisdiction; and when they should so arise, it would be right to settle them according to law and justice. But when the Master has received no special directions from the Court, it is his duty to confine himself to simple payments plainly proved to have been made on account of the bills. Upon a conflict of evidence, he may have to certify that a payment has been made, but he ought not to take upon himself to say whether a particular transaction, not amounting to actual payment, is such a transaction as either a court of law or of equity would adjudge to constitute a debt or payment. And in this case, considering the form and manner in which the plaintiff's claims to this and the two sums of 500*l.* each were discussed and disposed of on the former petition, and the absence of any explanation of the circumstances under which he seeks to establish his claim on a different footing; considering the form of the order, directing regard only to be had to the sums paid on account of the bills, and the absence of special directions as to the sums claimed in the petition; and further, having regard to the claim of the 500*l.* alleged to have been paid, and the 500*l.* which it is alleged ought to be deemed to have been paid, I am of opinion the Master has properly disallowed these sums, and that in respect of them there is no ground for giving the petitioner leave to except to the report. I am further of opinion that the charges made in this petition, that the Master has not fully taxed all the bills which he was ordered to tax, is without any just foundation. All the bills not previously taxed or paid were fully taxed; as to the others, Mr. Smith was called upon to prove his alleged disbursements, and I do not find that the petition contains any allegations of any specific error. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that the petition must be dismissed, with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, March 7.

SCOTT v. BROADWOOD.

Pleading—Statute of Limitations—Bill of discovery. To a bill of discovery in aid of an action of ejectment, the Court held a plea of the Statute of Limitations to be good.

This was a bill of discovery filed in aid of an action of ejectment brought by the plaintiff, Joseph Scott, for the recovery of a brewery and houses at Westminster. The bill stated the claim of the plaintiff as heir-at-law to Sir Andrew Chadwick, who was seised of the property in question, and died in March 1768; and it was alleged that the property was, at the time of Sir Andrew Chadwick's death, held of him on leases which expired in June 1826. To this bill the defendant, by leave, filed two pleas as to a portion of the property; first, of a fine levied by Sarah Law, as heiress-at-law of Sir A. Chadwick, and — Taylor, in Hilary Term, 20 Geo. 3; and, secondly, of the Statute of Limitations. The first plea contained the usual averments in a plea of fine and non-claim, and was accompanied by an answer denying that the property was comprised in any of the leases alleged in the bill. The second plea was of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, and contained the usual averments in support of it.

Teed and Schomberg, in support of the plea, cited Gast v. Osbaldiston (1 Russ. 158); Cholmondeley v. Clinton (Turn. & Russ. 107); Macgregor v. East-India Company (2 Sim. 349), and Chadwick v. Broadwood (3 Bea. 308 and 530).

Roll and Welford, for the bill, contended that the plea of a legal bar to a bill of discovery was not good (Hindman v. Taylor, 3 Bro. C. C. 483; Mendizabel v. Machado, 1 Sim. 68; Robertson v. Lubbock, 4 Sim. 173; Bailey v. Sibbald, 15 Ves. 185; and Leigh v. Leigh, 1 Sim. 349); and that the statute not having been pleaded in the action of ejectment, it could not be pleaded to this bill. (Macgregor v. East-India Company, 2 Sim. 349.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he could conceive cases in which to a bill of discovery in aid of an action at law, the Statute of Limitations would not be a good plea. He was, however, of opinion that the present bill was so framed, that the second plea was a good plea to the extent it went, and must be allowed with costs. It was not, therefore, necessary to give any opinion as to the first plea, subject to the hearing of the defendant's counsel upon the question of costs.

The second plea was allowed, and no order was made as to the first.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GARDNER.

Practice—Orders of August 1841.

Jurisdiction or discretionary power of the Court, by the effect of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 105, to relax the terms of the Orders of August 1841.

Russell and R. Palmer, on behalf of the plaintiffs in this case, moved that they might be at liberty to set down the cause for argument upon the objections taken by the defendants for want of parties, notwithstanding the expiration of fourteen days (allowed by the 39th Order of August 1841) from the filing of the respective answers. They cited Medhurst v. Allison (4 Hare, 479).

Roll, for the defendants, contended that the Orders of August 1841 had acquired the force and effect of an Act of Parliament, and could only be varied or rescinded by two or more of the judges of the Court, pursuant to the 4 Vict. c. 94, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 52. (Coburn v. Gandy, 1 Phil. 513.) The difficulty in the present case had not been removed by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 105, which was relied upon in Medhurst v. Allison.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The case of Medhurst v. Allison is an authority for a convenient and reasonable construction of an Act of Parliament, and, without expressing any opinion of my own, I shall follow it.

Roll applied for his costs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the defendants might elect whether they would then take 4*l.* or let the costs be reserved.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Friday, March 20.

DELMAR v. ROGERS.

Cankrein moved, under the 24th Order of August 1831, for leave to enter a memorandum of service of copy of the bill in this cause upon one of the defendants, and supported the application by an affidavit of a copy of the bill having been served, and stating the time when the service was made, as required by the above Order.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Does the affidavit state that the bill prays no direct relief against this defendant, and that the copy served was a correct copy of the bill?

Cankrein.—It does not.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Unless you can assure me of the truth of those facts of your own knowledge, from having drawn the pleadings, the motion must stand over to have the affidavit amended to satisfy the Court upon these particulars.

The affidavit was amended, and the rule was then made.

HAMMOND v. SMITH.

Will—Construction—Vested interest.

Where a will admits of a double construction in consequence of events which subsequently happened, the Court will give effect to that construction which will nearest carry out what was apparently the intention of the testator, had the event which raised the construction not occurred.

John Hill, by his will, dated in October 1810, bequeathed the interest of 800*l.* Consols to Hester Fox, for life, and after her decease, to his cousin, Robert Smith, for his life, and after their decease bequeathed as follows:—"The said capital, or principal sum of all such money in the Three per Cent. Consols, that I may be possessed of or entitled to at the time of my decease, to the two said children of my said cousin, namely, Robert Smith and Ann Smith, equal share and share alike, if both of them be living, or the whole to the survivor on his or her attaining the age of twenty-one years; and the reversionary interest of the said children shall become a vested interest, and transmissible interest in them respectively at the age of twenty-one years." The testator died in 1814. Robert Smith, the younger, died in the lifetime of the tenants for life of the fund, having attained twenty-one years of age, and assigned his reversionary interest to the plaintiff; and the question was, whether Robert Smith took a vested or contingent interest in the fund under the will.

Romilly and Robtson, for the plaintiff, cited Perry v. Wood (3 Vesey, jun. 204), Brown v. Biggs (7 Vesey, jun. 279), Moral v. Sutton (1 Phillips, 533).

Walker, for the defendant Ann Smith, who claimed the whole fund by survivorship, the last tenant for life having died, cited Cripps v. Walcott (4 Mad. 11), Faber v. Beverley (1 Collyer, 108).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The words "transmissible interest," in the second clause in this will, must weigh strongly in the decision of this case for the plaintiff; the words used in the first clause are more flexible, and cannot be construed as shewing an intention in the testator to deprive one of those parties who should attain twenty-one years of age, marry, and have children; but in case he died in the lifetime of the tenants for life, his children should have nothing. To construe the will in that manner, it must follow, that in case both Robert and Ann had died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, there would have been an intestacy. I am strongly of opinion for the prior construction, and that these children took a vested interest on attaining twenty-one years of age, and therefore give judgment in favour of the plaintiff, and order the costs to be costs in the cause.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Tuesday, April 21.

DOE dem. ANGEL v. ANGEL.

Ejectment—Evidence—Bill and answer in Chancery—Misdirection.

In an action of ejectment, the sole question in the cause being whether one T. A. of Evesham, in Worcestershire, from whom the lessor of the plaintiff proved his descent, was the same person with one T. A. carrying on business in London as a haberdasher in partnership with his brother twelve years before; a bill in Chancery, filed by that brother alone as a trader, was offered in evidence to show the dissolution of the partnership; and the answer thereto, and another bill and answer in Chancery, in a suit in which a member of the same family on defendant, were offered as declarations with regard to the condition in life of that family. Held, inadmissible.

Ejectment, tried at the last Surrey Assizes before Lord Denman, C.J. when a verdict was found for the defendant. The lessor of the plaintiff claimed the property in question under a will, whereby it was devised to the male heir of Wm. Angel, the first purchaser of Crowhurst, and he claimed as a descendant from the youngest son of John, the eldest son of Wm. Angel, the first purchaser of Crowhurst. The issue of the plaintiff at the trial satisfactorily traced the family of the testator at Crowhurst down to Thomas, the sixth son of John Angel, who held the office of caterer or purveyor to the court until his death in 1670; and the question in the cause was whether the lessor of the plaintiff was the male heir of the Thomas. In support of his claim, the lessor of the plaintiff proved his descent from a Thomas Angel, who, in 1682, was married at Evesham, in the county of Worcester, and who, in the marriage register, was described as of Cleeve Priors, in the county of Worcester, a tailor, and about the same age as the Thomas Angel of Crowhurst. The cause turned entirely upon the identity of the Thomas Angel, so married at Evesham, with the Thomas Angel, descended from the testator; and in order to prove that they were the same person, a copy of an entry in the register of the parish of Evesham was produced, but the register itself was not produced. The entry was of the burial of that Thomas Angel, and contained, in addition to the usual entry, these words, "descended from Crowhurst." The witness who produced the copy of the entry was cross-examined as to the state of the original register, and stated that it was discoloured and crumpled. The counsel for the defendant, in his address to the jury, imputed fraud to the entry, and commented upon the non-production of the original register, which he stated to have been in court; and the learned judge, in summing up the case, said that the entry appeared open to a good deal of suspicion; and that though he imputed no fraud to the present lessor of the plaintiff, they could not doubt that somebody had dealt with the register. It was proved that, in 1684 and 1685, Thomas Angel, the sixth son of John, had been in partnership with his brother Justinian as haberdashers; and in order to show that that partnership had been dissolved, a bill in Chancery, filed in 1677 by Justinian alone, described as a haberdasher, against one Townroe, and his answer, were offered in evidence, and rejected as being the declarations of other persons, not on a question of pedigree. Upon the same ground were rejected the bill (filed 1701), and the answer thereto, in a suit of Angel v. Smith, offered for the purpose of shewing that Justinian and his family at that time had been in comparative poverty.

Shee, Serjt. now moved for a rule to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial granted, on the grounds of the improper rejection of evidence and misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence. First, the bill filed by Justinian is admissible, and evidence of the fact that at that time he was suing alone as a trader; and the declaration upon oath of Townroe, the defendant, was admissible to shew the condition of the parties at that time; being made without any interest to misrepresent, and on a matter analogous to a question of pedigree. The same observation applies to the bill and answer in the second suit of Angel v. Smith; and although these documents do not come precisely within the rule upon which such declarations are usually admitted, still they do fall within the broad principle upon which that rule rests. That principle is, that the best evidence which can be obtained is to be admitted. [COLERIDGE, J.—Then the letter of a deceased witness, giving an account of a transaction, would be admissible.] But this is so closely connected with a question of pedigree, that the rules of evidence applicable to pedigree cases ought to prevail in this; and in pedigree cases nearly all the evidence is hearsay,—inscriptions on monuments, entries in Bibles, and so forth; and the reason given by Gilbert (on Evid. 212) is, that no better evidence can be obtained. [COLERIDGE, J.—The evidence in pedigree cases is the exception; you are making it the rule. Besides, in pedigree cases evidence of reputation is received, although better evidence is also given.] In Gleadow v. Atkin (1 Cr. & M. 424), Bayley, J. rests these cases upon the principle above mentioned. [He also referred to R. v. Eriih (8 East, 542); Higham v. Ridgway (10 East, 120); Warren v. Grenville (2 Stra. 1129; 2 Selw. N. P. 754); Herbert v. Tuckal (T. Raym. 84); Lloyd v. Wait (Turn. & Phill. 65); Monckton v. Attorney- General (3 Russ. & M. 156.)] Secondly, it was a misdirection on the part of the learned judge to tell the jury that there could be no doubt that the register had been dealt with; the presumption being that the entry was genuine, until impeached by evidence; and, thirdly, the verdict was against the evidence, because there was no evidence given to impugn the authenticity of that entry; and taking it to be genuine, the plaintiff's case was clearly made out.

PATTERSON, J.—I think my lord was quite right in the rejection of this evidence. First, a bill in Chancery was offered, to prove that a certain partnership was dissolved; but how could it be evidence of that fact? It is well settled that a bill in Chancery is no evidence of the facts stated in it; and the reason is obvious; it is the mere statement of counsel. Then the answers are the declarations of strangers, which would not be admissible on a question of pedigree, which this was not; for the only question in the case was one of identity. I hardly understand the ground of misdirection. It might be a prudent course on the part of the counsel not to put in the original register; but it was certainly a course open to observation, considering the extraordinary nature of the entry. Lastly, as to the verdict being against the evidence, it was entirely a question for the jury. On the one hand, certainly, there were strong coincidences of time and age; but on the other hand there were matters calculated to excite suspicion; and all having been left to the jury, I think we should not be justified in disturbing their verdict.

WILLIAMS, J.—The argument of the learned counsel on the point of evidence amounts to this, that because there is a necessity for the evidence, therefore it ought to be given. Evidence of reputation a pedigree cases is admitted as an exception to the general rules of evidence, as ancient as the rule itself. It would be very dangerous if the commentary of the learned judge upon a case, not any misstatement of it, should be considered a ground for a new trial. As to the last point, I agree that the non-production of the original register, and the very unusual nature of the entry itself, meeting the very difficulty of the case, were circumstances of suspicion, which might properly weigh with the jury; and I must add that it is a remarkable fact that no intercourse should have been shown between the two supposed branches of this same family; that the poor should have shown no appetite for the rich during forty-five years.

COLERIDGE, J.—If the entry were genuine, it would be conclusive of the case; but I cannot agree that it is taken to be genuine until the contrary was proved; there being circumstances to excite suspicion, I think it was quite open to the counsel for the defendant, or the learned judge, to comment upon them. As to the rejection of evidence, it is admitted that the evidence offered in this case did not fall within the general rule; because this was not strictly a question of pedigree; but it is contended that it comes within a principle, laid down much too broadly, that the best evidence which can be attained may always be given. The only doubt I have at all entertained was, whether the bill might not be received as evidence of the fact that the plaintiff had used as a trader and alone; but, upon consideration, I think that that would be to receive the contents of a bill as evidence of a fact; which would certainly be wrong.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—I entirely agree with the rest of the Court as to the rejection of this evidence; and as to the point of misdirection, I doubt whether I used, without qualification, the words ascribed to me. I cannot agree with the learned counsel that every presumption was to be made in favour of the entry. That might be the case if it were an ordinary entry; but if the clergyman himself chooses to step out of his way and add to an entry the statement of a fact quite out of his knowledge, that alone would be sufficient to excite great suspicion against it. But here there were other circumstances. The disappearance of the family from Crowhurst was at the root of the case; but how can we tell that they did disappear, for from the register of that parish, 16 pages, from 1680 to 1701, had been cut out. And, further, there was a total absence of any evidence of intercourse or connection between the two alleged branches of the family from 1784 to 1837. In my opinion, the present state of the case is quite satisfactory; and ought to be so to all parties concerned. The case is perfectly dead and lifeless; it is not possible that any reasonable mind can now suppose that the lessor of William Angel, the first purchaser of Crowhurst.

ASSER v. WALKER.

Contract for sale of shares through a broker—Principal and agent.

A party who instructed a broker to buy shares for him, held liable to the party from whom the broker bought the shares, though the several contracts were made with the broker by name; and though, when applied to for his principal, he gave another name, as well as that of the defendant.

Assumpsit on an agreement to buy and accept ten shares in the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway. Breach: the refusal to accept. Pleas: 1st, the general issue; 2nd, that the plaintiff was not ready and willing to transfer, &c. within a reasonable time; 3rd, a denial of notice; tried before Coleridge, J. at York, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. It appeared that the defendant had instructed Mr. Barr, a sharebroker at Leeds, "to buy for him" the shares in question; but that the contract between them was in these terms:—"16th Oct. Bought of John Barr ten shares, &c." and "sold to Mr. Walker, &c. at so much per share, payable on the 16th day of Nov. &c." On the same 16th of Oct. Barr, acting under similar instructions, bought for one Hay ten shares in the same railway on the same terms. There was a similar contract between the plaintiff, who was also a sharebroker at Leeds, for the sale to Barr of certain shares in the same railway. Barr did not disclose the name of the plaintiff, and the question was, whether there was any evidence to fix the defendant with the liability; and whether Barr was not the principal. When the period for transfer arrived, an application was made by the plaintiff to Barr for his principal; and he referred the applicant to Hay as well as the defendant, saying that he might go to either of them; and in the first instance the plaintiff applied to Hay; but evidence was given that it was the well-known practice of brokers during the currency of an agreement to deliver shares by a certain time, to enter into several contracts for the sale of them in the meantime, and not to disclose the name of their principal until the close of the transaction.

FALCON, Q. C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered, or for a new trial; first, because there was no evidence to fix the defendant; and, secondly, on the ground of misdirection. Barr was clearly the principal; he was so treated in the written contracts; there was no privity between the plaintiff and defendant, as is clear from the fact, that when the plaintiff applied to Barr for his principal, the answer was: "You may take your choice between the defendant and another person." The learned judge, therefore, ought to have told the jury that there was no evidence against the defendant.

By the COURT.—It was a matter proper for the decision of the jury upon the evidence.

TRIX AND WIFE v. THORN.

Frivolous demurrer—Replication in action on bond.

M. Smith moved for a rule nisi to rescind an order of Cresswell, J. setting aside the demurrer as frivolous. The action was on a bond given to the wife, dam sola, conditioned for the payment of money by a day certain, with a general breach. Plea: setting out the bond on oyer, and alleging performance generally. Replication, assigning breaches; and special demurrer thereto, on the grounds, first, that it did not appear that the cause of action accrued before the commencement of the action, all the dates being under a vide licet: as to which he cited Parkinson v. Whitehead (2 Man. & G. 329); Skinner v. Lambert (4 M. & G. 477); Tucker v. Webster (10 M. & W. 371); secondly, that the replication was bad for not concluding to the country: citing Roakes v. Manser (1 C. B. 531); Bush v. Leake (3 Doug. 255); and 1 Wm. Saund. 108, n.; thirdly, that the replication was double, in assigning a breach of the condition to pay the principal together with the interest, the principal and interest being separate debts: citing Dickenson v. Harrison (4 Price, 282.)

STEWART v. WILKINSON.

Trover—Colourable sale between plaintiff and defendant.

In an action of trover for a heifer, upon a plea of not possessed, an apparent sale and transfer of the heifer from defendant to plaintiff having been proved,—Held, that the defendant was at liberty to shew that that sale and transfer was merely colourable, and that the jury having so found, the verdict could not be disturbed.

Trover for a heifer. Pleas: 1st, not guilty, 2nd, not possessed. At the trial it appeared that the heifer originally belonged to the defendant, but that an agreement had been entered into, which the defendant contended was merely colourable, with a view to its agistment on some common lands, for the sale of the heifer to the plaintiff, and an actual transfer of the heifer, and a payment of a sum of money as the price, were, in fact, made. The jury, however, found that the sale was merely colourable, and gave a verdict for the defendant. A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside that verdict, and enter a verdict for the plaintiff, on the plea of not possessed, or for a new trial, Chilton, Q. C. and E. V. Williams now shewed cause, and contended that, though an agreement, fraudulent and colourable, will not operate against third parties, yet that a party to it could not avail himself of his own wrong, as a defence to an action. (Doe v. Roberts, 2 B. and Ald. 367; Brackenbury v. Brackenbury, 2 Jacob and W. 391; Montefiori v. Montefiori, W. Black, 363; Curtis v. Perry, 6 Ves. 739; Steele

v. Brown, 1 Taunt. 381; Harmer v. Westmacott, 6 Sim. 284.)

Welsby, contra, was not called upon.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—This is exactly the same case as if the parties had said, "we will go before witnesses, and pretend to buy and sell, but will really not do so." Then if either party repents, and can get peaceable possession of the thing given up, he has a right to retain it. The only case at all at variance with this view is that of Montefiori v. Montefiori; where Lord Mansfield, C. J. said that "no man shall set up his own iniquity as a defence any more than as a cause of action;" but in that case, the party who had made the fraudulent representation was seeking to enforce a claim founded upon it; and I think that the authority must be limited to such cases.

PATTERSON, J.—The cases cited of colourable qualifications to kill game, &c. are distinguishable in this respect, that they are carried out by means of conveyances, which having a well-known legal operation, cannot be rendered so merely formal as the transaction in the present case.

The other judges concurring, Rule absolute.

Practice.

LORD DENMAN, C. J. at the commencement of the argument in the above case, suggested a stet processus, which being declined, on the part of the plaintiff, his lordship added, that parties must fully understand that when they sought to set aside verdicts, they did so at the risk of paying costs, even though the verdict should be set aside. The Court reserved to itself the right of considering the circumstances of each case, and did not by any means treat it as a matter of course that if the verdict was set aside, the party succeeding would be entitled to his costs.

Welsby, though the rule had been made absolute, consented to a stet processus.

CHRISTIE AND OTHERS (Assignees) v. PICKFORD. Trover by assignees of bankrupt. Goods in the order and disposition of the bankrupt.

Trover for thirty chests of soap, by the plaintiffs, as assignees of a bankrupt.

Pleas: first, not guilty; second, not possessed; third, that plaintiffs were not assignees. At the trial before Tindal, C. J., at the last Warwick Assizes the last issue was found for the plaintiffs; the two former for the defendant. It appeared that the bankrupt, before committing an act of bankruptcy, by leaving the country, had ordered Messrs. Pickford, the defendants, to deliver a large quantity of soap to the British Alkali Company; but that a portion remained undelivered when he left; that immediately after he had left the country, one of the plaintiffs, a principal creditor, requested Messrs. Pickford to take possession of the remaining casks; and gave them afterwards a written notice that they were his property, and directing them to hold them to his use. Notice of the intention to open a fiat was also served upon them; but the defendants delivered the soap to the British Alkali Company, who were substantially the defendants in this action. There was some conflicting evidence as to the question, upon whose behalf the defendants consented to hold the goods after the bankruptcy; and the learned judge left that question to the jury.

HUMFREY, Q. C., on Saturday, April 18, moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, contending that the goods in question were clearly in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, at the time of the bankruptcy, with the consent of the true owner; and that that was a pure question of law, upon which the learned judge ought to have expressly directed the jury.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD DENMAN, C. J., now stated, that they had consulted the Lord Chief Justice, and found that he had left the case to the jury precisely as counsel wished. There would therefore be no rule.

Rule refused.

OLIVERSON v. BRIGHTMAN.

BOLD v. ROTTERHAM.

Insurance.

A policy of insurance contained clauses permitting the ship to go to any of certain ports mentioned, Canton being one, with liberty to ship, transship, and re-ship as should be necessary, and continuing the risk until the ship reached the final port of destination. The ship arrived at Hongkong when hostilities were going on between the Chinese and the English; and the cargo having been put on board a ship, not a carrying ship, the loss ensued.

Held, that this was a risk insured against. But, secus, where the policy did not contain the clause as to shipment, transshipment, and the acts done shewed that the removal of the ports was not a mere temporary and necessary removal, but intended to be a final removal from the ship, in which they had arrived.

These were two special cases as to the liability of the underwriters upon two policies upon goods in the Penang. The question in each was, whether the goods had reached their final destination, according to the terms of the policy. The policy in the first allowed the vessel to go to any one of numerous ports mentioned (Canton and Hongkong being two of them), with leave to ship, re-ship, and transship the goods, the risk to continue until the goods reached the final port of destination. The policy in the second case did not contain this clause as to re-shipment and transshipment. It appeared, upon the facts stated, that, on the arrival of the Penang at Hongkong, there were hostilities going on between China and the British forces, but no war had been actually proclaimed by the Queen; that in consequence of some repairs being needed by the Penang, the goods were placed on board a species of receiving vessel, and, whilst there, the loss ensued. It appeared, also, that this vessel had been prepared prior to the arrival of the Penang, and that the agents to whom the Penang had been consigned had advertised her as to sail almost immediately after her arrival.

The Solicitor-General (with whom was Crompton), on behalf of the underwriters in the first case, submitted that the facts shewed that the final port of destination had been reached; for that by reason of the war Canton could not be reached, so that the risk was at an end, and the voyage having been put an end to by a peril not insured against (citing 12 East, 283; Phillips on Insurance, American edition). In the second case they were not called on.

Martin, Q. C. (with whom was Tomlinson), contra, contended that there was no war, in the sense which would have rendered it illegal for the Penang to have gone to Canton, and therefore the case cited was no authority. (Hulton v. Evans, 4 M. & G.) In the second case it was contended, that, notwithstanding the absence of the trans-shipment clause, the goods had not reached the port of final destination; and that, whatever the intention of the consignees might have been, no actual deviation from the terms of the policy had taken place.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I have no doubt in either of these cases. In the first, I am of opinion that the policy was framed exactly to meet the circumstances which took place. There was great uncertainty as to the relation between England and China, and therefore permission was given to go to any of the numerous ports mentioned. Then it expressly appears, that although it would have been inexpedient to have gone on to Canton, it would not have been illegal. No war had been actually proclaimed. The goods might also have been reshipped and sent elsewhere, as, for instance, to Singapore. The underwriters are therefore liable. In the other case, it is equally clear that they are not liable. The policy contained no clause allowing the trans-shipment, and the goods were taken out of the Penang, and under circumstances which go far to shew that the agents had made Hongkong the place of final destination; but, at any rate, it was a deviation not provided for in the insurance.

Judgment for plaintiff in the first case, and for the defendant in the second.

SCOTT V. HARTLEY.

Covenant—Quiet possession.

The eviction of the sub-lessee, for rent due from the lessor to the superior landlord, is a breach of the lessee's covenant for quiet possession, against all claiming under, by, or through him.

Covenant, demurrer to plea, which, however, being admitted to be bad, the question was the goodness of the declaration.

Pearcock in support of the declaration.—This is covenant for breach of the covenant for quiet possession. It states the covenant to be, that the plaintiff should quietly have, hold, and enjoy, all and singular the demised premises, free from all eviction or claim from any claiming through, by, or under the defendant. The breach was, that the defendant did not suffer and permit the plaintiff to hold, &c. without any let or hindrance from, &c.; but, on the contrary, that after the making of the covenant, and during the demise, and whilst, &c. a distress was made in and upon the plaintiff's goods, then being in and upon the said premises, for and on behalf of a certain person, to wit, &c. for the sum of 60l., in respect of rent before then due to him, as superior landlord, &c. It is said that this is a paramount title, and not a claim under the defendant, but this is not so. It is in respect of a contract between the defendant and the superior landlord. Then it is objected, that it is not sufficiently averred that this rent was due, or how it was due. But this, although possibly a ground of special demurrer, is good after pleading over and upon general demurrer.

Flood, contra, cited Woodhouse v. Jenkins (9 B. 431), Ireland v. Birchell (2 B. N. C. 90), Spencer v. Marriott (1 B. & C. 457), Stanley v. Hayes (2 G. & D. 411), Noble v. King (1 H. Bl. 34), as to the first point. He also argued that the statement in the breach was insufficient, for not shewing when and how the rent was due.

By the COURT.—It is clear that this is a breach of the covenant for quiet possession. The superior landlord claims the rent through and under the contract with his tenant, the defendant, and upon general demurrer the breach is certainly sufficient.

Judgment for plaintiff.

TENNANT V. CRASTELL.

The 17 Geo. 2, c. 3, s. 2, which imposes a penalty upon overseers omitting to furnish a copy of a rate forthwith after demand, is not repealed by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96.

Greg moved (April 20), in arrest of judgment in this action, in which the plaintiff had sued the defendant, as overseer, for a penalty under 17 Geo. 2, c. 3, s. 2, for not delivering copy of a rate forthwith. The jury had found that four days was not "forthwith," but it appeared to be open to great doubt whether the 17 Geo. 2, c. 3, was not incidentally repealed by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, the Parochial Assessment Act. The 17 Geo. 2 was passed when the duties of the overseers were very much less onerous than now. A rate then was usually made in four columns, it was now made in sixteen. Under the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, any one may inspect the rate. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Are not the acts different? One gives a penalty for refusing to deliver a copy, the other for refusing inspection.] The whole subject-matter has been altered, and publicity, the object of the first Act is now obtained in another way. (Reg. v. St. Edmunds, 2 Q.B. 72; Reg. v. Suffolk, 2 Q.B. 85, were cited.) Cur. adv. vult.

On a subsequent day (April 25) the Court refused the rule, briefly expressing their opinion that the 17 Geo. 2 was not repealed. Rule refused.

Saturday, April 25.

SIR F. ROE V. THE MARQUIS OF WESTMEATH.

Obstruction of ancient lights—Misdirection.

In an action for obstructing ancient lights, in which it appeared that the building causing the obstruction was separated from the windows obstructed by a public street in the metropolis, the learned judge left it to the jury to say whether there had been any substantial diminution of light, observing that whether the intervention of a public street would be a good ground of defence was a question of law:—Held, no misdirection.

This was an action on the case to recover damages for an obstruction of the plaintiff's ancient lights, tried before Mr. Justice Wightman at the last sittings at Westminster, when it appeared that the plaintiff and the wife of the defendant were possessed of houses separated at their sides by a small street called White Horse-street, the front of each house being in Piccadilly. At the rear of Lady Westmeath's house the buildings were originally low, and she wishing to increase the accommodation in her house, built some additional rooms, which reached from thirty to forty feet above the street. These additional rooms had the effect of darkening the rooms at the back of Sir Frederick Roe's house. He therefore brought the present action. The learned judge told the jury that whether the intervention of a street between the two buildings amounted to a satisfactory excuse for the defendant's building, was a question of law, and left to them only the question whether the light had been substantially diminished. The jury therefore found, on the fact of the obstruction of light, a verdict for the plaintiff.

Sir F. Kelly, S.G. on Saturday, April 18, moved for a rule nisi, for a nonsuit, or a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. This is the first case of an action for obstructing lights on the opposite side of a public street in a great town; and it will be productive of great inconvenience if such actions can be maintained. The principle of law is undoubtedly, that no man is to use his own property to the injury of his neighbour; but that must be qualified by the conflicting principle, that every one may make a reasonable use of his own property in a convenient place; and in a crowded city it is unreasonable to complain of an erection on the opposite side of a public street. But even if there is no abstract principle of law, prohibiting an action under these circumstances, still it is a matter of great importance to be considered by the jury; and was in this case improperly withdrawn from their consideration by the learned judge. In a recent case of Rich v. Boston, tried on the 6th Feb. Erie J. in summing up a similar case, told the jury, "that the law was clear, that no man had a right to use his property to the injury of his neighbour; but that it was equally clear that any man might make a reasonable use of his own property in a convenient place, though it were to the detriment of his neighbour; and that though the value of the plaintiff's premises was clearly lowered, still no action could be maintained if the injury proceeded from a reasonable use by the defendant of his own property in a convenient place;" referring apparently to Com. Dig. Cur. adv. vult.

Lord DENMAN, C.J., now stated, that Mr. Justice Erie's ruling in the case referred to had been misapprehended, that that learned judge had left the case in the ordinary way, and had not in any way afforded an authority for the present application. The rule must therefore be refused. Rule refused.

HILL V. HAYWOOD.

Money lent—Particulars—Evidence.

In an action for money lent, evidence was given of an admission by the defendant that he had had the money, accompanied with a statement that it had been "allowed in the rent." The rent was due from the plaintiff's brother to the defendant's mother-in-law. The plaintiff then tendered the mother-in-law's rent-book, produced by the defendant in obedience to a notice, in order to shew that no allowance had been made in the rent. Held, admissible evidence for that purpose.

Assumpsit for money lent, money paid, and on an account stated.

The bill of particulars contained various items, all for money lent, and concluded thus: "Above are the particulars of the plaintiff's demand, for the recovery whereof she will avail herself of all or any of the counts of the declaration." At the trial it appeared that the plaintiff lived with her brother in a house, which he rented of the defendant's mother-in-law; that the plaintiff's attorney went to the house of the mother-in-law, where defendant also lived, and made a demand of the money sought to be recovered; that the defendant denied the debt, and thereupon the plaintiff's attorney read several items from a paper, one being an item of 40l.; that the defendant having said, "I don't owe you 40l." the mother-in-law interposed, and said, "I agree to the 40l. but it was allowed in the rent;" and the defendant added, "If any thing has been advanced to me, it has been allowed in the rent, as the book will shew." Notice to produce that book had been given, and it was produced accordingly. It appeared to be a book containing entries as to the rents belonging to the mother-in-law, but some of them in the defendant's handwriting; and it was used by the plaintiff to shew that there was no entry of any allowance against the rent due from the plaintiff's brother in that book. Verdict for the plaintiff, 145l.

Allen Serjt. (on Saturday, April 18) moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, or a new trial granted. First, the book, if evidence at all, was evidence of an account stated, not of money lent; and the plaintiff by the particulars of demand was confined to evidence of money lent. (Roberts v. Edwards, 2 Dowl. N.S. 456.) Secondly, the book was improperly received. It was not the defendant's book, but the mother-in-law's rent-book, and there was no proof that the defendant had any custody or control of the book.

PATTERSON, J.—The plaintiff proves an admission by the defendant that he had had the money, accompanied with a statement that it had been allowed for the rent; and then he uses the book to negative the statement as to the allowance. Cur. adv. vult.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now stated that they had seen the learned judge, and were of opinion that they ought to be no rule. Rule refused.

VINCENT V. DORE.

Promissory note—Action against surety—Arrangement with creditors—Delivery up of note.

Assumpsit on a promissory note, made by the defendant a testator as surety for one Mary Baldry.

Plea (amongst others), that the said Mary Baldry being in embarrassed circumstances, the said note had been given as a collateral security for advances made to her by the plaintiff, &c. That afterwards an arrangement was entered into between the said Mary Baldry and her creditors, of whom the plaintiff, Messrs. Nicholson, and Messrs. Combe and Delaford, were the principal, whereby they agreed to accept 10s. in the pound upon money lent, and 5s. in the pound upon goods sold; and no proceedings were to be taken on the note. The plea concluded by alleging that just before and at the time of making the arrangement, an account was stated with the plaintiff of the principal and interest due on the note; and then alleging payment of the composition. Upon the construction of that plea the learned judge (Lord DENMAN, C.J.) at the trial thought that the plaintiff was bound to prove that the other two creditors named in the plea were parties to the arrangement for the delivery up of the note; but the evidence was, that that part of the arrangement was made with the plaintiff's agent, after the agents for the other creditors had left. Verdict for the plaintiff, 100l.

Petersdorff, on Saturday, April 18, moved for a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence. The arrangement as to the note was quite immaterial to the other creditors; because they accepted a composition in full discharge, and were paid at the time; and the plea does not allege that the other creditors were parties to that arrangement. Cur. adv. vult.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now said that they thought there ought to be a Rule nisi.

April 18 and 26.

ELLIS V. ABRAHAM.

If a plaintiff declares that the defendant maliciously and without probable cause preferred an indictment, the assumpsit is proved if one of the charges was malicious and preferred without probable cause, although there was good ground for another of the charges preferred.

This was an action for a malicious prosecution. It was tried at the sittings in London after last Term, and a verdict passed for the plaintiff. The indictment declared on charged the now plaintiff with perjury, and contained two assignments of perjury; and at the trial evidence was given which shewed that, as to one of the assignments of perjury, the indictment had been preferred without reasonable or probable cause.

The defendant's counsel proposed to give evidence to shew that there had been reasonable and probable cause for preferring the indictment on the second assignment of perjury. It was, however, intimated by the learned judge who tried the case, that, in his opinion, a verdict for the plaintiff could be supported, though the jury should find that there was want of probable cause for one only of the assignments for perjury, and further evidence was not given.

Watson, Q.C. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.—The ground of action was, that the plaintiff had preferred the indictment without reasonable or probable cause; that means the whole indictment. If the defendant preferred one of the several charges included in the indictment with reasonable or probable cause, then the indictment was not in the whole preferred without reasonable or probable cause. Deleport v. Towne (1 Q.B. 333) is an authority so far as acts are concerned; and the principle is well laid down in Johstone v. Sutton (1 F.R. 547). Reed v. Taylor (4 Taun. 616) is a direct authority the other way; but Mansfield, C.J. put that decision on the want of precedent for the application. Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, April 25.—Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The argument in support of the application is based on a fallacy. If it be true that an indictment was not preferred with reasonable or probable cause, because, though there was good ground for preferring one of the charges in it, there was not good ground for preferring the other, it must be equally true that there was reasonable or probable cause for preferring it, because, though there was no good ground for preferring one of the charges in it, there was good ground for preferring the other. Rule refused.

Monday, April 27.
LAYTON v. HURRY.
5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 59.

A plea justifying a trespass by conversion of seven horses and sale of two, under the provisions of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 59, must shew affirmatively that the sale of the two was necessary to pay the expenses incurred for the keep of all. A plea which omitted this covenant was held bad after verdict.

*Trespass for seizing and converting seven horses, and selling two of them. Plea, under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 59, that the seven horses were unlawfully seized, damage feasant upon the defendant's close, and that they were duly impounded, and for the expenses incurred in supplying them with food during the seven days, the two horses were sold in market overt after the requisite notice according to the statute had been given. There were other pleas upon which nothing now turned, as the rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. was for a new trial, or for judgment for the plaintiff, non obstante verdicto upon this plea.*

Gunning and Couch now shewed cause.—The interpretation to be put upon this statute is either that it is lawful to sell all beasts that are impounded for the expenses of their keep, and the surplus is to be rendered to the owner, in which case the plea is good, for although it is not averred that the sale of the two was necessary, or that the surplus was given to the owner, that omission does not make defendant a trespasser ab initio, being only an abuse of a statutory power. (Smith v. Egginton, 7 A. & E. 167; Shawland v. Gorett, 5 B. & C. 485.) And the defendant cannot be in a worse situation, because he has sold only two instead of all. Or the statute may authorize the sale of such as may in the discretion of the person who has impounded them be thought necessary, and if this is done bona fide the defendant is justified. Here the omission of the allegation that the sale of two was necessary was only ground of special demurrer, and the plea is, at any rate, good after verdict.

Byles, Serjt. contra.—Whatever be the power given by this statute, that should have been strictly followed and pleaded; but here the plea does not accord with any construction, and the averment that the sale of the two was necessary is an essential averment, the omission of which the verdict does not in any way cure.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It is true that the statute gives power to sell the animals for the expense of their keep, but this must have a reasonable construction, and a fair and proper discretion must be exercised in the sale. Then a plea justifying the sale of two for the keep of seven, must shew that it was reasonable and necessary to do so.

The rest of the Court concurred. But, Lord DENMAN, C.J. added.—We do not say that he was a trespasser ab initio, but that the sale of the two horses is not justified.

Rule absolute for new trial unless arranged. (a)

LEE v. MERRETT.

Money had and received.

Semble, an action for money had and received will not lie, where, upon a settlement of accounts between the parties, there has been a mistake in the allowance of a sum twice over, but where no money actually passed between the parties.

(a) This was necessary, as the plea being found bad after verdict, the plaintiff was entitled to damages in respect of the sale of the horses thus left unjustified, and only the jury who try the issues can assess the damages.

Crowder, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule for nonsuit obtained by Kinglake, Serjt. The point was, whether an action for money had and received would lie, when, upon a settlement of accounts between the parties, a sum had been twice allowed by mistake, but no money had actually passed between them. Wharton v. Walton (4 B. & C. 163) was distinguished, but

The Court intimated that they felt a very strong opinion that the action could not be maintained, and they deferred hearing the argument in support of the rule.

Wednesday, April 29.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF HIGH BICKINGTON.

Certificate of chargeability.

The only evidence of chargeability taken before the removing justices was a certificate under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. A copy of this was sent with the other examinations, and at the end of the copy was written: "This certificate was received in evidence by us, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Devon, and acting therein. Sept. 13, 1844." Then followed a copy of the signatures of two justices of the same name as the removing justices. The certificate referred, by name, to all the paupers removed. Held, that there was sufficient evidence that the certificate was produced in the course of the inquiry touching the settlement of the paupers, and that they were the paupers named therein.

On appeal against an order of removal from Atherington to High Bickington, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case. The only evidence of chargeability produced before the removing justices was contained in a certificate under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which was as follows:—"The board of guardians of the Barnstaple Union, in the county of Devon, do hereby certify that on the 7th December, inst. Ann Ford, wife of John Ford, and Thomas, aged about nine years, Mary Ann, aged about seven years, Triphena, aged about four years, and John, aged about one year, her children, became, and are now chargeable to the parish of Atherington, in the said union; in testimony whereof the common seal of the said guardians is hereto affixed, at a meeting of their board this 13th day of September, 1844. (L.S.)—A. S. Willett, presiding chairman of the said board.—Counter-signed by J. S. Clay, clerk to the board of guardians of the Barnstaple union." A copy of this was sent to the appellants, and to it was appended the following note:—"This certificate was received in evidence by us, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Devon, and acting therein, the 13th of September, 1844.—J. Dene; James Whyte." The other examinations were solely as to the settlement.

The grounds of appeal were, that the examinations contained no sufficient evidence that the paupers, or any, or either of them, were, at the date of the application for or making such order, chargeable to the parish of Atherington. That it did not appear by the said examinations that any certificate of the chargeability of the said paupers, or any, or either of them, was produced or proved before the justices, at the making of the said order of removal. The sessions overruled the objections, and confirmed the order.

Greenwood (with whom was Rowe), in support of the order of Sessions.—The objection made is twofold. 1. That the present examinations do not shew that the chargeability was legally proved. 2. That it does not appear that the certificate produced related to the paupers removed. As to the first point, this exhibit, as it may be called, is unnecessary altogether. The statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 69, enacts, that the certificate shall be sufficient evidence of all the facts stated therein, and no further evidence of chargeability shall be required. Then the Poor Law Amendment Act requires a copy of every examination to be sent, and here a copy was sent. But even assuming that an exhibit was necessary, it sufficiently appears here that the certificate was taken with reference to and pending the inquiry into the pauper's settlement. It purports to have been produced before the same justices who made the order, and upon the same day. It will be intended, therefore, that it was in the same proceeding. This intendment has been made as to convictions. (Re v. Thompson, 2 T. R. 18; Re v. Bennett, 6 T. R. 75; Re v. Swallow, 8 T. R. 284; Re v. Crisp, 7 East, 389, 393); which cases are not overruled. 2. There was no necessity to have any one to identify the paupers as the persons named in the certificate. Those to be removed are all the same name as those in the certificate, even to Trephina. It is solely a question for the magistrates. How, indeed, could any proof meet this objection? Reg. v. Slouford (2 Q.B. 526), which may be relied upon on the other side, is clearly distinguishable. That only decided that the grounds of appeal could not be held to refer to the examinations, merely because there was one Jackman mentioned in each. He was then stopped.

Mericalc (with whom was M. Whyte) contra.—It is clear that, to support an order of removal, evidence of the chargeability of the paupers is necessary; then the certificate is a mode of proof substituted for the more usual one by witnesses. It must, therefore, be shewn, that the certificate was in fact produced before the magistrates. It is not so shewn. The case finds expressly that "the paper which purported to be a certificate of chargeability appeared to be a copy; the signatures were copies, and the place of the seal was marked with the letters L. S. How, then, is it proved to be the certificate produced? It is no exhibit, as it is called, for it does not authenticate it as a copy, but is only a copy of certain words attached to a certificate, which may or may not have been produced, pending the inquiry as to the settlement of these paupers. (Reg. v. Shipston-upon-Stour, 6 Q. B. 119.) 2. The identity of the parties referred to in the certificate and those removed is in no way shewn. The mere fact that it is sent at the same time is nothing (Reg. v. Shipston-upon-Stour); nor is the identity of name any thing. (Reg. v. How, 11 A. & E. 159; Reg. v. Stockton-upon-Tees, 2 New Sess. Cas.) Then Reg. v. Tordoff (5 Q. B. 933) disposes of the cases cited as to intendment. So identity must always be proved when a previous conviction is brought forward against a prisoner.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I have no doubt about it. The Sessions were quite right. Order confirmed.

REG. v. BUCHANAN.

Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act.

Practising at the Quarter Sessions as an attorney without being duly admitted is a misdemeanor, indictable under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. Disobedience to the express prohibition of a statute is indictable as a misdemeanor, although the offence is a new one, and there is another punishment inflicted by a subsequent section.

Secus, if the prohibition and punishment are contained in the same section.

This was an indictment against Mr. Buchanan, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, for practising as an attorney at the Quarter Session at Canterbury, without being duly qualified. It had been removed into this Court by certiorari (see 5 L. T. 238), and the defendant having failed in an application to quash it, had demurred to the indictment.

The Solicitor-General (with him Horne), in support of the demurrer.—This indictment is framed upon the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2, and contains no charge of an indictable offence. It never could have been intended to make the acting as an attorney an indictable offence, since the deprivation of the power of receiving fees, under sec. 26, and the liability to be punished for a contempt of Court under sec. 31, are ample provisions against the evil intended to be put down by the statute. Comparing this with the previous statutes, the same inference will be drawn. The 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, and 22 Geo. 2, c. 46, would apply to parties acting before Courts of Quarter Sessions, yet there is no single precedent of any indictment under those statutes. Applications have been made to punish for contempt, and parties have been prevented from receiving their fees, but no indictment has been presented. If this defendant is indictable, then any person who ever appears before a petty justice would be liable, for the second section does not contain the exception which the 35th does as to plaintiffs and defendants. [PATTESON, J.—But how can a man act as an attorney for himself?] The 26th section would be quite unnecessary if practising as an attorney is an indictable offence, for, according to all principles, no fees could be recovered for acting in a way prohibited by statute. In addition to that, there is the penalty as to contempt of Court. [PATTESON, J.—That section does not refer to practising before justices. Lord DENMAN, C.J.—And possibly not to Courts of Quarter Sessions.] It certainly does apply to Quarter Sessions, because it is a court of law, as has been determined as to the taxation of costs. (Clarke v. Donnan, 5 T. R. 694; Sykes v. Webster, 1 D. P. C. 708.) As to practising before justices the prohibition suffices, for the justices would not allow such persons to practise, and they could not recover their fees, and even money paid could be recovered back. But the general question arises upon this indictment which has never been judicially decided, and that is, whether an indictment will lie for doing something prohibited by a statute, although there is a distinct penalty attached to it by another section of the statute. [PATTESON, J. referred to Reg. v. Price (11 A. & E. 727).] That was an indictment under the Registration of Births' Act, and no summary proceeding was given as there is here. No doubt the dicta of the judges are strong in favour of an indictment lying, but it is submitted that there is no distinct authority for it, and to hold this as a general rule would tend to multiply criminal proceedings infinitely; as, for instance, all the numerous prohibitions and directions contained in such Acts as the Factory Acts, or the Merchant Seamen's Act. He then referred to and stated at length Castle's case (Cro. Jac. 644); R. v. Harris (4 T. R. 205); R. v. Wright (1 Burr. 543); R. v. Gregory (5 B. & Ad. 555.) Each case must depend upon its own circumstances, and a mere prohibition is not sufficient to ground an indictment. But it must be of a public nature, and such as reasonably may be considered an offence, and such as we may suppose the legislature intended to make an offence. Here, looking at the Act itself, and that it was a mere substitution for former Acts, under which an indictment was never heard of, and that the object, which may be said to be the procurement of well-qualified men to act as attorneys, is provided for by the other remedies given, and consequences arising from the statute, it is too much to say that it is also an indictable offence.

The Attorney-General (with whom was Bodkin) contra, not called upon.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The defendant is indicted for acting as attorney, not being qualified, in conducting an appeal at the Court of Quarter Sessions, which is forbidden by the 2nd section. I am clearly of opinion that the clause relates to a matter of a public nature, and that the offence, as described, is indictable. I quite agree that, if the same clause which prohibits the doing a particular act affixes a penalty, then the only remedy is by enforcing that penalty. It is as if the legislature said you shall not do this upon pain of so and so. But where the prohibition is in general terms, then I think that an indictment will lie, although a separate and additional penalty may be added in a subsequent clause. We cannot draw any inference from the provisions of other Acts, but I may observe both upon the 22 Geo. 2 and the present Act, that many unnecessary clauses are introduced; for it is obvious that no costs could be recovered for doing what is prohibited by statute; and also the assuming to act as an attorney without being so, is clearly a high contempt of the Court. Acting without the qualifications required by the Act is a factitious offence, but it is necessary for the general good that these regulations should be observed. I consider the true rule to be that laid down in Re v. Wright, and, if this were not so, there would be a prohibition which would have no effect. Crofton's case may be said to be an infamous one, for it is quite clear that where the punishment is inflicted by the same section that creates the offence, no indictment will lie, unless there be also a general prohibition.

PATTESON, J.—It may be that there is no express decision upon this principle; but I think that the law is as laid down in R. v. Dickenson (1 Saund. 135).

WILLIAMS and WIGHTMAN, JJ. concurred.

Judgment for the Crown.

The Solicitor-General then prayed leave for the defendant to plead, stating that there were affidavits which would shew that the offence was committed, if at all, under very mitigating circumstances.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I think the request unreasonable; and if the facts are as stated, that may be matter for us to consider in determining the punishment.

Application refused.

REG. v. GAWTON.

Where a parish is divided into separate townships, and churchwardens appointed for the whole, they cease to be necessary parties to appeals, and it suffices if the notice of appeal is signed by the overseers.

This was a case stated, which involved the old question as to the signature of the churchwardens being necessary to the notice of appeal, where the parish has been divided into townships, with separate overseers. It arose upon a removal from one of the townships into which Wrexham is divided to another, and the facts found were nearly the same as those in Reg. v. Acton (6 Law T.), which was a question from the same parish. The Quarter Sessions had overruled the objection, subject to the present case. The Court called on Whately, Q.C. and Phillimore to distinguish the case. —Reg. v. Acton is different, because there the township was partly in one county and partly in another, and it was found there that churchwardens were in some cases appointed separately. Here the churchwardens are stated to have been appointed for the whole. Then they are churchwardens for each part. [WILLIAMS, J.—No, they are churchwardens for no part. This was decided in Re v. Nantwich (16 East.)] R. v. Marsh (5 A. & E. 468) is an authority the other way. There would be no inconvenience, as suggested, in their being parties on each side, or the majority of the parish officers might act without them.

V. Lee, contra, referred to Re v. North Riding (6 A. & E. 803; Re v. Derbyshire (ib. 885); Re v. Warwickshire (ib. 873); Reg. v. Acton (6 Law T.).

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Suppose this were a new case; if the parish is divided, and overseers appointed separately, they are overseers for all purposes.

PATTESON, WILLIAMS, and WIGHTMAN, JJ. concurred.

REG. v. ASHBURTON.

Apprenticeship deed—Allowance by justices.

A deed of apprenticeship, under 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, which in the body of it accords with the requirements of the statute is good, although the allowance does not state affirmatively, or by distinct words of reference, that the justices who signed it were the same as those who made the order, or were acting in and for the county at the time the allowance was made.

On appeal, the Sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case, the single point in which was, whether the allowance by justices to an apprenticeship deed, under 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, must shew distinctly, or by reference, the jurisdiction of the justices who allowed it, and that they were the same who made the order.

Greenwood (with him Merivale) in support of the order.—This indenture of apprenticeship in every respect agrees with the requisites of the statute. It recites the consent of the justices, and the date of the order, and then the allowance is dated the same day, and signed by two justices, bearing the same name as those by whom the order was made, and purports to be by two of her Majesty's justices, and to have been allowed before the execution of the deed by any of the parties. It is clear that in fact they were the same justices who made the order; and no form of allowance is required by the statute. It only requires that the indenture be allowed by such justices; that is, the justices who made the order of apprenticeship; and it is a question of fact for the Sessions to determine. It might as well be objected that the deed is not good, because not signed by the overseers as such. [PATTERSON, J.—It cannot be necessary to aver that they are the said justices.] Yet they must contend for that, for even if their jurisdiction had been stated, it could not have been shewn they were the same identical justices mentioned in the indenture. Re v. Hinckley (1 B. & Ald. 327); Re v. Countesthorpe (2 B. & Ad. 487), were referred to.

ROWE, contra.—There are two fallacies in the argument on the other side. It is assumed that the word such in the Act means the same justices who make the order. But this is not so, for any justices having jurisdiction might sign the allowance, and it is supposed not to be an act of jurisdiction. But this is clear. [PATTERSON, J.—They must sign together. See R. v. Hamstall Ridware, 3 T. R. 380.] That being so, their authority to do the act must distinctly appear as in jurats. (Reg. v. Shipston-upon-Stour, 6 Q. B. 119.) The identity of name is not sufficient, nor that like allowance took place upon the same day.

(Reg. v. St. Anne's, Westminster, 2 New Sess. Cas.; Reg. v. Bloxham, 1 New Sess. Cas.) The question is open here, for the objection was, that the allowance by justices did not legally appear upon the face of the documents, which the Sessions overruled. It should have stated that they were acting in and for the county. (Reg. v. Stockton, 2 New Sess. Cas.; 1 New Mag. Cas.) Or at least words of reference should have been inserted, so as to show they were the justices whose jurisdiction is set out in the indenture.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This is no doubt an act of jurisdiction, and I am very unwilling to favour any laxity of practice in these matters, and have some doubt whether this is a sufficient statement, but the rest of the Court think otherwise.

PATTERSON, J.—If this allowance were to have validity as a document separate from the indenture, then it would be necessary to shew the jurisdiction of the justices who make it. But taken with the documents it suffices. Such must mean the same justices; then it is stated that prior to the execution of the indenture the allowance was signed. And the presumption of omnia rite acta applies. The indenture also refers to the order of the justices who are of the same name as those who sign the allowance, and it is executed upon the same day after the allowance; then it is clear that the documents shew that they had jurisdiction.

WILLIAMS and WIGHTMAN, JJ. concurred.

Pleading—Debt on a deed—Covenant.

Debt. The declaration set out a deed which, after reciting the assignment, by the defendant to the plaintiff, of a policy of insurance, contained a covenant by the defendant to pay to the insurance office the annual premiums, and provided that, if he should neglect or refuse to do so, it should be lawful for the plaintiff to pay them, and recover the same in an action as for money paid to the defendant's use. The declaration then alleged the nonpayment by the defendant, and the payment by the plaintiff of a certain premium, whereby (the defendant not having repaid him) an action had accrued, &c. Held, upon demurrer, that the declaration was good, and that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to sue in covenant.

Debt on a deed, which recited that a policy of insurance had been effected in the Caledonian Insurance Office, on the life of the defendant, for 999l. and that the defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff, it had been agreed that he should assign the policy to the plaintiff; and that he had so assigned it. The deed then contained a covenant by the defendant that he would pay the annual premiums, and all sums necessary to keep the policy alive; and an agreement by him, that if he should at any time refuse or neglect to pay such premiums, &c. it should be lawful for the plaintiff to pay the same, and "to sue for and recover the same in an action at law as for money paid to the use of the defendant." The declaration then alleged that an annual premium had become due; that the defendant had neglected and refused to pay; and that the plaintiff had paid the same; whereby, and by reason of the defendant not having repaid the same to the plaintiff, an action had accrued, &c. To this declaration the defendant demurred.

Petersdorff, in support of the demurrer, contended that the plaintiff ought to have brought his action in covenant upon the deed. Wherever the covenant upon which the plaintiff proceeds is a covenant to perform any act beyond the simple payment of money from the one party to the other, debt will not lie on the deed; the action must be in covenant. Here the covenant is collateral, to pay the insurance office; and therefore debt will not lie. (Harrison v. Matthews, 10 Mee. & W. 768; Randall v. Rigby, 4 M. & W. 130.) And no agreement between parties can vary the proper form of action. (Ker v. Osborne, 9 East, 378; Marshall v. Hopkins, 9 East, 313; Lindon v. Hooper, Cowp. 414.)

Crompton, contra.—Debt will lie where by deed upon a particular event a sum certain is to be paid; and that is the case here. The annual premium is a sum certain; for id certum est quod certum reddi potest; and the plaintiff proceeds upon the implied covenant to repay contained in the words "it shall be lawful for him to sue for and recover the same, &c." (Hooper v. Shepherd, 2 Strange, 1089; Ingleton v. Cripps, 2 Lord Raym. 814; Com. Dig. "Debt," A. 4.) In Randall v. Rigby, and Harrison v. Matthews, the covenants were collateral; and therefore debt would not lie; but in Evans v. Jones (5 Mee. & W. 295) it was held that debt would lie upon a covenant by the defendant to pay a sum certain, though the same sum was by the same deed secured by a mortgage. [LORD DENMAN, C.J. mentioned the case of Yates v. Aston, 4 Q.B. 182.]

Petersdorff, in reply.—In the cases cited, the covenants were direct covenants between the parties to the action; but here the covenant is to pay the office; and a tender to the plaintiff of the amount of the premium, or even payment of it to him, would be no answer to an action for the breach of that covenant.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—I entertain no doubt that this action is maintainable. A deed is set out, which shews that the defendant ought to have paid money; that it was not paid; and that he had agreed that the plaintiff should pay it, and recover it from him as money paid to his use. It seems only necessary to state the case to shew that debt will lie.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

April 21 and 22.

BENTLEY v. CARVER.

Costs—Practice.

The costs incurred by a cause being made a remanet, are costs in the cause, and are therefore not chargeable upon a defendant obtaining a new trial on the payment of costs.

This was a town cause, originally entered for the sittings after Trinity Term, 1844. In consequence of the length of the cause list, it had been made a remanet, and not tried until the sittings after Michaelmas Term in the same year. A verdict was then found for the plaintiff, which was afterwards set aside, and a new trial granted upon payment of costs by the defendant. In taxing these costs, the Master, upon the authority of Robinson v. Day (2 N. & M. 670), allowed to the plaintiff the costs of the cause being made a remanet. A rule had been obtained for the Master to review his taxation, against which cause was now shewn by considerable deliberation, in Robinson v. Day. There a pointed distinction was made between town and country causes. In the latter it is admitted the earlier decisions are to the effect that, in the case of a new trial, the party to whom it is granted is not liable for the expense of making a cause remanet. [TINDAL, C. J.—Why should there be any difference between them?] In town causes, the expenses are often incurred several times as the Court proceeds from sittings to sittings. The cause in the country has to be re-entered, and then a fresh notice of trial given, and has no priority; whereas in town it is continued in the list until it gradually finds its way to the top, and no fresh notice of trial is requisite.

Wilde, 8r Thos. Serjt. in support of the rule.—The case of Robinson v. Day was decided without referring to the old decisions. In practice none of the officers of the other courts, or even of the Queen's Bench, act upon the principles of that case. Costs upon a new trial granted, and costs of the day, stand upon the same footing; and in the latter the costs occasioned by a cause being made a remanet, are not included. (Waters v. Weatherby, 3 Dowl. 328; Brett v. Stone, 1 D. & L. 140.) The proper costs to be allowed in both cases are those to which either party has been put in preparing for trial. Where either party in an earlier stage of proceedings has obtained costs of the day, still the party ultimately successful has the costs of the cause being made a remanet. There is no reason why a party should be in a worse position as to the costs of the cause, because a verdict has been found which the Court thinks ought not to stand, and which may perhaps be upset at the second trial. (Gibbons v. Phillips, 8 B. & C. 437; Saddler v. Evans, 4 Burr. 1986.)

TINDAL, C. J.—If this were res nova I should be disposed to make this rule absolute, but we will speak to some of the judges of the other courts.

Cur. adv. vult.

On the following day TINDAL, C. J. said:—We have mentioned this case to some others of the judges. They agree with us that Robinson v. Day was decided upon some misapprehension, and must be over-ruled. In cases of this kind no costs are to be allowed but costs of the day; the rest are to be costs in the cause.

Rule absolute.

WHITE v. JAMES HANCOCK.

Debt may be maintained upon an obligation for a sum to be paid to A or his attorney, or to B.

Where a declaration upon such an obligation described it as for a sum to be paid to A: Held, that if this were a variance, it was cured by setting out a bond.

Debt on a bond in the common form.

The defendant set out the bond on oyer, "know all men, &c. that we, James Hancock and John Hancock, as sureties for J. B. are severally held and firmly bound in 100l. each to J. White, to be paid to J. White or his certain attorney, executors, &c. or to the treasurer of the Company for the time being, &c." It then set forth the condition, which was for the faithful performance of his office by J. B. to the company. The defendant then demurred, assigning for causes that the action of debt was not maintainable on this bond, that the declaration did not set forth the legal effect of the bond, that it did not shew that the money was not paid to the treasurer, &c.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the demurrer.—The action of debt will not lie, unless there is a simple duty to pay some one person. (Viner's Abridg. Debt D. Pl. 3; Wentworth's office of Executor, 123; Harrison v. Matthews, 10 M. & W. 768.) [TINDAL, C. J.—That was a covenant that the defendant or some one else would pay. In this case the defendant is to pay at all events. The same objection might be made to every bond, as the form always is to pay A B, or his attorney. Here a particular attorney, viz. the treasurer of the company, is pointed out.] Then here is a variance. The bond now appears not to be in the terms set forth in the declaration.

CRESSWELL, J.—You have corrected that by setting out the bond for the plaintiff. His declaration shews a good cause of action, and you cannot now demur. Tindal, C. J. referred to Anon. (3 Salk. 119; Dyer, 350, a.); you are out of Court upon this objection.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

GORDON v. ELLIS and OTHERS.

Pleading—Partners—Set off.

There, in an action by partners, the defendant seeks to set up the defence that the partnership was a secret one, and that he dealt with one of the partners, relying upon a set-off between himself and that partner, he must shew distinctly by his plea, that the other partners concurred in something which induced him to suppose that he was dealing with a person who had no partners.

Assumpsit for money received to the use of the plaintiff, and upon an account stated.

Plea, that before the said money was had or received, and before the stating of the account, &c. to it, &c. the plaintiffs carried on their trade and business in partnership as copartners, and thereupon hile the plaintiffs continued to be and were such partners as aforesaid, to wit, &c. the said plaintiff, M. F. G. with the privity and concurrence of the other plaintiffs, applied to and requested the defendants, who then carried on, and still continue to carry on in partnership together the trade and business of auctioneers and appraisers, and also then retained and employed them, the defendants, as such auctioneers, to put up to sale and dispose of certain property of and belonging to the plaintiffs, as such copartners as aforesaid, which they, the said defendants, then agreed to do; and they, the said defendants, further say, that at the said time, when the said M. F. G. applied to and requested them to sell and dispose of the said property, and also at the time of selling and disposing thereof, and at the time when the debts and moneys hereinafter mentioned to have become due from the said M. F. G. to the defendants, became and were due as hereinafter mentioned, the defendants believed that the said M. F. G. was the sole and exclusive owner of the said property, and had full power and lawful and absolute authority to sell and dispose of the same, and receive the proceeds thereof, as and for his own property, and for his own sole use, benefit, and advantage, they, the defendants, then having, and they in fact say, that they had no notice or knowledge whatsoever that the said other plaintiffs, or any other person whatever, had any right, title, estate, or interest whatever in the said property, or any part thereof, and the defendants further say, that the said defendants afterwards, to wit, &c. sold and disposed of the said property for certain sums of money, being the same identical moneys in the declaration above-mentioned, and for which this action is brought; and that after the said M. F. G. had so retained and employed them as aforesaid, and before the said defendants had any notice that the said M. F. G. was not the sole and exclusive owner of the said property, or the proceeds thereof, or any part thereof; and before the commencing of this suit, &c. the said M. F. G. was indebted to the defendant, &c. shewing a set-off in the usual form.

To this plea there was a replication, which was specially demurred to. The argument, however, was confined to the validity of the plea.

Byles, Serjt. (with him Willes) for the defendants.—The plea is good upon general demurrer. The effect of it is, that the defendants knew no one in the transaction but M. F. G. In ordinary cases, it is true, that there is no set-off of a debt due from one member of a firm against a debt due to the whole firm. But these partners are in the nature of undisclosed principals. They allow M. F. G. to be the sole and exclusive owner of the goods; he has possession of them, and deals with them as his own, exactly as a factor might do. [TINDAL, C. J.—It does not appear clearly that M. F. G. had possession.] (Carr v. Hinckley, 4 B. & C. 647) At all events the other partners lie by. The defendants had no notice. All is said to be done with the privity and concurrence of the co-partners. It is a well-established rule of law, that partners who do not appear, and undisclosed principals are to be placed upon the same footing. (Stims v. Bond, 5 B. & Ad. 393; Stacey v. Ross, 1 Esp. 470.) All that the plea need aver is, that the other partners did not appear to the defendants. The fact that the defendants knew of the partnership at the time of the employment should come from the other side. (George v. Clagett, 7 T. R. 359; Rabone v. Williams, 7 T. R. 360, note a.) Formerly this defence might be set up under the general issue. Now, it will suffice on general demurrer, if the plea state, in substance, that when M. F. G. employed the defendants, he employed them as the true and sole owner.

TINDAL, C. J.—No, that will not do, unless it shews some concurrence on the part of the other partners. Here there is no allegation, nothing whatever to shew any default by the other partners. This is a mere plea of set-off against one partner.

Channell, Serjt. (with him Bovill), for the plaintiffs, were not called upon. Judgment for the plaintiffs.

GERAUD v. RICHMOND.

Yearly salary—Statute of Frauds.

1. An agreement to receive a person as clerk, and to pay him a salary at rates varying each year until after the fifth year, is within the latter part of the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds.

2. Under an agreement whereby A undertakes to pay to B a salary at the rate of £ a year, nothing is recoverable as a rateable proportion for part of a year.

Assumpsit for wages or salary for services done and performed by the plaintiff, &c.

Plea, non assumpsit.

At the trial it appeared that the action was brought to recover wages for services performed by the plaintiff. On the 2nd of May, 1842, the plaintiff entered into the service of the defendant upon the following memorandum being signed by the defendant: "I agree to receive you as clerk or book-keeper in my establishment, in consideration of your paying me a premium of 300l. and to pay you a salary at the following rates, viz.: for the first year, 70l.; for the second, 60l.; for the third, 110l.; for the fourth, 130l.; for the fifth and following years, 150l.: and I also agree, in case of the death of either of us, to return 150l." It appeared in evidence that, upon the occasion of this memorandum being signed, the plaintiff had said to the defendant that it would suit him to receive his salary quarterly; and it was shown that that had been the uniform mode of payment between the parties. At the time of action brought the plaintiff had served for more than three, but less than four, years. All payments due to the end of the third year had been made, and the plaintiff now claimed a quarter's salary.

Under these circumstances Colman, J. consulted the plaintiff, upon the ground that he could sustain no action until the end of the fourth year, reserving leave to move to enter a verdict for 46l. A rule having been obtained for that purpose, Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The plaintiff was rightly nonsuited. The contract only provided for a yearly payment. It is like the case of a yearly rent reserved which is only payable at the end of the year. (Bacon's Abridg. Rent F. Lutwych, 231; Spain v. Arnott, 2 Stark, 256; Turner v. Robinson, 5 B. & Ad. 789.) This is not like the case where a contract is rescinded by mutual consent, upon an understanding that payment should be made pro rata. (Thomas v. Williams, 1 A. & E. 685.) Unless, therefore, this contract could be varied by parol, the nonsuit must stand. But this is an agreement "not to be performed within a year," within sect. 4. of the Statute of Frauds, and therefore could not be by parol at all. There is in it, moreover, no contingency. Written agreements would be valueless if they could be varied by parol. (Goss v. Lord Nugent, 5 B. & Ad. 58; Marshall v. Lynn, 6 M. & W. 109.) Neither can they be varied by the conduct of the parties. The mere fact that the payments have been made quarterly will not affect the question. Ridgway v. Hungerford Market Company (5 A. & E. 171) has no bearing upon this case.

Talfourd, Serjt. in support of the rule.—The written contract only defines the rate, not the time or mode of payment. The year is only mentioned to facilitate the calculation. In the absence of an express contract, services done entitle the plaintiff to payment. There is no analogy between this case and that of rent. The latter is an entire matter, very different from personal service. This is more like the case of use and occupation, with the debt accruing de die in diem. [CRESSWELL, J.—If there were no evidence but the written contract, would the plaintiff after a day's service, be entitled to require pay for that day?] I think he might. Then it is consistent with this case that there was a substituted agreement for quarterly payments. That would bring it to the case of Ridgway v. Hungerford Market. That supposition is helped by the evidence that the payments were always made quarterly. But even without this, it may be argued that the time of payment is left entirely open and unsettled. [CRESSWELL, J.—Then you come to this. If the time of payment is material, there is a material term of the contract not provided for, and as the contract extends over five years, the Statute of Frauds puts you out of Court.]

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that this contract binds the parties for five years, and is therefore within the Statute of Frauds. It is an agreement that cannot be performed within a year. The work and labour was done either under this contract or under none. Then this contract must have the same construction as a lease, reserving a yearly rent, and the salary must be regarded as a yearly salary, payable at the end of every year, and at no other time. Were we to interpose any other terms we should violate the statute. But the plaintiff wishes it to be inferred, from the conduct of the parties, that quarterly payment was contemplated. The actions, however, of the parties cannot carry it further than parol evidence would. Both are alike inadmissible, to alter or vary a written contract. That is clear from Goss v. Nugent. The case of Ridgway v. Hungerford Market Company was quite different. There the nonsuit was directed upon a different point, and there was no decision upon any point like the present.

COLTMAN, CRESSWELL, and ERLE, JJ. concurred. Rule discharged.

TOMLINSON, CLERK, v. BOUGHEY and OTHERS.

Practice—Costs.

In carrying out 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 46, the Court will follow the general rule of giving costs to the successful party, or against the party making default, unless there be some special circumstances to justify a departure from that general rule.

This was a feigned issue under the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, in which Talfourd, Serjt., had obtained a rule for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit. The plaintiff was rector of Stoke-upon-Trent, in Staffordshire; the defendants, owners of lands within the parish. Proceedings being taken before an assistant tithe-commissioner, under the statute, the defendant set up fourteen several moduses. Of these ten were found in their favour. The rector commenced his action in order to try his right, pursuant to section 46. The defendants having refused to accept the issue, the matter came before the Court in Easter Term 1845, and the Court decided that upon all the moduses found for the landowners, except two, the decision of the commissioner was final. (Tomlinson v. Boughey, 1 C.B. 663.) Issue was joined as to these two in Trinity Term 1845. The plaintiff then made a fruitless attempt to change the venue. No further steps having been taken, the present rule had been obtained, against which Channell, Serjt. shewed cause.

It is doubtful whether this is the proper form of procedure to obtain the costs, which, by sec. 46 of the statute, are left in the discretion of the Court in which proceedings are taken. The cases of Wick v. Colton, 1 D. & L. 227, and Sandys v. Beverley, 12 M. & W. 568, are contradictory. It is agreed, however, that no objection shall be taken to the form of the rule. All the more important matters of dispute between the parties have been already decided in favour of the defendants, without costs. Tomlinson v. Boughey, 1 C.B. 672. It now appears, by his affidavit, that he has declined to proceed, upon the ground that the prospect of a verdict is insufficient to warrant the expense of a trial.

Talfourd, Serjt. in support of the rule.—There is nothing to take this case out of the general rule, that the defendant should have his costs where the plaintiff declines to proceed. It is of no consequence to inquire what were the plaintiff's motives for following his present course. The defendants have been put to expense in preparing for their defence, and are entitled to be reimbursed.

TINDAL, C.J.—Under 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 46, we may vary from the usual rule if we please. But I think, in this case, there is no sufficient reason for departing from that rule. The form, however, of the rule, now made absolute, had better be that of an order under the statute that the defendants should have their costs.

Rule accordingly.

SMITH v. UNETT.

RUMBALL v. UNETT.

Practice—Waiver.

The defendant, an attorney, being served with process out of the county for which the writ was taken out, thanked the party serving him for certain acts of courtesy in the mode of service, and promised to attend to the writ. Held, a waiver of the irregularity.

In these cases the writs described the defendant of a certain place in Staffordshire, at which he resided. He had, however, an office in Birmingham, more than a mile from the boundary of the county of Stafford, at which he was in the habit of attending daily. On April 1st, a clerk to the plaintiff's attorney called upon him at his office, and was admitted to see him in his private room. It appeared that the plaintiff's attorney and the defendant were on terms of intimacy, and that upon the occasion referred to the clerk of the plaintiff's attorney, after expressing his regret at the unpleasant nature of his errand, and his desire that the matter might be transacted as quietly as possible, served the defendant with copies of the writs. The defendant said that he was much obliged for the consideration shewn him in the mode of service, and that he would attend to it. On April 7th, a summons was taken out to shew cause, before Cresswell, J. at Chambers, why the service of the writs should not be set aside for irregularity. Cresswell, J. discharged the summons, with costs, upon the ground that the application should have been made within four days. On the first day of the present Term Byles, Serjt. had obtained a rule for rescinding the order of Cresswell, J. and for setting aside the service of the writs.

Talfourd, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The circumstances amount to a waiver of an irregularity that may have been committed, and the defendant, having accepted the service, cannot now set it aside. As an attorney, he must have known at the time of service that he had the power of objecting, if he thought fit.

Byles, Serjt.—The observation of the defendant, "I will attend to it," only meant, "I will defend myself as well as I can." There is nothing to shew that at the time of service the defendant was aware of the defect. He might not know exactly where the boundary of the county was, and whether the room in which he was sitting was within 200 yards of the borders or not.

By the COURT.—It is impossible, under the circumstances, to think that the defendant did not know the boundary over which he must have passed every day on his way to his office. Whether he did or not is not very material, as he took the writ for better or worse, and was very grateful for the courtesy exhibited in the mode of serving it. There was a plain acceptance of the service.

Rule discharged, with costs.

DOE dem. PHILLIPS v. ROLLINS.

Where a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to a special case, to be settled by an arbitrator, and the arbitrator having settled the case, the defendant refused to obtain the signature of a serjeant, the Court ordered that, unless the defendant caused the case to be signed by a serjeant in his behalf within a week, the postea should be delivered to the plaintiff.

This action was tried before Tindal, C.J. in August 1845; a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to a special case, to be settled by a person named in the order, at Nisi Prius, and therein called an arbitrator. The order provided that "the costs of the cause and of the reference should abide the event of the said award," but it gave the arbitrator no power finally to determine the cause. The special case had been accordingly settled and signed by a serjeant, on behalf of the plaintiff. The defendant had been requested, but had refused, to procure the signature of a serjeant on his own behalf.

Channell, Serjt. after referring to Mostyn v. Champneys (1 Scott, 57) and Jackson v. Hall (8 Taunt. 421), upon the suggestion of the Court, took a rule ordering that unless the defendant caused the case to be signed by a serjeant in his behalf within a week, the postea should be delivered to the plaintiff.

Rule accordingly.

WALKER v. REMMETT.

Letter of attorney—stamp.

A document in the following form: "I do hereby authorise you to indorse, or cause to be indorsed, my name to three several bills of exchange now in your possession (describing them), which said indorsement I do hereby undertake shall be binding upon me," is a letter of attorney within the meaning of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched. part 1, and must be stamped accordingly.

Assumpsit—Indorsee against Acceptor of a bill of exchange, drawn by Harrison to his own order, and indorsed to the plaintiff. Plea: that Harrison did not indorse. It appeared that the bill being in the hands of one Herbert, Harrison wrote to him the following letter:—"I do hereby authorise you to indorse, or cause to be indorsed, my name to three several bills of exchange, now in your possession (describing them, and one of them being the bill upon which the action was brought), which said indorsement I do hereby undertake shall be binding upon me; and I do further undertake to pay you the amount of the several bills as they shall become due, if they shall not be duly honoured when mature." At the trial it appeared that the bill had been indorsed by Herbert in Harrison's name, and this document, stamped with an agreement stamp, was offered in evidence to prove that Herbert acted with Harrison's authority. It was objected that this was a letter of attorney, and required to be stamped as such, and that therefore being merely stamped with an agreement stamp it was inadmissible. The evidence was, however, received, and a verdict found for the plaintiff. In last Term a rule had been obtained for a new trial, upon the ground of the improper reception of evidence, against which,

Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—This document is not within the meaning of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched. part 1. There three different special kinds of letters of attorney are mentioned: the first, as to the receipt of prize money; the second, as to wages; the third, as to the sale of stock, &c. Then fellows "letter or power of attorney of any other kind, or commission or factory in the nature thereof." The latter part of this description belongs to the laws of Scotland, and factory, in Scotch law, is "one species of mandate or agency where the agent is paid for his trouble." (Bell's Principles of the Law of Scotland, sec. 80.) The letter of attorney here intended is, therefore, something analogous to factory, the former part of the description belonging to English, the latter to Scotch law. That shews that some kind of formal instrument is intended. The Courts will put a liberal interpretation upon any Acts of Parliament imposing duties, so as not to make any instruments liable to them, unless manifestly within the intention of the legislature. Warrington v. Furber (8 East, 242), per Lord Ellenborough; Tomkins v. Ashby (6 B. & C. 541), per Lord Tenterden. There are only two cases directly in point. Case v. Barnard (8th Jan. 1827, G. H.), reported in the notes to "Chitty on Stamps," 186. There it is said, "A paper authorizing A to sell certain property, and thereout pay rent and expenses, and his own commission, signed by B, does not require a stamp." Monmouthshire Canal Company v. Kendal (4 B. & A. 458) raised a similar point without deciding it. Reg. v. Kelt (12 A. & E. 559) was a much stronger case than this. This is not a letter of attorney, according to the ordinary use of language. In such ordinary use a formal instrument is always contemplated. If this be decided to be a letter of attorney, there is no employment of one person by another, down to the case of a lady authorizing her servant to buy a skein of silk, which will not, if in writing, require to be stamped. Suppose the letter had been, "I'll bear you harmless, if you indorse the bills," and he had then failed to indemnify the person to whom such letter was sent, would there be no remedy against him, unless the letter were stamped as a power of attorney? Or if A writes to his attorney, "You may sell my estate for so much," and there is an action for breach of contract, would that require more than an agreement stamp? [TINDAL, C.J.—Is there not a difference between the case where the instrument is to be used as an agreement, and the case where it is to be used as a procuration?]

Dowling, Serjt. in support of the rule.—This instrument is either an agreement, or a power of attorney. If merely an agreement, then the plaintiff must fall upon the issue as to the indorsement. In most cases, if a party chooses to rely upon an implied agency, that may be established by matter in pais; but, if the agency is sought to be proved by an instrument in writing, it can only be by power of attorney. In the latter case, it must be stamped according to the statute. The latter part of this document is a mere agreement by Harrison to do what the law would compel him to do, and may be rejected as surplusage. Rejecting it, the remainder is a simple power of attorney, in no very extraordinary form. Case v. Barnard is merely a nisi prius decision, come to at a time when the stamp laws were not well understood. In that case, and in the Monmouthshire Canal Company v. Kendal, the evidence disclosed matters rather agency than of attorney. Here, Herbert is entrusted with discretionary power, and the discretion so allowed him tends to make him the attorney of Harrison. Reg. v. Kelt (12 A. & E. 559) was a case much considered by the Court, and is in favour of the defendant. (He referred also to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21 s. 1, and sched.)

TINDAL, C.J.—It appears to me that this instrument falls within the words of the Stamp Act, which, after describing certain special letters of attorney, adds, "A letter or power of attorney of any other kind." Under that sweeping description, I cannot help including any delegation in writing to another to perform an act in one's own name. That is the appointment of an attorney. In Comyn's Dig. it is said, "An attorney is he who is appointed to do anything in the place of another. And he has a general authority, or a special one, for some particular purpose: as to make livery; to deliver a deed, &c.;" and from Cole Littleton, 52 a, it appears, that he may be appointed either by simple letter, or by deed. Then, in this case, he was appointed by letter. But it is said on the other side, that this is an agreement only, and therefore the stamp of a power of attorney is unnecessary. To this it may be answered that there is no agreement, but what the law would imply from the circumstances. Besides, as an agreement it would be bad, for no consideration appears in it. All is to be done on one side. We have no authority to take this case out of the operation of the Stamp Laws.

COLTMAN, J.—This case must be governed by Reg. v. Kelt. In that case, the Court seems to rely a little upon the discretion entrusted. I must say, I do not see here that any discretion is given; but it is by no means necessary to constitute one man attorney for another; that discretion should be allowed him. In the case of a letter of feoffment, the attorney is to make livery, and has no discretion whatever.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. I quite agree with the principle upon which it is said that the Stamp Laws are to be construed, and if I thought this case doubtful I should hesitate to bring it within them. But it seems to me to fall directly within the words of the Act. It is certainly no part of the definition of an attorney, that he should have a discretion to exercise.

ERLE, J.—I concur with the rest of the Court so far as to say that a written authority to indorse a bill of exchange is within the provisions of the Act. I only wish to guard against this decision being thought to extend the provisions of the statute further than we intend. It appears to me that the judgment must be confined to the case of authorizing one's name to be put on a bill of exchange.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

Tuesday, April 28.

LUARD and OTHERS v. BUTCHER and OTHERS.

A feigned issue in the form employed previous to the passing of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, is not "a suit for recovering any sum of money alleged to be won upon any wager," within the meaning of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 19, is an enabling, not a compulsory enactment, and therefore feigned issues may still be stated in the form of wagers between the plaintiff and the defendant.

This was a feigned issue, in the usual form of a wager of 5l. between the plaintiffs and the defendants. It was tried before Maule, J. at the first sittings in London, in the present Term, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 1s.

Kinglake, Serjt. applied for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, upon the ground of misdirection, or why the judgment should not be arrested. The misdirection was alleged to consist in telling the jury that there was sufficient evidence to warrant a verdict for the plaintiff, and the Court having heard what the evidence was, refused a rule upon this point.

Upon the second point, Kinglake, Serjt. submitted, that, by the recent Act, the declaration was bad in arrest of judgment. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, "All contracts or agreements, whether by parol or in writing, by way of gaming or wagering, shall be null and void; and no suit shall be brought or maintained in any court of law or equity for recovering any sum of money or valuable thing alleged to be won upon any wager." [CRESSWELL, J.—There is no real contract here.] [TINDAL, C. J.—It is not a wager in the sense of the Act. The Act relates to a real wager. Here, everything is based upon fiction.] Then sec. 19, together with the 2nd schedule, provides a new form in which questions of this sort are to be tried. The marginal comment on that section is "Proceedings under feigned issues abolished," and the section itself, after reciting that "many important questions are now tried in the form of feigned issues, by stating that a wager was laid between two parties," and "that such questions may be as satisfactorily tried without such form," enacts, "That in every case where any court of law or equity may desire to have any question of fact decided by a jury, it shall be lawful for such Court to direct a writ of summons to be sued out, by such person or persons as such Court shall think ought to be plaintiff or plaintiffs against such person or persons as such Court shall think ought to be defendant or defendants therein, in the form set forth in schedule 2, and thereupon all the proceedings shall go on and be brought to a close in the same manner as is now practised in proceedings under a feigned issue." The fair inference is, that even in feigned issues a wager is void, and that it is for that reason a new form is substituted, which form all parties are bound to employ. [TINDAL, C. J.—The 19th section only says, that the Court may order it to be in that form; it does not say, that you must employ that form and no other.] [CRESSWELL, J.—The plaintiff makes up a complete issue, and delivers it to the defendant. The defendant returns it with his consent; they both agree to try a particular question in a form based upon a fiction.] [TINDAL, C. J.—You assent to it upon the chance of succeeding, and when you fail you come here and object.]

Rule refused.

Wednesday, April 29.
BROWN v. GILL.

1. To entitle the steward of a court-baron to preside over its proceedings, it need not appear that he is also steward of the manor.
2. A court-baron is properly described, as being held "before A. B. esq. the steward of the said court, and C. D., E. F. and others, suitors of the said court."
3. After pleading and judgment in an inferior court, it cannot be objected, that the plaintiff by which proceedings were commenced did not disclose the form of action.
4. It is unnecessary that the names of more than two of the suitors should appear upon the judgment or other proceedings of a court-baron.

This was a writ of false judgment, upon the judgment of the court-baron, of R. Mattocks, esq. lord of the manor of Taunton Dean, in the county of Somerset. The roll of proceedings described the court as a court-baron holden at Castle Hall, in and for the said manor, according to the custom of the said court, and manor from time immemorial, before William Kinglake, esq. the steward of the said court, a free suitor thereof, and William Upham and William Eardley Mulford, and others, free suitors of the said court. It then set out, that on the 28th day of November, A.D. 1843, came James Gill, and levied his plaint against John Brown, in a plea of 39s. 11d. and a particular day was given for the appearance of both parties. On the appointed day, the proceedings shewed the appearance of both parties by their attorneys, and a declaration by J. G. against J. B. in an action of debt. Then followed an impanipance. A long series of proceedings were then set out, always alleged to be before W. K. esq. steward, and W. U., W. E. M., and others, free suitors. The judgment was in the following form: "At which next court held in and for the manor aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction aforesaid, on the 9th day of October, A.D. 1844, before Wm. Kinglake, esq. steward, and Wm. Upham, Wm. Eardley Mulford, and others, free suitors of the said court, came, as well, &c." Then came a description of the jury, the verdict for the plaintiff, &c.—"and hereupon all and singular the premises being, &c. it is considered by the said Court, &c."

Kinglake, Serjt. for the plaintiff in error, the defendant below.—First, if right to insert the name of the steward at all, it should be as steward of the manor only, not as steward of the court. The steward of the court may not even be a free suitor, and may have no right to be present. Secondly, the steward of a court-baron, even though he may be a constituent member, is not a judge of the court. The judges are the free suitors. Here it is stated that the court was held before the steward and free suitors, and then follows an ideo consideratum. That shews that it was the judgment of the steward and free suitors. This court-baron is the court of the freeholders, and is incident to every manor: in it the free suitors are the judges, and it is quite distinct from the customary court baron, which is the court of the copyholders, and in which the steward only is judge. The power of the court-baron is much more extensive than that of the latter. [TINDAL, C. J.—It is stated at the commencement of the proceedings that he is a free suitor as well as steward. The same state of things must be presumed to continue unless there is an allegation to the contrary, and then why should he lose the privilege of a free suitor, merely because he is also steward? It is stated that he is a free suitor at the commencement of the proceedings in 1843, there is no subsequent allegation to the same effect, and judgment is not until the end of 1844. There is no inference in favour of these proceedings, because it is not a court of record. The capacity in which he is everywhere said to be present is as steward. There is no distinction as to this point between the county court and the court-baron. In both the judges are the suitors only. (4 Inst. 268; Brooke's Abr. "Court Baron," pl. 11; Ibid. "Judgment," pl. 118; Jones v. Jones, 5 M. & W. 523; Holroyd v. Breare, 2 B. & A. 473; Kingsley v. Nassau, M. & M. 52.) Thirdly, the plaintiff is merely levied against the defendant in a plea of 39s. 11d. That does not shew what the character of the plaintiff or the form of action was. Fourthly, the names of all the free suitors present ought to be stated. The judgment may have been given by some of those whose names do not appear. (Lewis v. Weeks, Carth. 85, 7 Dowl. 844; Rex v. Mein, 4 T.R. 480.)

Channell, Serjt. for the defendant in error, the plaintiff below.—Jones v. Jones has no application: there the declaration was held bad on special demurrer, for not describing the county court according to the old precedents. Lord Coke (4 Inst. 55) describes the county court "as the court of the sheriff held at B;" but at page 57 he describes the court-baron as held "before the steward and suitors." The expression in the judgment, "It is considered by the Court," means the Court above described: if that description be, as it is, correct, the question is at an end. By 4 Inst. 56, it appears that in the court of the hundred, the suitors are the judges in the same way as in the court-baron. Yet in Bacon's Abrid. "Hundred Court," where to a description of the hundred court as being held "coram seneschallo et seclatoribus," it was objected that it should have been "coram seneschallo pro seclatoribus," the description was held good. Holroyd v. Breare decided that the steward was not a mere ministerial officer, but a constituent and essential part of the Court. With regard to the last point, only a sufficient number of suitors to give the Court jurisdiction need be named. This principle is adopted in the description employed for Courts of Quarter Sessions. R. v. Main is a very different case. That was a quo warranto, and the defendant rested his case upon the validity of a particular election. The title which he set up failed him.

Kinglake, Serjt. in reply.

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that the judgment of the inferior Court ought to be affirmed. Four objections have been taken to the regularity of the proceedings. First, that the steward of the court does not appear to be also steward of the manor; and that he is not competent to be present, unless he is also steward of the manor. But there is nothing in the style of the court to shew that it is necessary that the steward of the court need be steward of the manor. In Comyn's Digest, "Copyhold" (R. 5), referring to Co. Lit. 61, b, it is said, "A steward may be retained by deed, or by parol, and a retainer by parol may be for a court-leet as well as for a court-baron. A retainer by parol continues till it be discharged." That does not speak of the steward of the manor, but of the court. We know in practice, that stewards of the courts are often appointed by particular deputation. The second objection, and that upon which most reliance is placed, is, that it appears upon the face of the proceedings that the court was held before improper judges, and that being so, the Court would be without jurisdiction. If the style employed be the wrong style, then the whole proceedings are irregular. It will not, however, be necessary to consider who are really the judges of the court, since the description of the court agrees with the usual style. Mr. Kinglake does not necessarily put himself in the position of a judge. He has a known definite duty to perform, namely, to collect the suffrages of the suitors; on the other hand, the suitors have their definite duty, namely, to judge. Jones v. Jones, and the other cases relate to county courts. But there is a difference between the style of the two courts, so that what might be law in one case would not be in the other. The style of the county court is "Essex to wit. The first county court of A. B. &c. held at C." It might be usurpation to say that it was held before the sheriff; but in describing the court-baron you must say that it was held "before the steward and the suitors." In the Year Book, 21 H. 6, p. 34, it seems to have been thought well to describe the county court as held before the sheriff. As to the third objection, that the plaintiff does not specify the form of action, that goes only to a matter of irregularity, and the time is gone by for taking the objection. It has been said, indeed, that no intendment is to be made in favour of the proceedings, because the court-baron is not a court of record; but in all inferior courts, when the matter is within the jurisdiction of the Court, every intendment ought to be made for the regularity of the proceedings. As to the last point, that all the names of the suitors are not specified, no authority has been cited to shew that you must set out all the names. You must shew the names of two freeholders, because there can be no court unless there are two. There is a case, too, in Willes' Reports that they must be two old freeholders, and that it is not sufficient to make a new one. Why should we encourage prolixity, and perhaps mistakes, by requiring any thing so inconvenient as the names of all the suitors, without authority, I cannot see.

CRESSWELL, J.—With regard to the third objection; it is not usual in these inferior courts to set out the nature of the claim in the plaint. If it were necessary, the omission would only be an irregularity, which the defendant cures by appearance and pleading.

The rest of the Court concurring,
Judgment for the defendant in error (the plaintiff below).

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 29.

BOWLEY v. BELL.—Channell, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a nonsuit or for new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence.

Rule to shew cause.

EVERETT v. SMALLPIECE.—Channell, Serjt. moved for leave to plead puls darrein continuance, and that the affidavit that the matter of the plea arose within eight days might be dispensed with. Hecited Reg. Gen. H.T. 4 Wm. 4; Chitty's Archbold, 452; Powell v. Duncan (5 Dowl. 550); Dunn v. Hill (11 M. & W. 470).

Friday, April 30.

BEARD v. EGBERTON AND OTHERS.—Wild, Sir Thos. Serjt. (with him Webster and Ogilvie) in support of the demurrers. Channell, Serjt. (with him Groves and J. Brown) contra.

Cur. adv. vult.

HARRIS v. ROBINSON.—No cause being shewn against the rule obtained by C. Jones, Serjt.

Rule absolute.

COOPER v. SHEPHERD.—Dowling, Serjt. in support of the demurrer. Talford, Serjt. (with him Hawkins, contra.)

Part heard.

ROBINSON v. WHITE.—Talford, Serjt. moved for a rule ordering —, an attorney of the court, to pay the costs occasioned by his acting for an assumed client without authority, and the costs of this application.

Rule nisi.

Saturday, April 30.

RICKETTS AND OTHERS v. ARSCOTT AND OTHERS.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to sign judgment against certain of the defendants, who had been served with notice to appear to a sci. fa. in this case, and had not appeared.

Rule nisi.

Monday, April 27.

HUNTER v. CLARKE.—Dowling, Serjt. (with him Bramwell), shewed cause against the rule obtained to enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages. The question turned upon the admissibility of a certain agreement, but as it appeared that the objection had not been taken at the trial, the rule was discharged as to the first point. As to the second, it was contended that the damages should be reduced.—C. Jones, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Rule discharged.

BENNETT v. DUELAND.—Wilkins, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation, and why an order of Colman, J. for allowing the defendant all costs incurred subsequent to a summons to stay proceedings, should not be rescinded.

Rule refused.

DOE dem. — v. ROE.—Channell, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector. The notice to appear was served on the 32nd of March. It was, however, dated April 32nd, but required the party served to appear next Term. It was submitted that this might be regarded as an impossible date, and that the case was similar to Doe dem. Woodroop v. Roe (5 Scott N.R. 800), and Doe dem. Sanders v. Roe, (12 M. & W. 536).

Rule absolute.

Tuesday, April 28.

DOE dem. ATKINSON v. FAWCETT.—Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. concluded his argument against the rule. Channell, Serjt. in support of it.

Cur. adv. vult.

Wednesday, April 29.

SPECIAL PAPER.

COOPER v. SHEPHERD.—Argument concluded.

Cur. adv. vult.

FRYCE v. BELCHER.—Talford, Serjt. for the defendant; and Kinglake, Serjt. for the plaintiff.

Argument adjourned.

RULES.

DOE dem. DOREY v. ROE.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why service of the declaration and notice in ejectment upon the premises should not be good service. He produced affidavits, shewing several fruitless attempts to serve the tenant in possession.

Rule to shew cause.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

HARRISON v. ROSCOE.

In an action of assumpsit on a bill of exchange brought by a second indorsee against the drawer, the notice of dishonour proved was a notice by the plaintiff's attorney (by the authority of the plaintiff), but who, by mistake, gave the notice in the name of the first indorsee, and not in the name of the plaintiff: Held, that this misrepresentation of the name did not make the notice of dishonour void, for as the first indorsee might have recovered on this notice, the defendant had every defence as against the plaintiff as he would have had against the first indorsee.

This was an action of assumpsit by indorsee against the drawer of a bill of exchange. The bill was dated December 21, 1844, payable four months after date, and was indorsed by the defendant to one Vaughan, and by him to the plaintiff; the plea was no notice of non-payment. The case was tried before Mr. Wellsby, the Recorder of Chester, when it appeared that the bill became due on the 24th of April, when it was dishonoured; notice was given to the defendant of the dishonour in the following form:—"Sir, I am requested by Mr. Vaughan, of this city, to apply to you for payment of the amount due on you and your brother, D. Roscoe's dishonoured bill to him, and as Mr. Vaughan is very pressing for the amount, I trust you will immediately oblige me with the same, together with my charge as under, I am, &c." By the evidence given at the trial it also appeared that the attorney was not authorised to give any notice of dishonour, and also that Vaughan's name was inserted by mistake instead of that of the plaintiff. Whereupon it was contended by the defendant's counsel that the notice was bad, as Vaughan had given no authority to the attorney to give the notice. The learned recorder, however, directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff, giving the defendant leave to move to enter a nonsuit.

Jervis, Q.C. having obtained a rule nisi, Egerton and Unthank now (Feb. 9) shewed cause, and contended, upon the authority of Chapman v. Keane (3 A. & E. 193), that the notice was sufficient, it being enough if a defendant had notice of dishonour from any one who was a party to the bill, although not the holder.

Jervis and Atkinson, contra. Cur. adv. vult.
Some time after, the judgment of the Court was delivered by PARKE, B.—This case was argued some time since before the Lord Chief Baron, my brother Platt, and myself, on shewing cause against a rule to enter a nonsuit on a point reserved by Mr. Wellsby, the learned recorder for Chester. The question in this case is a perfectly novel one, never having been before the Court. It was an action upon a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant payable to his order, and by the defendant indorsed to W. H. Vaughan, and by W. H. Vaughan again to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded that there was no notice of dishonour. The bill was, in the body, made payable in London, and it became due on the 24th of April. On the 26th an attorney at Chester, acting for the plaintiff, gave notice to the defendant of the dishonour, stating he was required by the drawer, Vaughan, to desire payment of the defendant's dishonoured bill, but he swore he was not authorised by Vaughan to give that notice, and at the time that he gave the notice he gave it in a wrong name by mistake. The sole question is, whether this notice was sufficient. We have already intimated our opinion that the notice was in sufficient time if it be considered as given by the plaintiff, and if it sufficiently referred to the bill in question. Since the case of Chapman v. Keane (3 A. & E. 193), it must be considered as perfectly settled that a notice of dishonour need not be given by the holder, but it may be said to be sufficient if a notice is given in due time by any one who is a party to the bill. The decision in the case that came before Chancellor Kent is referred to in the 3rd volume of his Commentaries, p. 108, and by Mr. Justice Story on Bills of Exchange, s. 304. The former states the rule to be general that the notice may be given to any one who is a party to the bill; the latter states it more fully, and says that the notice would be sufficient, although not given by the holder or his agent, if it comes through some person holding, or who is a party to the bill, or who will be entitled to require the reimbursement thereof. The notice, by the terms of the rule, as laid down by the Queen's Bench, must be given in due time by a party to the bill—that is, in due time, as if he was the plaintiff himself, and was suing; and, consequently, the case where a bill has been discharged by the laches of the holder, and is excluded; and so the terms of the rule, laid down by Mr. Justice Story, seem to exclude the case of a party to the bill, who could not sue on it as being a party to the bill, unless it is so understood; otherwise the mischief would happen, pointed out by Mr. Jervis, that there might be a bill having twenty indorsees; the owner might retain the bill for twenty days, and then recover against the drawer by a notice given by the first indorsee, which the indorsee himself could not do. Such a notice as this would not be in due time if given by the first indorsee; it would be bad, and would not support an action. The rule extends equally to a notice by an acceptor, who could not sue himself on the bill after taking it up. The instances referred to in which a notice by an acceptor have been held good at nisi prius are in Mr. Chitty's book on Bills, 227; and Rosher v. Kieran, 4 Camp. 87, which is explained by Bayley on Bills, 259, and this is explained under the supposition that the acceptor had a special authority to do so. In the present case it appears the directions given were not such as can be understood to have given a discharge by the holder at the time. The notice by him on the 26th would have been in sufficient time to have supported an action by him, and consequently an action by the plaintiff; there is, therefore, no objection to the notice on this ground, nor, indeed, would there have been any if the attorney had omitted or refused to state in whose behalf he applied. That was held in the case of Woodthorpe v. Lawes (2 M. & W. 109). It had been previously so laid down in Kent's Com. 2 vol. 108, where he says, "Any agent in the possession of the bill may give the notice, and it need not state at whose request it was given, nor who was the owner of the bill." It remains, therefore, to consider what is the effect of not giving a true description of the party in whose behalf he gave this notice. This point has not been decided; but in Chapman v. Keane (the only case that bears upon it) it will appear the plaintiff's clerk was authorised, by the nature of his employment as clerk, to give it on behalf of the plaintiff, and he was, by the express authority of the holder, to give it for him. Here there is an untrue statement; but made unintentionally, and by a mere mistake. No doubt there is a difference between the two cases, where the notice is given by an authorised person, without stating on whose behalf it is given, and where an untrue intimation is given. In the one case the party is put upon inquiry, in the other he is misinformed. What ought to be the result of a misinformation? It is to be recollected that whether a party is misled or not as to the person giving the notice, the object of the notice is answered by the information of the dishonour of the bill: the person to whom notice is given is entitled to withdraw from the effects of it, or take a remedy against the prior party; and we think it reasonable to hold, that the misrepresentation of the name of a person on whose behalf notice is given ought not wholly to avoid the notice, but only to place the party giving it in the same situation, as to the party to whom it is given, as if the representation had been true. I therefore think that the defendant ought to have every defence against the plaintiff that he would have had if the notice had been given and the party's name had been correctly described. This is in analogy to the law and of contract with factors in similar cases where a contract is not avoided by a mistake that had been committed by the vendor. This was the case referred to in the judgment by my brother Alderson just delivered. The other party has all the equity against the real as against the apparent owner. If, therefore, in the present instance, a notice by Vaughan would have been bad, as it would have been if he had been discharged by laches, the defendant would have had a good defence, and the plaintiff would have had no right of action on the bill against the defendant; if he had taken it up, the defendant would have had a defence, and if good, as, on the evidence, it appears to us it would have been, the defendant has not been injured, and has no right to complain of misrepresentations. We think the ruling of the learned recorder right, and the rule ought to be discharged.

Rule discharged.

HUNTINGDON v. THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

New trial.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants to recover the value of three casks of pearl shells, which had been deposited in the storehouses of the defendants, at Liverpool, and stolen therefrom. There were two counts in the declaration, one stating that the goods were to be taken care of and safely kept by the defendants, and delivered to the plaintiff on request, for reasonable reward to be paid to the defendants by the plaintiff in that behalf. The second count was a count in trover. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff,

Alexander, Q.C. now moved (pursuant to leave reserved) for a nonsuit, on the ground that there was no contract for reward proved, so as to support the first count; but that it was a mere bailment without reward; and as to the second count, there was no conviction proved.

Rule nisi.

THE MAYOR OF POOLE v. WHITT.

New Trial.

This was an action of covenant for rent. The plea was eviction. Verdict for the plaintiff, with leave for the defendant to move to enter a verdict.

Cockburn, Q.C. now moved accordingly. It appeared that the action had been brought to recover certain rents for a market, of which the defendant was lessee to the corporation, and the facts set out in the plea and relied on as a defence were, that some time since a gentleman named Parr, who was the town clerk of Poole, had been removed from that office, under the Municipal Corporation Act, and that the corporation awarded him compensation for the loss of his office, which was secured by a bond for 4,000*l.* Some time in 1838, this bond was put in force by Mr. Parr, and an elegit was sued out against the lands of the corporation on a judgment obtained on it. At this time the market was let by lease to a Mr. Browne, who attorned to Mr. Parr and paid him the rents, with the knowledge and without any objection on the part of the corporation. In 1840, his lease expired, and a Mr. West became lessee, and paid the rent to Parr as lessee until 1843, when his lease expired, and the defendant, Whitt, then became lessee; he also received notice from Mr. Parr, and paid him the rents without objection from the corporation for the first year of his lease. The corporation then thought that they had discovered something which would avoid the elegit, and gave notice to the defendant to pay his rent to them; this being refused, the present action was brought. The ground on which the corporation said the elegit could not issue was, that there had been a prior mortgage for years of the market, and therefore that Parr could not have the writ. This, it was contended, was not so; for if they were sufficiently in possession to execute a lease, the rents could be taken in execution here they had a disposing power over them.

ROLFE, B.—If this was a mortgage for years, surely the reversion might be taken in execution.

MITCHELL v. NEWARK.

In an action by a sharebroker against a party for not accepting certain shares in a foreign railway, it appeared that there were no shares (strictly so called) in the market, but that the plaintiff had bought what was current in the market as shares in that company, namely, a letter of allotment. Held, that this satisfied the authority to buy shares.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who was a broker, to recover 150*l.* the price paid by him for certain shares in the Belgian Eastern Junction Railway Company.

At the trial it appeared that the authority given to the plaintiff by the defendant was to buy fifty shares in this company. By the prospectus which was put in, it appeared that no shares were to be issued by the company until three-tenths of the capital had been paid up; but letters of allotment were issued to the persons to whom shares were allotted, and it appeared that these letters of allotment were current sale in the share market. The plaintiff bought a letter of allotment of fifty shares for the defendant at the price of 150*l.* and on the defendant's refusing to accept the same, brought the present action.

At the trial it was contended that the purchase of a letter of allotment did not satisfy the authority to buy shares, and that therefore the defendant must have a verdict. The jury, however, under the direction of the Chief Baron who tried the cause, found for the plaintiff, damages 150*l.*

Humfrey, Q.C. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and contended that as the defendant had distinctly used the word "shares" in his authority to the plaintiff, the word must be taken in its strict literal meaning, and that it could not be satisfied by a purchase of something which might be equivalent to shares.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I left it to the jury to say whether the defendant meant the plaintiff to buy shares, strictly speaking, or what was on sale in the market as such, and they have found for the plaintiff.

Humfrey.—But it is submitted that it was not for the jury to decide that question, but the Court, upon the construction of the words of the prospectus. Now, if Newark had brought an action against Mitchell for not buying shares, would it not have been an answer to the action to say that there were no shares in the market?

By the COURT.—There is no rule of law to compel us to shut our eyes to what really was the intention of the parties, and it is clear they meant the thing really bought: it was quite a question for the jury. Here was an authority given to do something, and it was for them to say what was meant. They have decided, and we do not think we should disturb that decision.

Rule refused.

CREMER v. CHUCK.

At the trial of a cause at Nisi Prius, a verdict was taken for the amount claimed by the plaintiff, subject to a reference: the arbitrator to have power to make an award, or to give a certificate as to the sum for which the verdict was to stand; some months after the trial the arbitrator, instead of making an award, gave his certificate for the sum found by him to be due: Held, that the plaintiff might immediately proceed to sign judgment and tax his costs, and was not obliged to wait until after the four first days of the next Term.

In this case a verdict had been taken at the trial by consent for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, subject to a reference; the arbitrator to have power to make an award, or to give his certificate as to the amount for which the judgment was to be signed.

The arbitrator did not make an award, but two Terms after the verdict gave his certificate, whereupon, on the 7th of April, the plaintiff signed judgment.

Jervis, Q.C. having obtained a rule, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why this judgment should not be set aside, on the ground that it was irregular, having been signed before the first four days of the Term after the certificate was given had expired,

Martin, Q.C. and Willes now shewed cause, and contended that the judgment was perfectly regular. This was not like the case of an award; it must be taken that the verdict was given six months since, and this certificate is given merely to settle the amount for which the execution is to issue, the whole being done by consent of the parties. It is not contended that the defendant cannot come here within the first four days of the next Term after the certificate is given, to set aside the certificate; if there were any ground for such motion, all that is contended is, that there is no stay of proceedings, and that the plaintiff's hands are not tied from taxing his costs, and signing final judgment, immediately on the certificate being given.

Cases cited: Ames v. Lettice, (6 M. & W. 216); Hobdale v. Miller (3 Scott, N.S. 163); Little v. Newlan (1 M. & G. 976).

Jervis, Q.C. in support of his rule, admitted that he could cite no direct authority in his favour, but contended that it must be taken that the verdict was given at the time the arbitrator gave his certificate, and not when the trial was had. The certificate was, in fact, the verdict, and if so, the defendant had all the first four days of the next Term in which to move, and the plaintiff could not proceed to sign judgment until after that time.

Cases cited: Cheekam v. Sturtivant (12 M. & W. 515).

By the COURT.—This rule must be discharged. The question shortly is, whether the verdict is to be considered as delivered at the time of the trial, or when the arbitrator sent in his certificate. We think it is to be considered as a verdict delivered by the jury at the trial. It is clear that the plaintiff could not, after the trial, elect to be nonsuited; and for all purposes of form the verdict is delivered at nisi prius. The parties agree that the jury shall give a certain price, subject to be reduced by the arbitrator if he think fit. The defendant cannot complain of any hardship, and if we interfered we should do great injustice. Rule discharged with costs.

Monday, April 20.

LOWRIE V. DOUGLASS AND OTHERS.

New trial.

This was an action against the defendants, as common carriers, for not safely carrying certain barrels of pearlash, whereby the same was wholly lost. The facts were, that the pearlash had been shipped on board a vessel of the defendants' at a foreign port, to be delivered in London. The bill of lading was in the usual form, and undertook to safely carry, "the perils of navigation excepted." The ship arrived in the London Docks on the 1st of July, 1845, when the crew were discharged, and "lumpers" engaged to unload the ship, which was partly done, when, by some mismanagement, she was overset, and the pearlash destroyed by the water. The question made at the trial was, whether this was a "peril of navigation." The learned judge who tried the cause thought it came within the protection of the exemption in the bill of lading, and directed a verdict for the defendant, giving the plaintiff leave to move to enter a verdict for 227l. 5s. 11d. the value of the pearlash, if the Court should be of opinion that he was entitled to recover.

Jervis, Q.C. moved accordingly, and contended that it was clear that this could not be a peril of the sea by which the goods had been lost, for the voyage had ended and the crew were dismissed. He cited Thompson v. Whitmore (3 Tannt. 237); Fletcher v. Ingles (2 B. & A. 315.) Rule nisi.

LOW V. THOMPSON.

Nonsuit.

Jervis moved for a nonsuit herein. He stated that the declaration was for work and labour, care, diligence, and attendance. The particulars stated the action to be brought for a salary of 200l. a year, as clerk to the defendant. Rule nisi.

BRADLEY V. TONGE.

New trial.

This was an action on a special agreement; verdict for the plaintiff, damages, 40s.

It appeared in this case that the defendant had incurred various liabilities, and become indebted to a considerable amount to the plaintiff, whereupon he undertook to convey a certain estate to the plaintiff in discharge of these liabilities. He failed to do this, and the present action was brought on the special agreement. At the trial the value of the estate was proved, and it was contended that that should be the measure of damages. The learned judge, however, who tried the cause directed a verdict for 40s. giving the plaintiff leave to increase it to say sum the Court should think fit.

Whately, Q.C. now moved accordingly, citing Hopkins v. Graybrook (6 B. & C. 61.) Rule nisi.

FINLAYSON V. PILBROW.

New trial—Misdirection.

In this case a verdict had been found for the plaintiff.

M. Chambers now moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and also on the ground of misdirection.

The misdirection complained of was, that the learned judge did not direct the jury at all as to the effect of one part of the evidence given.

By the COURT.—How can you move for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, when there has been no direction at all? The motion for a new trial stands in the place of a bill of exceptions; now there is nothing here to except to. Rule refused.

BOULEY V. BELL.

New trial.

This was an action of indebitatus assumpsit, for money paid.

Plea, non assumpsit.

At the trial the contract was proved by a paper, which was put in, in the following form:—"On or before the 23rd I undertake to pay a call of 2l. 5s. per share on the five shares in the Grimstead and East Sheffield Railway, sold by you, on my account, on the 28th of July last, pledging myself to sign the necessary transfer of the shares." It was objected that this document required an agreement stamp; it was, however, admitted in evidence, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, leave being given to the defendant to move for a nonsuit.

Martin, Q.C. now moved accordingly.—There were other points in the case, one of which was, whether or not it was requisite for the vendee of shares in a railway to tender to the vendor a transfer-deed, duly stamped, for the vendor to sign, under 8 Vict. c. 16, s. 14. Rule nisi.

KEARSLAKE V. COLE.

Nonsuit.

This was an action against the defendant for money paid to his use. Plea, non assumpsit. It appeared that Kearslake, who was a partner in the Commercial Bank of England, at Birkenhead, had become surety to the Bank for all advances made to Cole up to 500l. Cole, some time after this, became embarrassed, and was in debt to the Bank 1,100l. His creditors, however, agreed, on his assigning all his property for their benefit, to take a composition; and the Bank and also the plaintiff were parties to the deed. The Bank received their proportion of the composition, upon which Kearslake paid them 500l., as the sum he had been answerable for, and then brought the present action against Cole to recover the money, as money paid to his use. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff.

Martin, Q.C. now moved for a nonsuit pursuant to leave reserved, on the ground that Kearslake, by being a party to the composition deed, had discharged Cole from his liability as to the 500l., for it was a debt then owing, but if not it was clear that the surety was released from his liability by the Bank taking the composition, and he had no right to pay the money to the Bank and then seek to recover it of the debtor Cole, who had denuded himself of everything to get rid of his liabilities.

Cases cited: Lewis v. Jones (4 B. & C. 515, and note); Walley v. Stubbs (18 Ves. jun. 20).

DANIEL V. FIELDING.

New trial.

This was an action on the case for maliciously causing the plaintiff to be arrested on an affidavit of debt, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 3. The verdict was for the plaintiff.

Martin, Q.C. now moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the declaration was informal, as it was not therein alleged that the affidavits, on which the order to arrest had been obtained, were false, but only that the statements therein were false; it was nowhere alleged that the defendants knew them to be false.

Cases cited: Hensworth v. Fowkes, 4 B. & Ad. 449. Rule nisi.

HUGHES V. MANN AND OTHERS.

Motion to set aside a judgment.

Atherton moved for a rule, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause (in three actions by and against the same parties) why the judgment as against one of the defendants, George Mallien, should not be set aside with costs. He stated, that at the trial of these causes all the defendants but Mallien were represented by counsel, but that the causes as to him were undefended; when the causes were called on, an arrangement was entered into between the counsel for the plaintiff and the counsel representing the other defendants, to take a verdict for the plaintiff, on which judgment had been signed against all, including Mallien. This, it was submitted, was irregular, as he was no consenting party to such arrangement. Rule nisi.

HARRIS V. COLLEY.

New trial.

This was an action on a special agreement.

The declaration set out, that the defendant, who was a cab keeper, had agreed to let, and the plaintiff to take, a certain house, at the yearly rent of 20l. and the defendant was not to give the plaintiff notice to quit so long as he paid the rent to defendant. It was further agreed that the defendant was to employ the plaintiff as his foreman to collect the money from the cabmen, for which the plaintiff was to receive a sum not exceeding 1l. 1s. per week. The breach set out was, that the defendant would not, in pursuance of this agreement, continue to employ the plaintiff, so long as he retained possession of the said house, but, on the contrary thereof, discharged him, and would not pay him the said sum of 1l. 1s. per week. The defendant pleaded, amongst other pleas, that it was the plaintiff's duty to receive the money from the cabmen frequenting the defendant's yard when requested, and that on a certain day the plaintiff was requested to receive the money from certain cabmen, and amongst others one Beauchamp, but he did not nor would receive the said money, whereupon the defendant discharged him.

Replication, de injuria.

At the trial it was proved that the plaintiff had been called and requested to come to the yard and receive the money of several cabmen, and that he refused to come; but the witness would not swear whether or not he mentioned the name of Beauchamp to the plaintiff, as a man whose money he was to receive; whereupon it was contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the plea was not proved, and Platt, B. who tried the cause, so ruling, the plaintiff had a verdict, damages 60l.

Martin, Q.C. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and contended that it was not at all material that the name of the man should have been mentioned. Rule nisi.

TENNANT V. PARKER.

Semble—In an action of trespass, the defendant paid 6l. into court; on a replication of damages ultra, the plaintiff had a verdict for 1l. Held, that this was not a recovery of more than 40s. by verdict of the jury, so as to entitle the plaintiff to his costs.

This was an action of trespass for an illegal distress. The defendant paid 6l. into court, but the plaintiff replied damages ultra.

At the trial, the plaintiff had a verdict, damages 20s.

Gunning, now moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence.

PARKE, B.—I thought the 6l. ample, but I can hardly say that the verdict was a perverse one. There was evidence on which they might act.

ALDERSON, B.—They have only recovered 20s. damages; that will not carry costs, so you are not much hurt.

Gunning.—But it is said by the Master that per-adventure this is a recovery of 7l.

PARKE, B.—This is not a recovery of 40s. by a verdict of the jury; they cannot get their costs.

Rule refused.

GATHERCOLE V. MIALL.

In an action brought by a clergyman against the publisher of a newspaper for a libel, the subject-matter of the libel complained of was an article containing a severe comment on certain sermons preached by the plaintiff in his parish church, and also on the printed rules of a charity established by him in the parish. Held (on a motion for a new trial), that evidence might be given of the receipt of copies of the paper containing the libel by various persons, not to shew malice on the part of the defendant, but to shew the extent of the mischief to the plaintiff's character. Held, also, that as the charity was a private one, established by the clergyman, his conduct in framing the rules by which it was regulated was as much protected from comment as the acts of a private individual in the ordinary affairs of life.

Semble—Alderson dubitante; Rolfe dissentiente—that a sermon preached by a clergyman in his parish church, in the ordinary discharge of his duty, is equally protected from comment.

This was an action of libel, brought by the plaintiff (who is the vicar of Chatteris) against the defendant as publisher of the newspaper called The Nonconformist. The case was tried at the last assizes for the city of Cambridge, and the libel complained of was an article reflecting very severely on the conduct of the plaintiff in the pulpit, in preaching violent sermons against the dissenters (who were a numerous body in his parish); and also on his conduct with regard to his breaking up a clothing society which had existed in the parish for some years, and forming another under the name of "The Chatteris Church Clothing Society;" this society was formed on the principle of the exclusion of the dissenters from any participation in the benefits of the society, and the rules (which were printed) classed the dissenters with "drunkards, schismatics, adulterers, opium-eaters, and other persons committing deadly sin." These words had also been very severely commented on in the article which formed the libel complained of. At the trial the plaintiff proved that the defendant was the responsible party to be sued, by evidence from the Stamp Office in the usual way, and then proposed to give evidence that a copy of the paper containing the libel had been received at the Chatteris reading rooms on the day after the publication. This was objected to, first, on the ground that it was not shewn to be sent by the defendant, and secondly (as it was proposed to give parol evidence of its contents), that no sufficient search had been made for it; it was, however, admitted. When the plaintiff's case had closed, Mr. Serjeant Byles, who conducted the defendant's case, proceeded to contend that the comments of the defendant upon the sermons preached by the plaintiff and the rules drawn up by him were quite fair, and that the defendant was justified in his comments. Mr. Baron Parke, however, interrupted the learned serjeant, and ruled that comments of that kind by the press upon unpublished sermons were not justifiable, nor were they upon the rules of a private charity. Upon this the learned serjeant did not press that part of his defence, or give any evidence of any particular sermon. When the learned Baron summed up the case to the jury, he laid it down to them that it was his opinion that unpublished sermons were not to be made the subject of comment, but stated that it was not necessary to decide the point in the present case, as no evidence had been given of any particular sermon preached by the plaintiff. With regard to the question of the charity, he distinctly laid it down that the conduct of the vicar of a parish in the administration of a charity established by him was not to be made the subject of criticism and comment by the public press. The plaintiff had a verdict, damages 200l.

Wilde, Serjt. now moved for a new trial.—First, it is submitted that the evidence with regard to the newspaper alleged to have been received at the news-room at Chatteris was improperly admitted. The evidence given was, that a paper having the name of The Nonconformist, and dated the 7th of January, 1846, was received at the news-room, but there was no evidence whatever to shew that the defendant sent it there, upon which the evidence was objected to by the defendant's counsel. [PARKE, B.—I did not receive it as evidence of malice, but to shew the circulation of the paper, and so the extent of the mischief to the plaintiff's character.] But I submit that it is not competent to the plaintiff to give this evidence, unless the sending is traced to the defendant; for it may be that the plaintiff extended the circulation himself to increase the damages. Then parol evidence of its contents was improperly received, as there was no sufficient search proved. The witness, who was the president of the rooms, proved the receipt of a paper called The Nonconformist, but did not know what became of it; he had not got it, and did not know where it was; on statement this parol evidence of its contents was received; now how could this be evidence against the defendant to influence the damages?

PARKE, B.—I only received it as a copy of such a paper as that proved to be published by the defendant. The libel was read to the witness, and he stated that the paper he received contained such an article.

POLLOCK, C. B.—Suppose this was a caricature, which is more easily identified than a paper, surely it would be enough for a person to say "I saw a copy of this caricature which has since been burnt."

Wilde.—I am not prepared to admit that that would be evidence against the defendant of a libel circulated by him.

PARKE, B.—The evidence was admitted by me to show the circulation, and not malice by the defendant; and the question is, whether the fact that a copy of the paper containing the libel, and printed by the defendant, which gets to the reading room, is not evidence to shew the extent of the damage to the plaintiff's character by the circulation.

Wilde.—I contend this is an unauthorized circulation by a third party, for which the defendant is not liable. Then as to the libel itself, it is no part of my duty to contend that the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict, but let him recover damages commensurate with the libel. I contend that the jury should have been told by the learned Baron that the libel was a comment on sermons and facts of great public interest, and if they thought that the defendant had exceeded the bounds of fair and proper criticism, that they should give damages for such excess. My Brother Byles, in his address to the jury, was submitting this view of the case to the jury, when he was interrupted by Mr. Baron Parke, who laid it down that a sermon, if not printed and published, could not be made the subject of remark.

PARKE, B.—What I said has been misunderstood. I certainly interfered in the course of my brother Byles' address, with the view of saving time, and I might then have said that sermons were not the subject of remark; but when I came to sum up the case to the jury, I expressly withdrew that question from them, as one which it was unnecessary to decide, for it did not arise, although I entertained, and still entertain, a strong opinion, that a sermon does not afford any justifiable occasion for comment.

Wilde.—It was useless to tender evidence of sermons when the opinion of the judge was so clearly against this evidence being admissible; and I contend that the defendant had a right to comment within certain limits, which has not been submitted to the jury.

PARKE, B.—At all events, I am confident that whatever I said did not operate to prevent Mr. Serjeant Byles from offering proof.

Wilde.—Then as to the charity: that is, I contend, a public act. The rules are printed and given to the world. The rules commence with a perverted text of Scripture; and Mr. Gathercole tells us we are to do good to all the world, but not to dissenters, adulterers, or murderers. This is his interpretation of charity. How is this to be corrected? If you say that the press may not correct such injustice as this by public comment, a great public injury is inflicted. The article complained of may, perhaps, exceed the bounds of fair and proper criticism, but that is a question which was never submitted to the jury, who were told by the learned Baron that there was no right to comment at all. It is impossible not to feel that whatever falls from so eminent a judge must greatly influence a jury, and control a counsel in the exercise of his discretion in the conduct of the case. Here an opinion was expressed at one time, which went to exclude both sermons and regulations from criticism; but nothing can be more public than sermons delivered in a large parish, and regulations concerning the administration of the charity within that parish. They are both subjects of public interest, and were therefore fairly open to criticism.

PARKE, B.—Do you mean to contend that if I, in my private capacity, chose to establish a charity, print rules, and administer my bounty in an exclusive manner, that the press have a right to comment on it?

Wilde.—That may be questionable, but here the public are concerned; this is a parish with 5,000 parishioners, and the example of the vicar is calculated to have great influence in his parish, and surely the public have an interest in these 5,000 persons. The rules are set forth as "under the patronage of the vicar;" how can this be said to be a private act? upon the whole case, then, it is submitted, both on the question of misdirection of evidence, and also on the ground of misdirection, there should be a new trial.

PARKE, B.—Before my brothers give judgment I again beg to state, that I never meant to bind myself to the opinion I had expressed in the course of my brother Byles' speech, as to the exemption of sermons, although I had then, and still have, a strong opinion that they ought to be so, unless they are printed, and so made public property by the clergyman; but when I came to sum up, I expressly guarded myself, and did not lay it down so broadly, as it was unnecessary to decide the point, which never arose in this case, for no sermon was proved. With respect to the rules of the club, I did not think that they afforded any occasion which could justify any comment being made on them. I so directed the jury, and it is for the Court to say whether I was right or wrong in so doing.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all agreed that in this case there ought to be no rule. The rule is moved for on two grounds: first, misconception of evidence, and, secondly, misdirection. Now, as to the first ground, the defendant was proved to be the proprietor of the Nonconformist newspaper, and a paper containing the libel was put in and proved; it was then proposed to shew that other papers containing the libel were in circulation. This was done not to shew malice, but the extent of the injury to the plaintiff's character. A witness was called, who took upon himself to say that he saw a paper in the news-room and proposed to give evidence of its contents, on the ground that it was lost. Now in all these cases the evidence as to the loss must vary; if a paper or document of importance is said to be lost, this may call for evidence of considerable search before parol evidence is admissible; but, on the contrary, as to that which is merely like waste paper, small search will suffice. In the present case search was made in the reading-room, where the paper ought to have been, and it could not be found. They could not be expected to ask all the various people who frequented that room if they had it; so the paper must be taken to be lost. It is then said that it was not shewn to be circulated by the defendant, and therefore he is not liable for the mischief it may do. Now the paper was printed by the defendant, and issued by him, and wherever found he must be held responsible for the mischief done by it. On these grounds, therefore, I think that the evidence was rightly received. The second point, on misdirection, proceeds on the objection that my brother Parke laid down the same rule of law with regard to sermons which are preached and the regulations of the charity club, as that which is applicable to private conversation and the private characters of individuals, while it is contended that they both justify remarks passed on them, with truth and justice, provided they are honest and bona fide; and that such remarks can be justified under the general issue. Sir T. Wilde has argued this as a case of great importance, and it is undoubtedly one of vast and grave importance. He contended that the law ought to allow public opinion to operate on these subjects, on the ground that public interests demanded a supervision of them. I certainly agree that all measures of a public nature ought to be subject to comment, and that all bona fide and honest remarks on public parties ought to be allowed; but we must take care not to allow that feeling to carry us along when the interests of the public are pressed, with the object of pushing that doctrine too far. The commentator may comment on everything, provided truth be the foundation, and justice the superstructure of his comment, and that doctrine must be applied to the two questions which have been raised to-day. I must say that I for one go along with my brother Parke. I think that a sermon preached by a pastor to his congregation may be made the subject of comment, fettered by the rule that you do so with truth and justice. Mr. Baron Parke, however, did not exclude any proof of a sermon, and in the course of the cause, and of the summing up, he expressly drew the attention of the learned counsel to the fact, that no sermon had been proved. On this ground alone I think the rule may be refused as to that point. As to the rules of the charity, I quite agree that licentious comments cannot be applied to such. When a work is published criticism is invited; but here the question is, whether a parochial charity, with the vicar at its head, and confined in its application to certain parties, may be made the subject of licentious criticism. It is enough to apply the ordinary rule to this case, namely, that every body may comment on every thing if truth and justice be observed, and I therefore think that in that rule has been transgressed there is no ground laid for a new trial.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. But although I think there ought to be no rule, yet if the question had been, simply, whether sermons are open to criticism, I should have doubted about refusing it. At the same time, I am by no means sure that I should not have agreed with my brother Parke's view on that subject. I think that this rule ought to be refused on the first ground most clearly; and as to the misdirection, if my brother had told the jury, that to observe on sermons preached by clergymen was not within the law, I should have doubted very much whether I could adopt that direction; though I might ultimately have come to the same opinion which my Lord Chief Baron and my brother Parke entertain. It seems to me that the distinction between the right to comment on public and private matters and men is very difficult of comprehension; where the limits are I do not exactly see, or where they begin or end. You may comment on a judge or an actor as such. You may say a judge is not clear, or an actor is not fit to represent certain parts, but you cannot observe on their private characters and conduct. I do not exactly see where the limits are to be pointed out. I think you may say, perhaps, that a man is a bad preacher; the dullness of a sermon is a very proper subject of comment and public opinion. Perhaps you have no right to comment on the doctrine contained in a sermon, for there is a proper Court which has cognizance over unsoned doctrines put forth in sermons. Now, this act of preaching a sermon is done in the ministerial public capacity of a clergyman. He is bound to preach, and that is why I doubt whether he is liable to comment on that score; but as to the administration of a charity established by him in his parish, that is no part of his public duty; he differs, therefore, in that respect, in nothing from any other private individual who may institute a charity within his parish, and select the objects of participation. Such acts are protected from comment as the acts of private individuals; and though every man may comment on private charities, he must do so in the same way when they are conducted by a clergyman as by any other private individual. A clergyman differs in nothing from any other man by reason of that character, and is no more open to comment than any other private person is. For these reasons, therefore, I think this rule must be refused.

ROLFE, B.—With regard to the point, as to the admission of evidence, I entirely agree with the rest of the Court; and after the way in which the Lord Chief Baron has stated his reasons, it would be mere pedantry in me to put the same reasons in different words. Then as to the misdirection, I think this must be taken to have been a formal direction to the jury as to the charity, though not so as to the sermons, for my brother Parke corrected himself afterwards. The question then is, whether my brother was right in telling the jury that this charity was such as not to entitle the defendant to the privilege of commenting on its rules as he might on any public acts. It was argued at first as though the direction had been, that the policy of having charities from which dissenters were to be excluded was not to be discussed at all. But that was not the way in which it was put at the trial. If it had been, I should have gone along with Sir T. Wilde in contending for a right to comment on such a policy. That is a public act which would warrant observation, and I may take this opportunity of saying, that, in my opinion, comments on public sermons would have come within the category of public acts. That point, however, does not arise in this case; for the observation was expressly withdrawn from the jury. But as to the rules, I think it most preposterous to say that the conduct of a clergyman in administering a charity is not within the category of public acts on which fair comments may be made. These comments, however, were not fair. There is no pretence for saying that they are; and as this was a mere private administration of charity, I think it is protected from comment, though we may doubt the propriety of the course adopted by the defendant.

PARKE, B.—I wish to add a word or two as to the question whether I was right in saying that no occasion was afforded by the plaintiff's conduct respecting the rules of the charity to warrant the comments of the defendant. I certainly entered more fully than I would have done under ordinary circumstances into the law of libel in this case, and having done so, I intimated to the jury that I thought these rules afforded no occasion which could render the comments of the defendant excusable; I at the same time told them, that if any such occasion had been given, the defendant might resort to it under the general issue. As to the sermons, I entertained a strong opinion that a clergyman, by preaching verbal sermons, did not make them public property, as when he was preaching a sermon in the ordinary discharge of his duty as a pastor in his parish church. I thought that that afforded no sufficient occasion for comment, and, with all due respect to the judgment of my brother Rolfe, I think so still; however, in this case, the point does not arise, as I never so directed the jury.

NICHOLS v. STANWAY.
Motion in arrest of judgment.

This was an action by the plaintiff as indorsee of a bill of exchange.

Chilton, Q. C. now moved an arrest of judgment on the ground that it was not shewn on the face of the declaration that the bill was a negotiable instrument transferrable by indorsement; it was not stated to be payable to bearer or to order. Rule nisi.

BOWEN v. HODGES.
Motion for nonsuit—Evidence.

In an action by an attorney for his fees for passing the defendant through the Insolvent Court, the retainer was proved by a copy bearing the seal of the Insolvent Court, and given by the officer of the court under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 105.

Held, that the retainer which was filed in the court was such a "proceeding" as was contemplated by that section, and therefore the copy was properly admitted in evidence.

Held also, that it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the delivery of a signed bill to the defendant before he could recover, and that 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, had not altered the rule of law in that respect. This was an action on an attorney's bill tried before the sheriff.

The declaration was for work, labour, and materials, and money paid in passing the defendant through the Insolvent Court. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Woobrych now moved for a nonsuit on several grounds: first, he contended that it appeared at the trial that the plaintiff had a partner, and therefore he ought to have been joined in the action; and that, although there might be an arrangement between the partners that one should conduct this business, yet this he contended did not alter the question. (Arden v. Tucker, 4 B. & Ad. 815.) [PARKE, B.—There is abundant evidence on the sheriff's notes to shew that the contract was made with the plaintiff alone, and that the defendant knew nothing of the other partner.] Then the evidence by which the retainer was proved was improperly admitted. The document put in was a copy of the retainer, and bore the stamp of the seal of the Insolvent Court. It was put in under the 105th sec. of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the original retainer having been filed in the Insolvent Court; but it was submitted that a retainer was not such a document as was contemplated by that section, which merely required the officer of the Insolvent Court to give copies (under the seal of the court) of the "petition, vesting order, schedule, order of adjudication, and other orders and proceedings." Now this, it is contended, is no "proceeding" within the meaning of the Act.

PARKE, B.—As this document is furnished by the officer of the court, I think we must infer that it is such a "proceeding" as he has power to furnish under the section referred to. Here a certified copy was produced, and I think it is a proceeding of which a copy is properly grantable by the Insolvent Court.

Woobrych.—Then it was not proved that any signed bill was delivered. [PARKE, B.—That can only be taken advantage of by a proper plea.] But the late Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, enacts that no attorney shall commence any action for his fees until one month after the delivery of his bill signed.

PARKE, B.—It is not necessary to prove that in the first instance, but only when the point is raised by a plea.

By the COURT.

Rule refused.

Friday, April 24.

GARBETT v. YARBOROUGH.
Libel—Sufficiency of justification.

In this case, which was tried before Platt, B. at the last Shrewsbury Assizes, Keating moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict which had been found for the plaintiff on certain of the issues should not be entered for the defendant; or, why there should not be a new trial. This was an action on the case for libel, the alleged libel being contained in these words, which were proved to have been written by the defendant: "I understand that a warrant was applied for yesterday for the plaintiff, and I sincerely hope that he is by this time in custody." The question now brought before the Court was, whether the plea of justification was sufficient without containing an express averment that an information, on oath, had been laid before the magistrate for obtaining the warrant.

Keating argued that it was not necessary to prove the fact of an information upon oath; that the warrant might have lawfully issued without such information; and that if an information upon oath was not necessarily to be inferred from the declaration, the plea in justification need not aver it. He cited Sweetapple v. Jesse (5 B. & Ad. 27); Kelly v. Partington (5 B. & Ad. 645); Clarke v. Poslan (6 C. & P. 423); Baslen v. Carew (3 B. & C. 649). [PARKE, B.—What does the expression "charged with felony before a magistrate" import? Not necessarily that there was an information upon oath.

Rule to shew cause.

HUGHES v. BUCKLAND.

The owner of land, and of a fishery, who takes into custody parties fishing in the night-time, at a spot adjoining to, but beyond the limits of, his estate, is entitled to notice of action under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, if he acts bona fide, and with reasonable grounds for believing that he so acts under the authority of that statute.

This cause was tried at the Carnarvon Assizes before Parke, B. It is an action of trespass against the defendants, being the gamekeepers and servants of Colonel Pennant, for seizing the nets of the plaintiffs, and taking them into custody. The defendants pleaded not guilty, under stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

At the trial, it appeared that at the time of committing the alleged trespass, the plaintiffs were not actually within the limits of Colonel Pennant's property, but within a very short distance (a foot or two) of such limits, and that Colonel Pennant was likewise owner of the adjacent fishery, though not of the precise locus in quo.

The question was, whether, under these circumstances, the defendants were entitled to notice of action, and had a right of venue pursuant to the provisions of the above-mentioned statute.

The learned baron held that such notice was necessary, and the verdict was accordingly entered for the defendants, with leave to the plaintiffs to move to enter the verdict for them, if the Court should think fit, with damages, which, to prevent the necessity of a new trial, were assessed by the jury.

Yardley (with whom were the Solicitor-General and Townsend) now shewed cause against the rule which had been obtained to enter the verdict for the plaintiffs, pursuant to the leave reserved. If Colonel Pennant had reasonable grounds for believing, and did bona fide believe, that he had the exclusive right of fishery at the locus in quo, which was the opinion both of the learned judge who tried the cause and of the jury, the defendants were entitled to the protection of the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29. Here Colonel Pennant had the right of fishery in a part of the same water wherein the plaintiffs were fishing, though he was not actually the owner of the precise spot. It is submitted that he is, nevertheless, within the meaning of the 35th section of the above statute. The judgment of Patteson, J. in Hopkins v. Crowe (4 A. & E. 774, 777), will be relied on by the other side, but the current of authorities is in favour of the defendants. It must be borne in mind that the plaintiffs, at the time of the alleged trespass, were engaged in taking fish in the night-time, and within a foot or so of Colonel Pennant's property. The cases which decide that magistrates and other officers are protected who act wrongly, or even beyond their jurisdiction, but bona fide and with reasonable grounds for believing that they have jurisdiction, and are entitled to act, apply to the present case. (Bird v. Gunston, 4 Doug. 275; Prestidge v. Woodman, 1 B. & C. 12.)

POLLOCK, C. B.—A magistrate, although bound to act within his jurisdiction, need not enter into nice questions respecting the limits of property.

PARKE, B.—The question is, whether the word "owner" must be strictly construed, in order that the party may be entitled to the protection given by the 75th section of the statute.

Yardley referred to Daniel v. Wilson (5 T. R. 1), Cook v. Leonard (6 B. & C. 351), and was then stopped by the Court.

Jervis, Q. C. and Welsby, in support of their rule.—The cases respecting magistrates and other officers will be found to go to this extent only, that when a person fills that particular character to which protection is intended to be given by some particular statute, he is entitled to the protection and immunities thereby afforded, even though he exceeds the authority delegated to him by law, provided he had reasonable grounds for believing that he had jurisdiction, and was entitled to act. (Bird v. Gunston, 4 Doug. 275; Prestidge v. Woodman, 1 B. & C. 12; Jones v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 762; Greenwoy v. Hurd, 5 T. R. 553; Daniel v. Wilson, 5 T. R. 1; Beechey v. Sides, 9 B. & C. 806; Ballinger v. Ferris, 1 M. & W. 628; Butler v. Ford, 1 Cr. & M. 662; Wedge v. Berkley, 6 A. & E. 663; Norris v. Smith, 10 A. & E. 188; Cann v. Clipperton, 10 A. & E. 582; Pratt v. Hillman, 4 B. & C. 269; Bush v. Green, 4 B. N. C. 41; Lidster v. Barrow, 1 Per. & Dav. 447.) In all the cases which have been cited on the other side, it will be found that the party protected has been authorised to act in virtue of some particular character, eo nomine: the principle of those cases does not apply here.

They also cited Weller v. Toke (9 East, 364); Jones v. Gooday (9 M. & W. 736).

Townsend cited Rudd v. Scott (8 So. N. R. 631), and was then stopped.

POLLOCK, C. B.—It is not necessary to advert to the numerous cases which have been cited in the course of the argument. It is our duty to endeavour to ascertain the meaning of the statute, the provisions of which have been so much discussed, and to give it such a meaning as may render its various clauses consistent. This will be done by holding, that persons who honestly, though mistakenly, do an act in pursuance of the statute, are protected. In every act there are three ingredients,—time, place, and circumstance. Now a magistrate who acts at the wrong time, or under circumstances which do not entitle him to act, is clearly protected (Cann v. Clipperton); why then should place be considered more important than time or circumstance? The present case is like that of a magistrate who acts as such out of his jurisdiction. Moreover, sec. 75 expressly protects the present defendants, as persons acting in pursuance of the statute, and having reasonable grounds for the belief that they were acting within and under its authority. Even if the words of the 63rd sec. had been repeated in the 75th sec. I should still think that this rule ought to be discharged.

ROLFE, B.—I confess that I have, during the argument, changed the grounds on which my opinion was founded. I at first thought that Colonel Pennant was entitled to protection as owner of the fishery close adjoining to the locus in quo. I now think that all persons are so entitled, under the 75th section, who are sued for any act done bona fide in the belief that they are so acting in pursuance of the statute, though this protection must be confined to those who knew what the provisions of the Act were, and thought the particular circumstances of the case brought them within those provisions. This view will explain, and is in accordance with what Patteson, J. said in Hopkins v. Crowe (4 A. & E. 777.)

PARKE, B.—The words "in pursuance of this Act" apply to persons believing bona fide that they are authorized under the Act. Rule discharged.

Saturday, April 25.

ADAMS v. NORTON.

*Motion to set aside a writ of accedas ad curiam.*

Cowling moved for a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why the writ of accedas ad curiam sued out in this case should not be set aside. He stated that the action was one in a Court of Conscience, and the judgment was for the plaintiff; he also stated that he had an affidavit which set forth that the statute under which the Court acted was in all respects like the Acts usually regulating the practice of Courts of Request, and that, as their practice was different to that of the Courts of Common Law, the writ of accedas ad curiam would not lie.

Cases cited: Scott v. Bye (9 Moore, 649); Bates v. Turner (10 Moore, 32); Tingle v. Raston (ib. 171). It was also contended that, if any writ could issue, it should have been a writ of false judgment.

HUGHES v. STEWARD.

In an action of debt, for use and occupation, where no sum certain has been agreed on to be paid for rent, it is not necessary to have a writ of inquiry, but the plaintiff may sign final judgment, and issue execution at once, subject to an application to the Court by the defendant, if the plaintiff take too much.

In this case the declaration was in debt for use and occupation, and, a plea having been put in too late, the plaintiff signed final judgment.

Willes now moved to set aside the judgment on the ground that it was irregular. He stated that no fixed sum had been agreed on to be paid by the defendant for the premises, and therefore there ought to have been a writ of inquiry before the plaintiff was entitled to sign final judgment.

POLLOCK, C. B.—That is not necessary. My experience has always been, that if you proceed in debt you may issue your execution for what sum you please, subject to an application to the Court if you take too much.

PARKE, B.—Your application is at least a half century too late to my certain knowledge.

LAMB v. SMITH.

Motion to set aside a plea of non-jolinder.

G. Pollock moved to set aside a plea of non-jolinder herein. The residences of the parties who it was alleged by the plea ought to have been proved in the action, were set out both in the plea and the affidavit verifying the plea, and the present application was made on an affidavit which stated that inquiry had been made at the places which were set out in the plea as the residence of three of the persons so named, and they were not known there.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

BRETON v. TIMS.

Action to recover back a deposit—construction of a condition of sale.

Where objections to a title of an estate are to be taken within a limited time after the delivery of an abstract of title, this means such objections only as are patent on the face of the abstract.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who had bid for an estate at an auction, to recover certain deposit-money which he had paid; a verdict having been found for the plaintiff, a rule nisi for a new trial was obtained, against which

Jervis, Q.C. and Hawkins now shewed cause. The question turned upon the construction to be put on one of the conditions of sale, which was as follows:—

"The vendors shall, within seven days after the day of sale, deliver to the purchaser of each lot, or his or her solicitor an abstract of title to the lot purchased by him or her, and all objections and requisitions (if any) that may arise to or upon the title, shall be made in writing within ten days from the day of the delivery of the abstract, and on deposit thereof, the title shall be considered accepted."

The facts were, that the defendants delivered an abstract pursuant to this condition, and more than ten days after it was so delivered, an objection to the title was discovered by the vendee, but which did not appear on the face of the abstract, and the question now was, whether the vendee could take an objection to the title, as the ten days had elapsed. It was now contended that the time only applied to such defects of title which were apparent on the face of the abstract.

Jervis was stopped by the Court, who called on Bramwell and Willes to support their rule.

Bramwell.—First, the objection is too late, as it ought to have been made within ten days of the delivery of the abstract, within which time, it is submitted, all objections must be taken, whether patent on the face of the abstract or otherwise; but then, if this is not so, the objection was one which would have been shown to be erroneous, if time had been given to the defendant; but the plaintiff brought his action immediately on the refusal to pay back the deposit money. Here a reasonable title was disclosed on the face of the abstract, which is all that is necessary.

By the COURT.—The true meaning of this condition is, that the purchaser is to take all objections which are patent on the face of the abstract within ten days; but it is preposterous to say that he is precluded from taking an objection to the title, which he discovers ab initio, after that time.

On this point, rule refused.

There was a point on a stamp (not argued) on which the Court said there would be a new trial, on payment of costs. Rule accordingly.

THORNETT v. HAINES.

At the sale of an estate by auction, two persons acted as "puffers" of the property offered for sale, by making fictitious biddings:—Held, that if they so acted as agents for the vendor, the sale was fraudulent and void, and that the vendee was entitled to recover his deposit from the auctioneer.

Byles, Serjt. Robinson, and Wordsworth, shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Humphrey, Q.C. for entering a nonsuit in the above case, or for a new trial; and the question for the consideration of the Court was twofold. First, whether there was sufficient evidence to shew that two persons who had acted as "puffers" at the sale of an estate by auction, had so acted as agents for the vendor; and, secondly, if the Court should be of opinion that the evidence adduced at the trial (a portion of which was objected to on behalf of the defendant) was sufficient for this purpose, whether the puffing avoided the contract, and whether the plaintiff, the purchaser, was, consequently, entitled to recover from the defendant, the auctioneer, the amount of deposits paid by him on the sale. As to the latter point, Byles, Serjt. cited Cicero de Officiis, lib. iii. s. 15; Beeswell v. Christie (Cowp. 395); Howard v. Castle (6 T.R. 642); Crowder v. Austin (3 Bing. 368); Wheeler v. Collier (Moo. & Malk. 123); Rea v. Marsh (3 Yo. & J. 331); which are authorities at common law to shew that puffing invalidates a sale by auction; and Robinson and Wordsworth contended that very slight evidence was sufficient to establish the agency; and as to the second ground for opposing the rule, they referred to the following cases in equity. Woodward v. Miller (15 L.J., N.S. 6); Bramley v. All (3 Ves. 620); Id. 625, n.; Smith v. Clarke (12 Ves. 477); Meadows v. Tanner (5 Madd. 34); Sug. V. & P. 53; 2 Kent. Com. 537, 539. They argued that Courts of equity did not hold a sale by auction to be invalid, if a single agent had been employed to bid with a view to enhance the price of the property offered for sale, in the absence of any express stipulation on the subject, whereas Courts of law did hold the sale to be void under such circumstances, and that the vendor is bound to give notice of his intention to bid; but they submitted that where more than one party was thus employed to puff at the sale, such sale was, both at law and at equity, invalid, which latter proposition they contended was decisive of the present case; two parties having been so employed, assuming their agency to be established.

Humphrey, Q.C. in support of his rule, argued that the agency had not been proved, and that to the facts of this case, the maxim of law was applicable, delegatus non potest delegare. On the second point, after he had attempted to distinguish the equity cases already cited, the Court were unanimously of opinion that the rule should be discharged, the sale being rendered void by the puffing—supposing the agency of the parties who acted as puffers to have been proved by the evidence, as to which Cur. adv. vult.

KERRIDGE v. SIMPSON.

From the statement of this special case, it appeared that the plaintiff had purchased property at a sale by auction, subject to certain conditions of sale, the fourth of which was alone material for the determination of the question submitted by order of nisi prius to the Court. According to this fourth condition, the vendor was required to furnish the abstract of his title to the property sold within four days of the sale, for the perusal of the purchaser, who was to be allowed fourteen days for sending in objections to the title, or requisitions connected therewith; the condition of sale contained likewise a proviso, that the purchaser should be considered to have waived all objections to the title, if no objection or requisition was sent in within the 14 days above mentioned. It further appeared, that the purchaser had, subsequently to the sale, received the abstract of title, which was submitted by him to counsel, and that he had, prior to the expiration of the 14 days, returned the abstract to the attorney acting on behalf of the vendor, with the queries and opinion of counsel, who advised that the title was essentially defective. The plaintiff having been unable to ascertain the names of the vendors, gave notice to the defendant (the auctioneer), that the contract of sale was at an end, and brought the present action against him for recovery of the deposit paid by the plaintiff at the time of the sale. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the plaintiff must be taken to have delivered his objections to the title as stipulated by the fourth condition, and if so, whether he could maintain an action for money had and received against the auctioneer.

Humphrey, Q.C. for the plaintiff.—It is clear that the action will lie if the Court should be of opinion that there has been a delivery of objections to the title such as to comply with the conditions of sale. The course taken by the plaintiff is that usually adopted; the objections to the title specified in the margin of the abstract left with the vendor's attorney are, moreover, perfectly reasonable and valid objections.

Butt, Q.C. for the defendant.—The contract of sale had not been rescinded before action brought. The rule is, that the auctioneer holds the deposit for the vendor, if the title be made out, and for the vendee, if the title be not made out, or if the contract be rescinded. Money had and received was not maintainable in the present case, because the contract had not been rescinded. (Sugden, Vendors and Purchasers, 75-6; Duncan v. Cufe, 2 M. & W. 244.)

By the COURT.—The mode here adopted by the plaintiff is a very usual mode of stating objections to title. The demanding the deposit from the auctioneer was in fact a rescinding of the contract. The plaintiff is entitled to recover.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

HAMMOND v. DAYSON.

The declaration in this case contained two counts. The first was on a promissory note for 15l. and the second, on an account stated, for 30l. The defendant pleaded three pleas: first, to the note; second, as to 15l. part of the account stated, that the cause of action in respect of this 15l. was the same as that in the first count alleged, and that the facts set forth in the first plea as constituting a good defence to the count on the note were true; the third plea, as to the residue of the second count, was nuncquam indebtedatus. To the second of the above pleas the plaintiff demurred specially.

Willes, in support of the demurrer.—The second plea is bad, because it answers more than it professes to answer. The issue offered by that plea, viz. as to the truth of the allegations in the first plea, is an immaterial issue, and could not, therefore, be traversed by the plaintiff. Gray v. Plindor (2 B. & P. 427) is in point, and Mee v. Tomkinson (4 A. & E. 262) is an instance of the proper mode of pleading in a case like the present. 1 Wms. Saunds. 286, note (i); the note to Foot v. Baker (5 Man. & Gr. 335); Henry v. Earl (8 M. & W. 228), and Mitchell v. Cragg (10 M. & W. 367), are authorities for the plaintiff. [PARKE, B.—The plea answers that part of the declaration to which it is pleaded, and would, besides, answer another part of the declaration if it had been pleaded to it, but that is no objection to the plea.] There is another ground of demurrer, viz. that the second plea refers to the first plea; incorporates the matter of that plea with itself, and avers its truth; the plaintiff is thereby embarrassed, as alleged in the demurrer, and cannot take issue without bringing immaterial facts before the jury.

By the COURT.—This might be a good objection, but it is not sufficiently pointed out in the demurrer.

PARKER v. WRIGHT.—In this case Jervis, Q.C. moved on affidavits to set aside a release, which, it was alleged, had been obtained under fraudulent circumstances; and for a rule calling upon certain parties, attorneys of this court, to answer the matter of the said affidavits, and to pay the costs of these proceedings. On the suggestion of the Court, the case stood over, to give time for the parties concerned to come to some arrangement.

COLLISON v. THE NEWCASTLE AND DARLINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.—In this case Knowles, Q.C. moved (April 21) for a new trial, on the ground of surprise and the improper reception of evidence, the verdict having been for the defendants. The Court having conferred with the learned judge (Parke, B.) who presided at the trial, and having ascertained that the verdict was satisfactory to him, refused the rule.

Rule refused.

COCKROCK v. HORNER.—Martin moved for a rule, calling on the defendant to shew cause why the time for making the award in this case should not be enlarged, or why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to sign judgment and proceed to execution: he cited *Parbery v. SMITH v. THE GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.—It appeared that the case and all motions in difference between the above parties were referred to arbitration: the award, with respect to the costs, was in favour of the defendants; with respect to the matters in difference, it was in favour of the plaintiffs. Bosell now applied for a rule, calling upon the defendants to shew cause why the defendants should not, under the above circumstances, pay their proportion of the costs of the reference, without setting off the costs in the action which had been found for them.

Rule to shew cause.

ASTON v. PARKES.—Butcher shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Gray to enter the verdict in the above case for the plaintiff, or for a repender. The question was, whether a plea of tender and payment into court to a declaration, alleging a trespass to the plaintiff's goods and person, was good after verdict.

NAYLOR v. ELLERTON.—In this case, which was an action for seduction, Wilkes, Serjt. had moved (April 22) for a new trial, on the ground of excessive damages. METCALF v. TATTERSALL.

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit, for not proceeding to trial.—Sufficiency of affidavit on shewing cause.

Addison shewed cause in this case, which was a motion for judgment as in case of a nonsuit for not proceeding to trial. The affidavit of the plaintiff stated that he omitted to go to trial in consequence of "inadvertently, and in ignorance of an important fact in the cause, having failed to instruct his attorney."

B. Lowes submitted that this was insufficient, and that the affidavit ought to have disclosed what the important fact really was. Cleasby v. Poole, 3 Dowd. 162.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that as this was the first default, the excuse was sufficient for discharging the rule on the usual terms.

BEDWELL (a Pauper) v. COULSTING.

Where a plaintiff, who sues in formal pauperis, is guilty of venal conduct, as withdrawing the record on the day of trial, the Court will dispauper him, and at the same time direct him to pay the costs of the day.

The plaintiff in person shewed cause against a rule calling upon him to shew cause why he should not be dispaupered, and why he should not pay the costs of the day, he having withdrawn the record. The present action was commenced on the 20th of May, 1844, and issue was joined on the 22nd of April, 1845, and notice of trial given for the sittings after Trinity Term; this notice was afterwards countermanded. On the 7th of January, 1846, the plaintiff obtained an order to sue in forma pauperis, and gave a fresh notice of trial for the first sitting in Hilary Term following. The cause having been made a remanset to the sittings after Term, it was put into the paper for the 5th of February, on which day the plaintiff withdrew the record. On the 31st of March, he gave a fresh notice of trial for the second sitting in this present Easter Term. The affidavit of the plaintiff stated that the record was withdrawn at the sittings after Hilary Term in consequence of being unable at the time to prove the handwriting of the defendant; the affidavit further stated, that the record was again withdrawn on the day of trial, at the second sittings in this Term, by the advice of counsel, in order to add another count.

T. W. Saunders, in support of the rule, contended that the plaintiff's own affidavit shewed that his conduct had been most vexatious, in having once countermanded notice of trial, and twice withdrawn the record on the days of trial, and this, as the defendant's affidavit shewed when the defendant had brought up witnesses from Bristol, and had instructed counsel—that if the plaintiff could do this with impunity he could go on putting the defendant to endless expense in the same way.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought the conduct of the plaintiff clearly vexatious, and that the rule should be made absolute.

AMADIO V. SHOWELL.

Quere, whether when one party obtains a judge's order, but neglects to serve it, the other can obtain a duplicate thereof, and proceed upon it?

Bail moved to set aside the judge's order, together with the judgment and execution thereon. It appeared that an action having been commenced in this case, certain terms were agreed upon by the respective attorneys for its settlement, and it was arranged that the defendant should give a judge's order for the payment by instalments of the debt and costs, with the usual power to enter up judgment, and issue execution in default of payment. In pursuance of this arrangement the defendant's attorney drew up an order, and attended at the office of the plaintiff's attorney for the purpose of serving it; but finding the plaintiff's attorney not there, the order was not served. On shewing the defendant the order, the latter expressed his disapprobation at the terms, and requested that it might not be served. The order was accordingly not served. After this, the plaintiff's attorney went to the judge's chambers and obtained a duplicate of such order, and in due time signed judgment, and issued execution thereupon. It was now contended that the plaintiff's attorney was wrong in the course he had adopted; that until the order was actually served the defendant had a right to abandon it, in which case the only course open to the plaintiff was to take out a summons himself, with the view of obtaining an order upon the consent filed, and that it is only where an order is actually served that the opposite party can obtain a duplicate original from the judge's clerk. (Lush's Practice, p. 806.)

ADDISON V. WILLIAMS.

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit—Sufficiency of affidavit in shewing cause.

Wilson shewed cause against the rule herein for not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice, and he offered stet processus. The affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney, upon which he shewed cause, stated that on the 18th of February last the deponent was accosted in the highway by the defendant, who demanded, in an insulting manner, why deponent did not go on with the action; and that he further said that deponent might "law him as much as he liked," at he "could get nothing besides his body."

Hance, contra, argued that this was no evidence of solvency, and that the plaintiff ought to be compelled to proceed.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that sufficient was shewn to call upon the defendant to accept the stet processus.

Rule discharged, unless the defendant accepts a stet processus.

MAPLE V. WOODGATE.

Here a plaintiff enters an appearance for the defendant in ignorance that the latter has already appeared, that is an irregularity, and not a nullity, and the defendant must take advantage of it in due time. Where such an appearance was set aside by a judge, but the defendant omitted to serve the order before the period for his pleading would have expired, and the plaintiff signed judgment as for want of a plea: Held, that he was regular in so doing.

F. V. Lee shewed cause against a rule to set aside two orders of Mr. Justice Cresswell, and why the sum of 9l. 9s. paid to Mr. Lewis, the defendant's attorney, should not be repaid to the plaintiff. It appeared that the writ of summons in the present case was served on the defendant on the 6th of March, that the defendant duly appeared on the 13th, notwithstanding which the plaintiff appeared for him on the 16th, and on the same day filed his declaration, and served notice of the same. That on the 18th the defendant took out a summons to set aside the appearance entered by the plaintiff, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground of an appearance having been entered by the defendant in due time, whereupon an order was made by Mr. Justice Cresswell in the terms of the summons; that on the 23rd, the said order not having been served, the plaintiff signed judgment, and gave notice of taxation for the following day; that later, on the said 23rd, the defendant's attorney served the order for setting aside the appearance as aforesaid; that on the same day the defendant took out a summons to set aside the judgment, on the ground of irregularity, the former order setting aside the appearance still existing, and no declaration having been delivered. Upon the hearing, Mr. Justice Cresswell made an order, whereupon the sum of money mentioned in the rule was paid as and for the costs of these irregularities. The present rule was obtained on the ground that, inasmuch as the order for setting aside the appearance was not served until after the period for pleading had elapsed, it was waived, and the judgment signed was consequently regular, and the order of Mr. Justice Cresswell for setting it aside wrong. It was now contended, first, that the appearance entered by the plaintiff was a nullity, and could not, therefore, be made the foundation of the subsequent proceedings; second, that if not a nullity, but merely an irregularity, the defendant still was in time in serving the order, since he served it within six days after it was made, and the plaintiff well knew of its existence.

Lush, contra, argued that the defendant, in allowing so long a period to elapse before serving the order, namely, a period beyond that allowed for the next step—his pleading—he had virtually abandoned his order. That this being merely an irregularity, and not a nullity, the defendant was bound to have served his order before the expiration of the period for taking the next step. (Charge v. Farhall, 4 B. & C. 865; Kenny v. Hutchinson, 6 M. & W. 134.)

WIGHTMAN, J.—This is merely an irregularity, and I always treat these cases as such. That being so, the party is bound to take steps promptly. The application of the rule stood in this, that when a party is in danger of a step being taken, he should take measures to prevent it. Now, in this case, the order not being served before the other party were entitled to take the next step, it was served too late, and this rule must, therefore, be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

COLEMAN V. HOLMES.

New trial—No evidence to go to the jury.

Miller shewed cause against a rule obtained by Wise, to set aside the verdict herein, and for a new trial. The case was tried before the under-sheriff for Middlesex, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, 18l. 15s. In opposition to the rule, it was contended that the verdict was correct.

Wise was not called on, his lordship being of opinion that there was no evidence whatever to support the verdict.

Wednesday, April 29,

Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.

ADAM V. ROWE.

Award, motion to set aside.

To a declaration containing three counts, the defendant pleaded, first, non assumpsit and three other pleas; the cause being referred, the arbitrator found for the plaintiff on the first, third, and fourth issues, and for the defendant on the second. Held, on an objection to the award, that the first plea raised three distinct issues (one on each count), upon which, therefore, the arbitrator had not decided that the award was good, one issue in fact only having been raised upon the three counts, each of which the arbitrator must be taken to have decided for the plaintiff.

Mellor shewed cause against a rule to set aside the award of the arbitrator in this case, on the ground that he had not awarded upon all the issues. This was an action in which the declaration contained three counts: first, goods sold and delivered; second, money lent; third, an account stated. The defendant pleaded, first, non assumpsit, except as to 29l. 11s. 1d.; second, as to that sum, a tender; third, except as to the said sum, a set-off; and fourth, as to the said sum, payment. Upon these pleas issues were joined. The cause was referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator awarded as follows: "As to the issues, firstly, thirdly, and lastly joined, I find and certify for the plaintiff, and I find and certify that the verdict so found do stand." The second issue he found for the defendant, and reduced the verdict to 3l. 18s. 11d. This rule was obtained on the ground that there being seven issues in all, the arbitrator had disposed of only four. (Kilburn v. Kilburn, 13 M. & W. 671; Morgan v. Thomas, 9 Jur. 92; Stonehewer v. Farrer, 14 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 122.)

It was now argued that, notwithstanding the declaration contained three counts, upon either of which the plaintiff may have recovered, yet as the first plea of non assumpsit was pleaded to the whole declaration, it raised but one issue, and not several issues, and that the arbitrator had therefore disposed of all the issues, and that this case was therefore distinguishable from Kilburn v. Kilburn.

Lush, contra, contended that the arbitrator had not decided upon all the issues; that the plea of non assumpsit raised three distinct issues, one upon each count of the declaration, and that this case was not distinguishable from that of Kilburn v. Kilburn.

COLERIDGE, J.—I think Mr. Mellor has succeeded in pointing out a material distinction between this case and Kilburn v. Kilburn. In that case there was no finding on any distinct issues; here, however, there are four issues on the record, each of which is found by the arbitrator. We must give a liberal construction to the language of the arbitrator. Nobody can doubt that by the first issue he meant all that was comprised within the plea of non assumpsit, and there is therefore a finding upon that issue. But then it is said that that plea raises distinct issues; and I grant that it does; but if it is suggested that the arbitrator may have intended to have found on one count in the declaration, and not on another, there would have been something in the argument; but it is clear that he meant to find for the plaintiff in respect of all the causes of action in the declaration. The only difficulty in such cases is as to the costs; but, as he finds for all the matters, the difficulty does not arise. Without, therefore, impugning any of the authorities cited, I think I ought to discharge the rule.

REG. V. THE GUARDIANS OF THE OLDHAM UNION.—Tunstall moved to make this rule absolute; no cause being shewn. Rule absolute.

Ex parte THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Pashley moved, in two cases, to quash the return to the certiorari herein, and to set aside the allowance of the sums mentioned in such return. Rule nisi.

De Medina v. Riggie and Others.—Corrie moved for a rule to amend the judgment roll, by entering an award of costs for one defendant, for whom a verdict had been returned. Rule nisi.

Ex parte CHARLES HEWITT.—Lush moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the applicant from Kingston gaol, to which he had been committed under the 57 Geo. 3. c. 93, by a warrant under the hand of Mr. Cottingham (the police magistrate), in order that he may be discharged for defects apparent on the face of the said warrant. Writ granted.

GURNEY v. CHAPMAN and Others.—Willes shewed cause against a rule for discharging the rule for a special jury herein.—Lush, contra. Rule discharged.

Tuesday, April 28.

HOPKINS v. LEMAGE.—Godson, Q.C. moved on affidavits for a rule to rescind a judge's order, holding the defendant to bail. Rule nisi.

STOCKER v. DORAN.—Hake shewed cause against this rule, which was to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial.—Bovill, contra. Rule absolute, on payment of costs.

ROSCOE v. CLARK.—Crompton moved for a new trial in this case, which was tried before the under-sheriff of Lancashire. Rule nisi.

SOLOMON v. NIMMO.—F. V. Lee moved for a rule to discharge the rule for a new trial herein, the costs not having been paid. Rule nisi.

MARCHANT v. LLOYD.—Pigott having moved for a new trial herein, on a former day, his Lordship directed a Rule nisi.

Ex parte ROBINSON.—Smith moved for a certiorari to remove into this court an indictment for a libel, found at the last assizes for Gloucestershire. Writ granted.

STOKOE v. WINSHIP.—Matthews having, on a former day, applied for a rule to shew cause why certain documents should not be delivered up to be cancelled, &c. his Lordship granted a Rule nisi.

Wednesday, April 29.

WALL v. PICKERNELL.—Willes shewed cause against the rule to set aside the fi. fa. herein, as having issued against good faith. Jervis, Q.C. and Gray, contra. Rule absolute.

Ex parte CHARLES HEWITT.—Crompton, who shewed cause against the discharge of the prisoner, admitted that he could not support the warrant. Lush, contra. Prisoner discharged.

JEFFERIES v. MAY.—T. W. Saunders shewed cause against a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. Crompton, contra. Rule discharged upon a peremptory undertaking to try at the sittings after Term.

CIVIL SIDE.

(Before Mr. Justice MAULE.)

HOUNSLOW v. FOUNTAIN.

Trover—title—wrong doer—executrix de son tort—distress for rent.

In an action of trover the plaintiff must shew that his title is a good one, even against a wrong-doer, and one wrong-doer cannot maintain trover against another.

An executrix de son tort cannot confer such a title as would suffice to maintain trover against a wrong-doer. Trover for wheat.

Pleas: not guilty and not possessed.

Byles, Serjt. (with him O'Malley), proved that one Thomas Mossman, who was tenant of the defendant, died indebted to his landlord for one year's rent, and also to the plaintiff in the sum of 2l. 10s. Soon after his death his widow sent a message to the defendant to come and "take the standing crops for his rent, and pay over the surplus to her;" and on the same day the plaintiff applied to the widow for payment of his bill. On her saying she had sent to the defendant, as above mentioned, the plaintiff persuaded her to sell the crop to him, on the ground that it was hers to do as she pleased with, and thus wipe off her husband's debt to him. He accordingly went next morning at day-light to the field with carts and horses to cut and remove the crops. While this operation was in progress the defendant interfered, and caused the crops to be taken away, after having put a lock and key on the gate. It further appeared that the widow had not taken out letters of administration to her husband, who had died intestate, but was acting as an executrix de son tort in his affairs. Under these circumstances, Gunning, (with whom was Couch), submitted that the case for the plaintiff had failed to shew any title in him to the property in question. If the defendant was a wrong-doer, so was the plaintiff, who had obtained possession of the wheat illegally.

Byles, Serjt. and O'Malley, contra, relied on Orton v. Teppings, contending, that the widow, being executrix de son tort, might confer a title to the property of the deceased, which would be good against all the world save the rightful executor, when he should appear. It was not likely here that any regular administration of the affairs of the deceased would take place, and it was very clear that the widow had taken upon herself the office of executrix de son tort. She had just made over the wheat to the defendant, in satisfaction of his rent, by a verbal message, but afterwards changed her intentions, and regularly sold it to the defendant for 10l. his debt of 2l. 10s. being to be taken in part payment of that sum. Under this bargain and sale it was that the plaintiff took possession of the wheat in question, and being so possessed, the defendant had taken it from him. It was therefore submitted that there was a title in the plaintiff quite sufficient to maintain the present action.

MAULE, J.—I think the plaintiff has failed to prove a sufficient title, and that the defendant is entitled to a verdict. It is incumbent on the plaintiff in trover to shew, even as against a wrong-doer, that his title is a good one; but that is not shewn here, for the title is derived from the widow, who had no power by law to dispose of the property of her deceased husband. She could not sell in her own right, nor could she do so as representing her husband. What passed between her and the plaintiff, therefore, amounts to nothing, while as far as the defendant was concerned, it seems that he had a right to seize the crops and distrain upon them for one year's rent, which was in arrear at the death of the tenant, without any permission from any one. I should therefore be inclined to say, that he could claim to detain this wheat as under a distress for rent, for he had done every thing which was necessary to constitute a distress, and that there was no evidence of any title to this wheat in the defendant; but as it is impossible to say that the Court might not hereafter think that there was something to go to the jury, I shall take their opinion on the subject.

The learned judge then left the case to the jury, who found for the defendant.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEPHENSON.)

Friday, April 17.

RE BOARD.

Attorney—Privileged communication—Practice as to, same in bankruptcy as in other courts.

On a former day, an attorney of the name of Beddow had been summoned to attend as a witness before the registrar, to give evidence as to an execution which had been levied at the suit of his client upon the goods of the bankrupt. He then objected to give evidence, on the ground of the information having been obtained in his capacity of professional adviser to his client. The registrar held that the rule did not apply to cases in bankruptcy, and Mr. Beddow then gave his testimony under protest. The examination having been adjourned to this day,

Smith applied to the Commissioner (Chaverson) to take the former examination off the file, and it was agreed that the question should be fully argued, and the former examination considered as expunged by consent of both parties.

Smith.—I submit that any instruction given by a client to his solicitor for the purpose of securing a debt due from the bankrupt is a privileged communication. It can make no difference whether the document, as to which the witness is proposed to be examined, comes into his possession directly from the client himself, or from the hands of a third party, provided it be a document which he necessarily obtains in pursuance of his duty to his client. There is no difference in the application of the general rule as to privileged communications in matters of bankruptcy, and cases in the other courts. He then cited Nixon v. Mayoh (1 Moody & Rob. 76); Cromack v. Heathcote (2 Brod. & Bing. 4); Ex parte Temple (2 Glyn. & J. 21); Wheatley v. Williams (5 L. J., N. S. Exch. 237); Doc dem. Peter v. Watkins (6 L. J., N. S. C. P. 107); Tarquand v. Knight (6 L. J., N. S. Exch. 4); Desborough v. Rawlins (7 L. J., N. S. Chan. 171). The result of the cases is, that any communication whatever made to the attorney, without capacity, is within the privilege, and I therefore confidently submit that the examination of Mr. Beddow respecting this transaction is within the privilege and cannot be proceeded with.

Linklater, contra, argued, that in matters of bankruptcy, the rule did not apply, and that Mr. Beddow was bound to give evidence.

His HONOUR, on a future day, gave judgment in favour of the objection, holding that he could see no distinction which could be drawn in matters of bankruptcy, which gave him greater authority than that which was exercised by the other courts, and that he had no power to compel the witness to answer, in case of his refusal.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE topics of the week have been wholly without interest for the Profession. No measure affecting the law has made any progress, save the two excellent measures of Lord CAMPBELL for abolishing the antiquated absurdity of deadends, and introducing the principle of—long since recognized in the jurisprudence of the continental countries—compensation for death by accident to the families of those for whose service that death was incurred. These Bills are passing the Lords with unanimous assent; but we regret to learn that some of the great railway interests are about to employ their influence in the Commons to defeat the latter measure again, as they succeeded in doing last year. The LORD CHANCELLOR persists in urging forward his Charitable Trusts Bill, spite of the energetic opposition it is meeting from public and private bodies, who have, or think they have, an interest in preventing their management of charities from being inquired into by prying officials. This matter of legislation for charities is a striking specimen of the power of great personal interests in this country to thwart a public good, when the mass of the community has no stimulus to counter-exertion. Many years have elapsed since the abuses in the management of charities engaged the attention of the government. A commission was appointed—it pursued its inquiries with diligence—its report exhibited an unsuspected amount of property held under the pretence of charitable trusts, but, in truth, perverted in the most scandalous manner. Successive governments have acknowledged the wrong, and have attempted a remedy. All have failed—defeated by the interests leagued for the preservation of their plunder. Stimulated by the outcry from every lip of "something must be done!" Lord LYNCHURST has proposed to do something—a small measure, it is true, and having this great defect, that it deals only with the little charities, strikes at the petty abuses, scares away the small pilferer, but leaves the great abuses—the plunderers on a large scale—untouched. This was a mistake. It is beginning at the wrong end, and rouses more indignation from the invaded interests than if all had been subjected together to the inspection and controul of the law. The measure has other defects, in too much complication, and being too costly in the working, although the charities would gain vastly by the change, even were the cost three-fold what it is. These, however, are defects which might easily be cured in committee. To reject the Bill altogether would be to abandon an improvement, so far as it goes; it is a step in the right direction, and would doubtless clear the way for another more efficient one. It is to be hoped that the subject will be at least admitted to discussion, and that personal interests will not be suffered again to triumph over the public good.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

THE MINT.—Some returns, extending to nearly 30 pages, obtained by Mr. Hume, were printed connected with the Mint. In 1844 the salaries and emoluments of officers of the Mint amounted to 8,904l. 10s. Mr. Gladstone was that year "The Master and Worker." His salary was 2,000l. with stationery and 10l. in money; he did not draw the money (10l.) The charges of coinage paid in the same year were 27,245l. 16s. 8d. The total expenditure of the Mint in the year (given in detail) was 59,311l. 10s. 10d. Under the head "extraordinary expenses," there is a sum of 6,977l. 2s. 7d. as paid the Bank of England for the loss by deficiency on the light gold coin received by them on account of the Government, and sent into the Mint for recoinage. The expenses of the Mint prosecutions are included in the document now printed. In 1844 (the general statement, with details in a schedule, being given from the year 1836) it appears that 375 Mint prosecutions were ordered, of which 51 were felonies and 324 misdemeanors; the total annual charge for the prosecutions in that year was 9,080l. 10s. 6d. In the preceding year the expense was 11,077l. 19s. 10d. In no prosecution (it is stated) are more than two counsel employed. Among Mr. Hume's inquiries by the returns was one to ascertain the amount of stationery supplied to the several offices of the Mint for the last nine years. The return is given. In the year 1844-5 the stationery amounted to 12l. 7s. 4d. The Master had only 19s. 5d. worth in the nine years. There are several other returns rendered in the document now made public, numbering ten different "particulars," as the legal profession would call them; and from the information afforded, it does not seem very probable that the hon. member (as very often happens in the profession mentioned) will apply for "further and better particulars."

PENNY POSTAGE.—The annual returns, just published, show that the progress of penny postage, during the year 1845, has been much greater than at any former period. The number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom, was 971½ millions, being an increase of nearly thirty millions on the year 1844. The gross revenue for the year was 1,901,580d. being an increase of nearly 200,000l. on 1844, and nearly four-fifths of the amount under the old system. The net revenue, notwithstanding that more than 100,000l. was paid to the railway companies, for work done in former years, was 775,986l. being an increase of 56,000l. on 1844. While the London district (old twopenny) post letters have increased to such an extent, that the revenue derived from them must far exceed that which was obtained from the same class of letters before the reduction of the rates. In January of the present year, the number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom was at the rate of 303 millions per annum; or, excluding the franks, four times the number under the old system. The money-orders, since 1839, have increased about thirty fold.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

DEODANDS ABOLITION BILL, AND DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION BILL.

FRIDAY, April 24.—Lord CAMPBELL, in moving the order of the day for the second reading of these bills, expressed his opinion, in which he had been borne out by Mr. Wakley, that no benefit arose from the imposition of deodands. For the loss of life by accident, compensation was given to the families of the unfortunate sufferers, by the law of France, and also by that of Scotland, and the same principle should be applied in this country. He had been told that the railway interest in the House of Commons was so great—one company having eighty votes—that there was no chance of the bills passing in that house; he hoped, however, that the hon. members connected with railways would remember their duties as citizens and men, and feel disposed to do justice to their fellow-men.—Lord LYTLETON and Lord BROUGHAM supported the bills.—The Lord CHANCELLOR said that last year he obtained her Majesty's consent to this bill, and there was no doubt that it would be obtained this session.—Lord BROUGHAM said that her Majesty's consent could be obtained at any stage of the bill. Both bills were then read a second time.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

THURSDAY, April 30.—Lord BROUGHAM laid upon the table a bill for the amendment of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, which was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

TUESDAY, April 18.—Sir G. GREY called the attention of the right hon. the Home Secretary to the Charitable Trusts Bill. That Bill was introduced into the House of Lords last year, and referred to a select committee, but owing to the advanced period of the session, it was not possible to proceed with it. This session the Charitable Trusts Bill had been laid on the table of the House of Lords some weeks ago, and nevertheless the second reading of it had not yet been moved. It certainly was desirable, that while the House of Commons was occupied with important business, that bills of that kind should be proceeded with in the House of Lords, and he therefore wished to know whether it was the intention of the Government to proceed with the Charitable Trusts Bill in the other House, or to abandon it for the present session?—Sir J. GRAHAM said, that he had had an opportunity of conferring with the Lord Chancellor that day, and he could state that it was the intention of the noble and learned lord to proceed with the Bill.—Sir G. GREY: Without delay?—Sir J. GRAHAM: The noble and learned lord assured me that it was his intention to proceed with the bill.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

THURSDAY, April 30.—At the request of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL, who urged the importance of the subject, and the quantity of business now before the House.—Mr. HAWES consented to postpone the second reading of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill for a fortnight.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No subject of any moment connected with the administration of the law has been mooted during the week. The decision on the Act exempting Literary Institutions from rates has made a considerable stir, and we understand that most of them are taking steps at once to place themselves within the words as well as the spirit of the Act, by adopting the rule recommended in our last.

RATING OF LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Observing the attention given in your last number to the subject of the exemption of Literary and Scientific Institutions from rates, I beg to call your attention to a most important decision respecting them, which was given on Saturday last at the Quarter Sessions, Guildhall, in the case of the City of London Institution, Aldersgate-street.

This Institution, on the passing of the Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, obtained the barrister's certificate, and filed it. Notice was given to the collector of the parish rates, by the Secretary, that such was done, and no further demand was made from October 1843 till December 1845. In that month the parish officers summoned the Secretary for upwards of two years' poor-rates, which summons being attended before the city magistrates, and the exemption claimed, was dismissed.

They then proceeded, in the manner pointed out in sec. 6 of the Act, to appeal against the certificate of the barrister, and this came on for argument on the 25th inst. at Guildhall, before the Recorder and a Bench of Aldermen, the title of the appeal being Edward Lane v. George Stacy, the Secretary of the Institution. Mr. Clarkson and Mr. Bodkin appearing for the appellant, Mr. Stacy being represented by Messrs. Prendergast and Parry. The latter objected, in the spirit of your article last week, that the time for appeal had expired; four months from the filing of the certificate had clearly elapsed, notice of the claim to be exempt having been given in October 1843, and a rate having been made in January 1844. Four months had also elapsed since the first assessment after the claim. On this point, however, the Court held that no claim of exemption was made until December 1845 before the magistrates, and that the appeal was, consequently, in time; the Recorder, in disposing of the point, remarked that he was not called upon to go into the question of whether a verbal notice might not, under certain circumstances, form a good claim, as, in the present, it was not a proper one made in answer to the demands by an authorized person; and he intimated that, as he did not think the Society was obliged to make any formal claim until they were called upon to pay, no notice before the summons would have been of service, and that, therefore, all societies who have not been pressed for the rates, and made out their exemption before a competent authority, can, after any length of time, be called on by an appeal.

The case being then proceeded with, the first ground of appeal, viz.: "that the certificate was bad upon the face of it" was supported by an allegation that it recited the Act of Parliament constituting the authority, to Mr. Tidd Pratt, to grant it as "an Act made and passed in the sixth and seventh years of the reign," &c. This, it was contended, was an impossibility, and the necessity for the insertion of the words, "in a session holden in the sixth and seventh years," insisted on, and notwithstanding the general usage of the profession in so reciting Acts, the fact that Acts of Parliament themselves so refer to others, the printed title of the Act, and every argument that could be urged, the Court on the citing of a case where the Queen's Bench set aside an indictment for so refusing to an Act, gave judgment for the appellant, and refused to allow the opinion of the superior Court to be taken on the point.

I would, therefore, particularly call the attention of your readers to the effect which this decision will have, inasmuch as, the certificate being a lithographed form, it has been used in the case of every institution applying under the Act, amounting to several hundreds in number, and they are now, by no fault of their own, but solely by the erroneous wording of the barrister's certificate, exposed to be proceeded against for the recovery of serious arrears; for, by the decision on the preliminary objection, no lapse of time will be a bar to such process.

The Act being thus completely nullified in its object of assisting such meritorious institutions, I quite concur in your suggestion that legislative interference, in their behalf, is necessary; and, under the circumstances, even think it should be stretched to the extent of protecting them from the past rates, to which they will otherwise be liable, if left to procure fresh certificates.

As an additional argument for such Act of Amendment, may be adduced the necessity of the law against appropriation of funds to the member's benefit laid down in Reg. v. Jones, because, as few, if any, institutions have such express law, and time is now decided to be no protection, all will be liable to have their exemption defeated on this ground.

I am, Sir, Yours, &c.
London, April 27, 1846. F. W. B.

RATING OF LITERARY INSTITUTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your last paper you argue that the certificate of Mr. Tidd Pratt, given however improvidently to supposed Literary Societies, is yet conclusive if unappealed against. Permit me to suggest that this is erroneous.

You cite Mould v. Williams (5 Q.B.) in support of the finality of the certificate, to which may be added a long list of cases from Brittain v. Kinnaird (1 Bro. & Bing. 432) to Reg. v. Hickling (14 Law J. M.C. 177, 9 Jur. 1,075).

There are all cases of convictions and orders made after summoning and hearing all parties; and are final, whether an appeal be given or not. But there is a manifest distinction between them and proceedings ex parte. Welsh v. Nash (8 East, 394), and in 1 Brod. & Bing. Dallas, C.J. says, "Welsh v. Nash was no sooner cited in Gray v. Cookson (16 East), than Bayley, J. distinguished it as turning only on an ex parte order of justices, a proceeding in no way resembling a conviction where the matter is investigated on oath in the presence of both parties." In Welsh v. Nash an appeal was actually made, and the order was confirmed, and yet the Court afterwards held it bad in an action of trespass.

There is also this further point. Mr. Pratt's certificate and the rules of the society are, by the Act, to be read together. The certificates are, that "this society" is entitled. This, therefore, involves an inspection of the rules, to see what society is intended. The absence of a rule prohibitory of a bonus becomes then a patent objection, and the proceedings are bad on the face of them. The estoppel in an order of removal arises from the overseers being named in the order as direct parties, and is created by their receiving the paupers, and so recognizing its validity, for it is only an order executed which is final. Moreover the Literary Societies' Act gives no appeal to the overseers ex officio, but only to rate-payers; and the appeal was apparently intended only as a ready means of quashing an improper order, but without any expression or inference that the omission of an appeal should bind the parish for ever.

I am, Sir, yours, &c. E.

[The point noticed shall receive further consideration next week. As our obliging correspondent must have probably observed, there was not time to go so fully into it last week as it deserved.]

PAYMENT OF JURORS.—On Tuesday night a very numerous and highly respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Wandsworth was held, in the large room of the Ram Inn, for the purpose of petitioning parliament for an alteration of the law relating to jurors, as advised by Lord Chief Justice Denman at the late Lent Assizes, at Kingston. At half-past eight o'clock Robert W. Burchard, esq. of East-hill, one of the churchwardens, took the chair.—Mr. SAMUEL CUMBERS moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting is of opinion that very serious inconvenience and loss is sustained by those inhabitants of this parish who are called upon to serve as common and petit jurors at the assizes for the county, held at Kingston, Croydon, and Guildford, inasmuch as, in the first place, a much larger number of persons than are necessary for the performance of the required duties are from time to time summoned, and compelled to attend at the assize towns as jurors, and are there detained for a period of eight or ten days, to the great neglect and damage of the private affairs of such jurors, and at a heavy, and in many cases injurious, expense to themselves; and, in the next place, that the evil thus inflicted is greatly aggravated, and much injustice perpetrated upon the common jurors, in consequence of the practice adopted of requiring such a large number of their body to act in the Nisi Prius Court for so many days as is customary for the very inadequate payment of eightpence to each juror upon each cause. This meeting, being fully assured that, if the common jurors were fairly remunerated for their loss of time and for their services in the Nisi Prius Court, not only would the duties of the jurors be more satisfactorily performed, but a small number of them only would be required to be summoned, as their attendance would then be given much more cheerfully for the performance of a disagreeable duty. At the same time, this meeting desires to express its decided opinion that the trials in the Crown Court should be performed by the petit jurors, without fee or reward, and as a duty necessary for the well-being of society at large." The resolution was carried with acclamation. Petitions founded on the foregoing resolution were also seconded by Mr. PARSONS. Lord Denman was to be respectfully requested to present the petition to the House of Lords, and to support the prayer thereof, and Sir Frederick Thesiger, Knight, her Majesty's Attorney-General, was to be respectfully requested to present the petition to the House of Commons. And further that he, together with Henry Kemble, Esq., and Edmund Antrobus, Esq. the member for the eastern division of this county, be respectfully requested to support the prayer thereof. Mr. MORRIS, solicitor and vestry clerk of Putney, said that that parish would be most happy to co-operate with the parishioners of Wandsworth in carrying this measure; he had already prepared a petition, which was signed by eighty individuals. It was then agreed that the petition should lie for signature at Messrs. Fletcher and Roberts's office; and after a vote of thanks had been passed to the chair, the meeting separated.

The chairman of the Surrey Easter Sessions, in addressing the Grand Jury on Monday, remarked that crime seemed to be fast decreasing in that county: the calendar was becoming lighter each session.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE business of the Term has been exceedingly heavy. The mass of reports in the present double number fails to keep pace with it. We shall continue to give double numbers whenever needful during Term. The adoption of small type for the "Business of the Week" in the various Courts has already permitted a considerable increase of matter. But the length of the written judgments, the greater particularity with which all the more important cases are reported, and the plan of giving all the practice cases in the Courts of Equity as well as in the Common Law Courts, have so multiplied the demands upon our space that it would be impossible to present this useful mass of information to the Profession without the adoption of frequent double numbers at the seasons when business is most urgent.

THE PRACTICE OF WILLS.

By G. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.
BOOK I.

CHAPTER IV.—ON THE REVOCATION OF WILLS.

Marriage of the testator.—Under the law existing previously to 1838, and which is of course still applicable to all wills of real estate, made before that year, the subsequent marriage of the testator and birth of a child operated as a revocation of the will. This may be stated as a general rule; "but such a case as this," (says Sir R. P. Arden, M.R. in Gibbons v. Gaunt, 4 Ves. 848), "has never yet been decided; the birth of children by the first wife after the execution of the will, and after the death of the wife a subsequent marriage and no children by that, I do not say it will have the same effect. I am not the judge to decide that. But there is not a single argument applying to the feelings of mankind to draw a decision from the Court, that will not apply to the one case as much as the other."

There were, however, exceptions to the general rule before stated; or rather the presumption, upon which the rule was founded, might be overruled by circumstances indicating a different intention on the part of the testator. In deciding the case of Sheath v. York (1 Ves. & Bea. 390), Sir Wm. Grant, M.R. said,—

"Long after it had been settled by decisions of the Ecclesiastical Court, with the concurrence of common law judges, sitting in the Court of Delegates, that marriage and the birth of a child would amount to a revocation of a will of personal property, it remained a doubt whether such an alteration of circumstances would have the same effect with regard to a will of real estate; but it is now settled that even a devise of land may be revoked by what Lord Kenyon, in the case of Doe dem. Lancashire v. Lancashire (5 Term. Rep. 58), calls "a total change in the situation of the testator's family." What shall be deemed such a total change may be matter of controversy in each new case; but all the cases in which hitherto wills of land have been set aside upon this doctrine have been very simple in their circumstances, and such as, when the doctrine was once received, could admit of no doubt with respect to its application. In all of them the will has been that of a person who having no children at the time of making it, has afterwards married, and had an heir born to him. The effect has been to let in such after-born heir to take an estate disposed of by a will made before his birth. The condition implied in these cases was that the testator, when he made his will in favour of a stranger or more remote relation, intended that it should not operate if he should have an heir of his own body. In this case there is no room for the operation of such a condition; as this testator had children at the date of the will, one of whom was his heir-apparent, who was alive at the time of the second marriage, of the birth of the children by that marriage, and of the testator's death. Upon no rational principle, therefore, can this testator be supposed to have intended to revoke his will on account of the birth of other children; those children not deriving any benefit whatsoever from the revocation, which would have operated only to let in the eldest son to the whole of that estate which he had by the will divided between the eldest son and the other children of the first marriage. It is true the Ecclesiastical Court has decided that the will was revoked as to the personal estate; that is, in opposition to their decision in Thompson v. Sheppard, in 1779, where, under circumstances precisely the same, the will was held not revoked, even as to the personal estate. There was, in that case, an appeal to the Delegates, but it was not prosecuted. The revocation, however, as to the personal estate, had an effect which might perhaps have been intended by the testator—that of letting in the after-born children with those of the first marriage; but the principle of the decision has no bearing whatsoever upon the devise of the real estate, which, according to my opinion, stands unrevoked."

The principle of the decision in the Ecclesiastical Court, alluded to by Sir William Grant, in the last-mentioned case, would of course be applicable to a devise of real estate if the testator's heir-at-law should be a child of the second marriage.

By the 18th section of the 1 Vict. c. 26, it is enacted, as to wills made since the year 1837, "that every will made by a man or woman shall be revoked by his or her marriage (except a will made in exercise of a power of appointment, when the real or personal estate thereby appointed would not, in default of such appointment, pass to his or her heir, customary heir, executor, or administrator, or the person entitled as his or her next of kin, under the Statute of Distributions);" and by the 19th section of the same Act it is enacted, "that no will shall be revoked by any presumption of an intention on the ground of an alteration in circumstances." These provisions, it will be observed, have set at rest, as to wills coming within their operation, all the questions as to revocation which have arisen from the presumed alteration of the testator's intentions on account of the difference of his circumstances.

Cancelling, &c.—By the 6th section of the 29 Car. 2, c. 3 (commonly called the Statute of Frauds), it is enacted that "no devise in writing of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, nor any clause thereof, shall at any time after the said 24th day of June (1677), be revokable otherwise than by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing, declaring the same, or by burning, cancelling, tearing, or obliterating the same by the testator himself, or in his presence and by his directions and consent; but all devises and bequests of lands and tenements shall remain and continue in force until the same be burnt, cancelled, torn, or obliterated by the testator or by his directions in manner aforesaid, or unless the same be altered by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing of the deviser, signed in the presence of three or four witnesses declaring the same; any former law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

It has been decided upon this section that the burning, cancelling, tearing, or obliterating the will must be done with the intention of revoking the will. (Onions v. Tyrer, 1 P. Wms. 346; Hyde v. Hyde, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 409; and Scruby v. Fordham, 1 Add. 74.)

Where there are duplicates of a will, one of which is in the testator's possession, and he cancels that part which is with him, the legal presumption is, that the duplicate in the possession of another is not to prevail. "My opinion goes farther" (Lord Erskine observed in Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. 310); "that if the testator himself has possession of both, the presumption holds, though weaker; and farther, that even if, having both in his possession, he alters one, and then destroys that which he had altered, there is also the presumption, but still weaker. But all these cases, according to Burtonshaw v. Gilbert (Cowp. 49) are matter of evidence."

In Utterson v. Utterson (3 Ves. & Bea. 122), an interlineation had been introduced in a will, excluding one of the testator's sons, who had been previously named with the other children, from taking an interest in certain property given for the benefit of all the children. By a codicil, the testator, after expressing his disapprobation of the conduct of his son, declared that, instead of leaving him an equal share with his brothers and sisters, it was his determination that he should have no more of his property than one shilling only. The testator afterwards became reconciled to his son, and cancelled the codicil by drawing a pen across it, but omitted to strike out the interlineation in the will. Sir W. Grant, M. R. in giving judgment, said:—

"It seems to me that the codicil itself sufficiently shews that, previously to the date of it, the testator had done no act by which this son could be excluded. It speaks of the testator's determination to exclude him as then taken; and that intention was carried into effect by that codicil. He likewise assigns a specific reason for the exclusion, offence taken at some part of his son's conduct. The parol evidence expresses what that conduct was, and at what time it took place. The necessary presumption seems to be that the will was altered at the same time, and for the same reason as the codicil was made. Then, when the codicil is obliterated, does he in effect recall the whole declaration, both as to his dissatisfaction and its consequences? Even independently of the parol evidence of reconciliation, it seems to me that the act of obliteration speaks as clearly as words could have done, a change of intention as to the exclusion, and not merely as to the mode of effecting it. It is the same as if he had said, 'This codicil no longer speaks my sentiments; I am no longer dissatisfied with my son; and no longer mean to make any distinction between him and my other children.' If that is the fair inference from the obliteration, as I think it is, the consequence is that the will is set up again with regard to the plaintiff."

It is generally presumed by the ecclesiastical courts, that where a testator has revoked his will, any codicil to that will is also revoked. This presumption, however, may be rebutted by the codicil being completely independent of the will, or by the circumstances of the revocation. (Usticke v. Bowden, 2 Add. 116; Medley v. Asheton, 2 Add. 229; and Tegart v. Squire, 1 Curt. 289.)

The act of cancellation, &c. need not be complete if what is done is sufficient to satisfy the words of the Act, and is done with the intention of revoking the will. Thus, a partial tearing, animo revocandi, was held sufficient in Bibb v. Thomas (H. Blacks. 1043.) The words of the Act must, however, be to some extent complied with, and the attempt to comply with them is not sufficient, however clear the testator's intention to revoke the will may be. Thus, where a will was thrown on the fire by the testator, and the cover only was singed, it was held to be no revocation; for, as Mr. Justice Patteson observed, "to hold that it was so, would be saying that a strong intention to burn was a burning. There must be at all events a partial burning of the instrument itself; I do not say that a quantity of words must be burnt; but there must be a burning of the paper on which the will is." (Doe v. Harris, 6 Adol. & Ell. 209.)

If the testator change his intention before the act is completed, it has been held that the will is not revoked. (Doe v. Perkes, 5 B. & Ald. 489.)

A will might be wholly or partially revoked by cancellation. In Mence v. Mence (18 Ves. 348), Sir William Grant, M.R. declared the cancellation of a residuary bequest complete by the testator's striking out with a pencil the disposing part; that such cancellation was as effectual as express revocation; and that it would have been sufficient if only the names of the legatees had been struck out. Striking out the name of one joint tenant gives the whole estate to the other; but it is otherwise as to tenants in common. (Larkins v. Larkins, 3 Bos. & P. 16, 109.)

Where, however, a testator had, in declaring a trust for a certain person, drawn his pen through that person's name in some parts of the declaration, but had not done so in others, the Court held that the bequest was not revoked. (Martins v. Gardiner, 8 Sim. 73.)

In Coward v. Marshall (Cro. Eliz. 721), it was held that a subsequent will of lands is only a revocation so far as the dispositions are inconsistent. Where it has been found that the testator made a subsequent will, the contents of which were unknown, or that the testator made a subsequent will differing from the first, but in what particular was unknown, and that it did not appear what had become of the subsequent will, it was held that the first will was not revoked. (Hungerford v. Nosworthy, Sho. P. C. 146; Hutchins v. Bassett, Salk. 502; and Harwood v. Goodright, Cowp. 87, 7 Bro. P. C. 489.)

Where a testator intends a substitution which is ineffectual, the obliteration will not amount to a revocation. (Short, on the demise of Gastrell v. Smith, 4 East, 419; and Kirke v. Kirke, 4 Russ. 435.)

By the 20th section of the 1 Vict. c. 26, it is enacted, "that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked otherwise than as aforesaid, or by another will or codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed in the manner in which a will is hereinbefore required to be executed, or by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction with the intention of revoking the same." And by the 21st section it is enacted, "that no obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration, made in any will after the execution thereof, shall be valid or have any effect, except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent, unless such alteration shall be executed in like manner as hereinbefore is required for the execution of the will; but the will, with such alteration as part thereof, shall be deemed to be duly executed if the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses be made in the margin or on some other part of the will, opposite or near to such alteration, or at the foot or end of, or opposite to, a memorandum referring to such alteration, and written at the end, or some other part of the will."

Many of the decisions upon the old law will be applicable to cases under these sections. It must be particularly observed that a will cannot now be revoked by cancellation or obliteration, except so far as the words or effect of the will, before such alteration, shall not be apparent.

A FACULTY OF LAW FOR LONDON.

In all educational institutions, and more particularly in new foundations, almost every thing depends on the choice of teachers. The friends of education are too apt to neglect this truth—to lay undue stress upon systems and arrangements, and hurt their schools by over-legislation. If judicious appointments are made, it is advisable to leave a wide option to the persons appointed as to modes and methods of tuition. Teaching is an art, to perfection in which there go two qualifications,—natural aptitude and training for the task, and experience. Every teacher has a way of his own; and it is best not to trammel him with too many directions.

In truth, eminent schools are more frequently made by teachers than teachers by schools. Bologna was made by Irnerius and the Doctors who succeeded him; and was more efficient and famous under their spontaneous, unregulated guidance, than after it had statutes framed for it. Black, Cullen, and Gregory made a medical school in the University of Edinburgh; since the University has taken the management of the school upon itself, it has dwindled away, while a lustier and more flourishing one has sprung up without the walls.

For this reason, we have been more gratified by the choice the Benchers of the Middle Temple have made of a Reader on Civil Law and Jurisprudence, than even with their spirited resolution to establish the lectureship, and the able paper in which they announced their determination. In the hands of Mr. George Long, the readership will be a reality. An admirable classical scholar, profoundly conversant with Roman antiquities and history, familiar with all that has been written by Savigny and other modern civilians, and with the compilations of Justinian, Mr. Long is at the same time a man of business and a man of the world; having noted with a discerning spirit the phases of society both in this country and in America. His practice as a barrister has been sufficient to enable him to make the Roman and English legal systems mutually illustrative, and to impart reality to his prelections on legal doctrines. Above all, Mr. Long possesses in an eminent degree both the talent and the taste for teaching; as his success in the University College Latin chair has amply shewn.

Mr. Long, we confidently believe, will form a class to which students will flock, because they will feel themselves benefited by it. The Benchers of the Middle Temple have evoked a spirit that will work out their wishes powerfully. Which of the Inns of Court moves next? Will Lincoln's Inn contribute its teacher of Equity Jurisprudence? The Inner Temple, its Reader on the Constitutional and Criminal Law? Serjeants' Inn, a brace of Doctors for the Law of Real and the Law of Personal Property? Will the conveyancers, equity draftsmen, and special-pleaders club for the foundation of a lecture on the theory and practice of Conveyancing and Special-pleading. If these and a few more chairs were as well filled as the Civil Law chair of the Middle Temple, London would have a Faculty of Law equal to any in Europe. The preparatory and auxiliary studies of the scholars might be carried on in King's or University College—or in the library of the British Museum, as good a college as either. A Faculty of Law, founded and supported by the Inns of Court, and affiliated to the incorporated educational institutions of London, would be preferable to a Law College with classes for the preparatory studies; because the young lawyers, being brought into collision with students destined for other professions, would have the pedantry of the profession rubbed off them—or more correctly, would be prevented from contracting it.—Speaker.

SHAM ATTORNEYS.

We refer with much pleasure to the decision in Reg. v. Buchanan reported in this day's journal, as further shewing the means of protection which the law affords against the noxious class of Sham Lawyers, injurious both to the Profession and to the public. We make this remark, not intending to cast any imputation whatever upon Mr. BUCHANAN individually, for we do not know the precise facts under which the indictment was preferred, and it was stated by the Solicitor-General on Wednesday, that the offence, if committed at all, was committed under circumstances of very great mitigation. We speak only of the important principle established by the decision—which is that the infringement of an express prohibition of a statute is indictable as a substantive misdemeanor, although the act prohibited is lawful at common law, and although a subsequent section in the statute may affix another and accumulative punishment for the same infringement. This has certainly been usually regarded as the rule—according to the dicta of the Court in Rea v. Wright (1 Burr. 545), and in Rea v. Harris (4 T. R. 202.) There ASHUMAR, J. laid down the rule to be, "That where a new offence is created by Act of Parliament, and the penalty is annexed to it by a separate substantive clause, it is not necessary for the prosecutor to sue for the penalty, but he may proceed on the prior clause, on the ground of its being a misdemeanor." This is now established to be the law by the unanimous and clear judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in the principal case.

There are, then, now three efficacious methods of punishing sham attorneys.

1. By indictment for the misdemeanor under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2, which extends to acting as an attorney or solicitor in "any cause, matter, or suit, civil or criminal, to be heard, tried, or determined before any justice of assize, of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or at any general or quarter sessions of the peace for any county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place, or before any justice or justices, or before any commissioners of her Majesty's revenue." One advantage of this course is, that the evidence would be proved with ease, as the trial would of course take place where the offence was committed. The punishment would be fine or imprisonment, or both, and would vary according to the circumstances of the case.

2. Where the case is very gross, and money has been received by the sham attorney, an indictment for obtaining money under false pretences might be preferred, as in the recent case at Birmingham (supra, 49, 51). Under such an indictment, even transportation may be the result of a conviction.

3. There is a third remedy possessed by the superior Courts, and expressly given by section 36 of the Act, where the offence is committed in a county court. That section declares that it shall be deemed a contempt of the court in which the action, suit, or proceeding shall have been prosecuted, carried on, or defended. We understood the Lord Chief Justice to express his clear opinion that, affecting to practise in a court without being duly qualified, would be punishable as a contempt of that Court. And this section was probably inserted only because a county court is not a court of record. That the superior courts would punish for such a contempt we have no doubt. It is to be further remarked, that section 31 makes it a statutable contempt for attorneys to commence or defend suits, &c. whilst in prison. This offence, is made punishable upon the application of any person.

These various modes, therefore, being clearly open, it depends upon the exertions of the members of the Profession, and more especially of the Law Societies, whether an effectual stop shall be put to this class of persons or not. Every day's experience shows the evil they cause, from the ignorance of the parties upon whom they remorselessly prey. Only those who have mixed much with the lower classes are aware of the extent of their ignorance; and, as a specimen, we may mention an occurrence that actually took place this last week. A poor woman appeared in the Court of Queen's Bench, having walked up from Windsor in a great fright to know what was to be done to her. She had received a declaration in ejectment, and, as she said, had done what John Doe advised her, and made her personal appearance at Westminster!

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, April 30.

Easter Term, 9th Victoria.

This Court will, on Saturday the 9th, and Monday, the 11th of May next, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business in the Special Paper and New Trial Paper, and in giving judgment in cases that may then be pending. By the COURT.

Notice has been posted that Reg. v. Douglas will not be called on next Monday.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

NOTICE.

Secretary's Office, Rolls, April 16, 1846.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Wednesday, May 6th, at the Rolls Court, Chancery-lane, at a quarter past 3 in the afternoon, for swearing so-licitors.

Every person desirous of being sworn on the above day must leave his common law admission, or his certificate of practice for the current year, at the secretary's office, Rolls-yard, Chancery-lane, on or before Tuesday, May 5th.

SHERIFFS' COURT, RED LION-SQUARE, April 30.

—PROCLAMATIONS OF OUTLAWRY.—A county court was held to-day before Mr. Under-sheriff Burchell, when the following proclamations of outlawry were made by Hemp, the officer:—Charles Craven, at the suit of W. H. H. Reed; Sir R. D. Hanegan, at the suit of C. Plowden and another; Sir H. Floyd, at the suit of A. Smith and another; G. A. Young, at the suit of O. Roberts; G. Hicks (two cases), at the suit of G. S. Ford and the assignees of James Gibbs, a bankrupt; J. Menzies, at the suit of B. Sams; W. M. Higgins, at the suit of C. G. Pool; M. Denys, at the suit of J. Angel; C. Stewart, at the suit of J. B. Byron; F. Twysden, at the suit of R. Bryant; J. Salmon, at the suit of W. E. Goatley; A. H. Kenney, at the suit of the Queen; J. E. Spalding, at the suit of L. J. Nathan; F. B. Parker, at the suit of T. Sanford; W. J. Bardett, at the suit of C. Bennett; C. S. Reynolds, at the suit of E. Smith; H. H. Wernick, at the suit of Robert Warren; Geo. Linley, at the suit of C. W. De Bernardy; T. Sharp, at the suit of P. Plague and others; W. B. Metcalfe, at the suit of W. Reeve and another; F. T. Gotobed, at the suit of R. Lewis and another; W. Bailey, at the suit of C. W. De Bernardy; W. F. Byng, at the suit of J. Jones; T. L. Wellesley, at the suit of O. Richards; W. T. D. Lloyd, at the suit of D. E. Columbine.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

WILL of Mr. JOHN ASHTON, of HYDE.—This gentleman, a younger brother of the late Mr. Thomas Ashton, and a man of large property and somewhat eccentric character, died on Saturday last, leaving a will, by which, as we understand, a considerable sum will come into the hands of Government towards the payment of the national debt. This will, we believe, was made some years ago, when Mr. Ashton, after giving a number of specific legacies to different individuals, bequeathed the residue of his property, which he then estimated at 30,000*l.* to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to be applied in diminution of the national debt. Since that time, however, his property has so far accumulated that the residue which will pass by this bequest is estimated at about 150,000*l.* This amount, however, may be somewhat diminished if Government should think proper to carry into effect a bequest in the will, which, contrary to the obvious intentions of the testator, has lapsed by the death of the individual in whose favour it was made. This was a considerable legacy to his late manager, who died some time ago, leaving a wife and family, whom Mr. Ashton supported, and for whom he probably supposed that he had provided by his will; but the bequest being specific to the manager alone, has been rendered void by his death, and the amount, we believe no less than 20,000*l.*, goes to swell the residue accruing to the Government. We imagine that if the Lords of the Treasury should feel satisfied that it was Mr. Ashton's intention that this bequest should stand for the benefit of the widow and family, they will think it right to carry that intention into effect.—Manchester Guardian.

LEGAL FORCES, &c. OF ENGLAND.—The following is an analysis of the individuals occupied in England in a judicial or other administrative or legal professional character, in April, 1846:—5 equity judges, 15 common law judges of the superior courts at Westminster, 1 judge in civil law, 1 admiralty judge, 2 judges in bankruptcy, 12 masters in chancery, 2 masters in lunacy, 5 visitors in lunacy, 11 commissioners in lunacy, 6 commissioners in bankruptcy, 12 country commissioners in bankruptcy, 96 recorders, 21 metropolitan and suburban magistrates, 24 clerks of the High Court of Chancery, 25 Lord Chancellor's officers, and a legion of other officers attached to the equity and common law public offices, ~~the latter to the amount of~~ above 3,080 barristers, exclusive of 28 serjeants-at-law. There are 74 Queen's counsel, including the Attorney and Solicitor-General; 23 advocates, members of the College of Doctors of Law; 122 certificated special pleaders and conveyancers, not at the bar, above 2,800 metropolitan attorneys, upwards of 4,000 country attorneys, 106 proctors and notaries, 34 notaries public, 55 parliamentary agents, 31 Scotch law agents in London, 51 Irish law agents in London, and 14 patent agents. There are also in London 124 law and public offices.

SENTENCE ON A BARRISTER FOR FORGERY, AT DUBLIN.—Mr. John Sargent was put forward to receive sentence. He had been convicted of forging a bill of exchange, purporting to be the draft of General Saunders. Mr. Sargent, who is a barrister, had been agent to the General, who died since the period when the case had come before the primary tribunal, where the case had been at the instance of the deceased General. Baron Richards, in passing sentence upon this gentleman, said, "Had you been convicted of a similar offence previous to the wise and merciful relaxation of the criminal laws, you would be standing there to receive sentence of death, instead of that which the Court has now to pronounce against you." The learned judge then pronounced against the convict sentence of transportation for seven years. There is a strange force in the words which I have underlined, giving to this gentleman's case a deeper interest than ordinary. It is said that he was actually under sentence of death in 1821, and was left for execution, for the crime of forgery. The story of his reprieve is thus told:—In the year just mentioned, George IV. visited this country. Mrs. Sargent, who appears to have made a most devoted wife, was incessant in her efforts during the period of the monarch's stay in Ireland to induce the Royal clemency towards her unfortunate husband. She was not, we believe, successful at the first, but, that no solicitation—that no importunity should mar her generous and devoted purpose, she directed her steps to Kingstown on the day when the Royal visitor left the shores of the Emerald Isle. The lady was unable to press through his guards to fling herself at the monarch's feet and to implore him to do an act of grace as he departed, but she screamed her prayers and entreaties, so that above the acclamations of the thousands who witnessed his departure, George IV. heard the sobbing solicitations of Mrs. Sargent. The king did not relent, and the lady, maddened by failure, flung herself from the jetty into the sea, that she might die in her distraction. The Royal voyager was not proof against such devotion—he pardoned the husband, and the wife was happy. I know not whether the lady yet survives; but the husband seems destined, at sixty years, to prove the punishment which the law now awards against forgery, having in his youth escaped the death of a felon for a similar crime. Is it not a strange history?

An amusing scene occurred in the Sheriff's Court at Hull on Wednesday week. The second case for adjudication having occupied till nearly nine o'clock in hearing, the coroner clearly summed up the evidence, and explained to the jury his view of the case. He stated, however, that he did not wish them to be at all biased by what he had said, and therefore he handed them in a copy of the Act of Parliament to guide them in their decision. The jury having expressed a wish to retire, the usual oath was administered to the bailiff, that he should keep them without "meat, fire, or candle," until they came a decision. One of the jurors, naturally enough, said, "How, then, are we to read the Act of Parliament?" This was a poser: judges, jury, and counsel seemed equally at a nonplus. The bailiff, however, soon got over the difficulty, by saying, "Come, sirs, gentlemen; I'll take you to a room where there is gas-light."—Hull Packet.

Mr. Pollock, the Clerk of the Peace for the county and city of Dublin and thirteen other counties in Ireland, died on Monday, at Mountains Town, in country seat. The demise of this pluralist will create several vacancies, which will be filled up by five separate appointments!

IRISH LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The following gentlemen have been appointed by the Lord Lieutenant to the under-mentioned vacancies in the office of Clerk of the Crown, caused by the death of A. H. C. Pollock, who held the office as reversioner under a patent granted by the Crown to his father:—Mr. Japhet Alley, county and city of Dublin; Mr. J. J. Stamford, county of Meath; Mr. Charles Pemberton, King's County; Mr. George Pilkington, Queen's County; Mr. John Edmund Roche, county of Wexford; Mr. George Geale, county of Longford; Mr. Wm. Keogh, county and city of Kilkenny; Mr. Wm. Greene, county of Westmeath; Mr. J. M'Mahon, county of Wicklow; Mr. John Maher, county of Louth; and Mr. James Barry, county of Kildare.

Sir Compton Domvile, Bart. Custos Rotulorum of one county of Dublin, has appointed George Wade, esq. clerk of the peace for the county, in the room of A. H. C. Pollock, esq. deceased.

It is now generally understood that Wm. Brooke, esq. Q.C. one of the most distinguished lawyers at the Chancery Bar, has been appointed Master in Chancery, in the room of John Sealy Townsend, esq. who has resigned, having arrived at the advanced age of eighty-three years. The appointment has given the most unqualified satisfaction to both branches of the Profession.

The Court of Chancery, at its rising, was adjourned until Saturday, when his lordship will sit to hear motions. It is an almost unprecedented circumstance that the cause list should have been cleared off at so early a day in Term; but several causes having been struck out, for non-attendance of solicitors, is partly the reason of this occurrence.

PROPERTY TAX.—A return of the amount of property-tax collected in England, Wales, and Scotland during the respective years ending January 8, 1844 and 1845. The following were, it appears, the sums realised under each schedule:—

	Year 1844.	Year 1845.
Schedule A.....	£2,378,000	£2,366,047
B.....	317,716	318,807
C.....	796,709	766,666
D.....	1,599,698	1,541,970
E.....	321,478	313,900
Total....	5,412,784	5,303,389

Decrease in 1845.... 109,194

SUPERANNUATIONS IN PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS.—A Parliamentary document has been issued extending to nearly 50 folio pages, giving an account of all allowances or compensations granted as retired allowances or superannuations in all public offices or departments which remain payable on the 1st January, 1845; the annual amount which was granted in the year 1845; the annual amount which ceased within the year, and the total amount remaining payable on the 31st December last. The total compensation and superannuation allowances remaining payable on the 31st December last were 635,973*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* It seems that the compensation allowances payable on the 1st January, 1845, amounted to 253,421l. 15s. 5d. The annual amount of compensation allowances granted in the year 1845 was 3,405l. 8s. 3d. and the annual amount of compensation allowances which ceased within the year was 13,137l. 5s. 2d. Of superannuation allowances, after deducting a sum of 34,375l. 1s. 3d. allowed by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4. c. 24, the actual charge on the public on the 31st December last, was 395,183l. 6s. 9d. The superannuation allowances granted last year were 54,236l. 5s. 4d. and the amount which ceased in the year was 31,789l. 0s. 5d. Separate accounts are given from the various public departments.

THE ARMY.—By a return obtained on the application of Captain Layard (Carlton), a statement was made of the expense incurred from the year 1840 to 1845, by the rewards paid for the apprehension of deserters, &c. The information on the return does not extend beyond the 31st of March, 1845. The following results appear:—In the year ending March 1841, the expense for the apprehension, subsistence, and escort of deserters was 2,634l.; for the subsistence of other soldiers in confinement it was 10,364l. The number of rank and file in the year, exclusive of India, was 82,670. In 1841-2, under the first head, it was 4,385l.; under the second, 10,779l.; and the number was 80,970. In 1842-3, under the first head, 3,959l.; under the second, 10,185l.; the number was 84,140. In 1843-4, under the first head, 2,874l.; under the second, 11,213l.; the number was 88,737; and, in 1844-5, under the first head, 2,168l.; the second, 11,975l.; and the number 88,261. This is by no means an explicit return to the order of the House of Commons.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP.—It appears from a Parliamentary return just issued, that 2,467 places of religious worship have been registered in England and Wales for the celebration of marriages. Of these, 195 belonged to the Presbyterians; 970 to the Independents or Congregationalists; 599 to the Baptists; 267 to the Armenian Methodists; 78 to the Calvinistic Methodists; 301 to Roman Catholics; five were "foreign churches;" and 52 miscellaneous. In the year 1844, there were 132,249 marriages in England; of these 120,000 were according to the rites of the Established Church; while 12,240 were otherwise performed, 3,446 having been effected in the offices of the Superintendent Registrars.

ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN IN IRELAND.—The return to Mr. Sharman Crawford's motion for an account of the "number of women having illegitimate children relieved in the workhouses in Ireland during the half-year ending the 25th September, 1845," has been printed by order of the House of Commons. From the summary of the returns from 119 workhouses, it appears the numbers relieved during the above period were—women having illegitimate children, 2,091; illegitimate children, 3,688.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOLICITORS' LIFE INSURANCE OFFICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am gratified to learn this society is now in full work. I beg to refer you to my letter of the 24th March last, and to your observations thereon (vol. 6, p. 530). In earnest of my pledge, I have to inform you that I have now effected an insurance on my own life for 600l. and on a branch of my family for 200l.—together 800l. May I, therefore, ask you how the list you proposed sending to the different shareholders is progressing? I hope most successfully, and that every individual shareholder will hasten to follow my example by effecting a personal insurance for as large an amount as may be convenient. With the cordial and zealous co-operation of all its members, depend on it, this society will, ere long, take up such a position as will exceed the expectations of its most sanguine supporters. I am sure the best thanks of the Profession at large are most justly due to you for the interest you have taken for their benefit by your honest advocacy of this measure.

I remain, Sir, yours, &c.

POINT OF PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will one of your readers enlighten me on a question of deep import to attorneys and solicitors?

A solicitor, employed by B. delivers to B. sec. stat. his bill of costs, extending over a period of twenty years, and two years after delivery of the bill, B. becomes bankrupt.

We will suppose that the solicitor tenders his claim for proof against B.'s estate, stating in his deposition the delivery of the bill to B. and that more than twelve calendar months had elapsed, at date of fiat, since delivery of bill. The commissioner will decide that he cannot allow the proof till bill taxed, and so he will annul the provision in 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, which, after twelve months, protects a bill from taxation, except under "special circumstances." The commissioner will support his decision by referring to the uniform practice of his court.

I shall be glad to know if "attorneys and solicitors" are, in circumstances most adverse to them, to be thus deprived of a protection which the legislature has thought fit to give them against a solvent debtor in the above enactment, by a "simple rule of Court?" for the application of which, in the case supposed, there is no reason whatever.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

SPECTATOR.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"ONE, &c." thus again addresses us on the subject of Short Conveyances:—

I am glad to find that my remarks on the "Short Conveyances" Act have met with the approbation of other gentlemen of the Profession. I do not indeed find a dissentient voice, and more than that, I do find, that both in town and country, every solicitor who has any regard for his character does adopt the short forms alluded to in my former letter. Whether or not Mr. Hayes, and other gentlemen who have devoted their lives to the study and practice of Conveyancing, are better calculated to perform this task with discretion and safety, or whether my Lords Brougham and Campbell, who cannot by possibility have given their attention to the subject, except incidentally, and in the most superficial manner, is a question which, from every one, except perhaps the noble lords themselves, admits of but one answer. To the credit of the Bar, there prevails always a strong general desire among this body not to interfere with one another's peculiar branches of study. It will often happen that common law and equity questions arise out of the same case, and the solicitor is always told by the gentleman to whom he submits his papers, that he must take the opinion of Mr. — on such and such points, he, the gentleman consulted, being unwilling to advise on a subject out of his practice. Lords Brougham and Campbell, however, reject these curbs upon the universality of their talents; common law, equity, and conveyancing are alike familiar to them, and a statute scratched off currente calamo, if it bear the stamp of their genius, is a fit substitute for the labour and wisdom of ages. Our ancestors were not imbued with this mania for law making. The Statute of Uses, for instance, was the result of very great research and labour, and when passed was not followed immediately by Acts to amend and repeal Acts, &c. as we see done now every day. I am not desirous of returning to the forms or dilatoriness of antiquity, but I do think it is a serious evil, and one against which it is the duty of every reflecting person to protest, that the most momentous questions affecting the property of the country are to be treated in a crude and careless manner, and to be sacrificed to individual caprice and personal prejudices. The subject is treated of in the Spectator of last week. The Editor alludes more particularly to Belgium, in which country it is stated that by reason of the facility of transferring land, money may be raised on it at 2 per cent. I confess I do not understand how the transfer of land and the rate of interest of money operate on one another, as I do not believe that the value of money so raised in this country is affected by any presumed difficulty or expense in creating mortgages. There can be no mode of transfer more simple or less expensive than that of the public funds; and yet the mode of transfer cannot be said to affect the rate of interest, which is about equal to the rent of land. But we must not be guided by the laws of other countries, although we may perhaps borrow hints, as their laws are mostly founded on different principles from ours. If we look to France, we shall find conveyancing not much less expensive or complicated than our own system, notwithstanding the "Code Napoleon." I beg to state, that I am not opposed to reforms in the law, but I wish those reforms to be worked out by competent and unprejudiced parties; still more desirous am I of rousing the Profession to a sense of their dangers and duties, and to urge those who have the ability, and have constituted themselves the guardians of the Profession, to shew, what I now very much doubt, that they feel a sincere interest in its general welfare and prosperity.

"W. R." thus replies to a query of last week as to the proper fees of Surrogates:—

The question with respect to the highest charge of a surrogate on proving a will, can only be answered by considering the nature of his office and duty. A will, although proved only in common form, is considered, in the short progress which it thus undergoes, to obtain the sanction of a court of probate; and to that end it must necessarily have a judge to give effect, pro forma, to its judicial acts. A surrogate, therefore, is the representative or locum tenens of the strict judge or official of the court of probate, and in strictness he can have no personal interest in its fees of office. Like other courts of English law, a fee is payable in ecclesiastical courts upon administering an oath, a custom which would surely be more honoured in the breach than the observance, inasmuch as it thus connects with an act of religious obligation a pecuniary advantage to the administrant. The fee is usually a shilling, which by usage is paid to the surrogate upon every oath administered by or before him; and any further payment is either excessive or gratuitous.

Castle Meadow, Norwich.

"E. C." (Leeds) thus answers a query relating to sham conveyancers:—

I would refer your correspondent in last number, who inquires how an unqualified person may be punished for drawing conveyances and charging for them, to the 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, s. 14, which enacts, that any unqualified person drawing any conveyance for fee or gain, shall be liable to a penalty of 50l.

Having waited a considerable length of time for a reply, by some senior member of the Profession, to the query suggested by your correspondent "A. B." in No. 153 of the LAW TIMES, p. 467, as to whether or not, in consequence of the decision in Reg. v. Steward of Eton College, it would be necessary in a conveyance by tenants in common, to have a separate lease stamp for each tenant in common, and no such reply having been made, I would suggest, with all due deference as a junior, that as tenants in common have a unity of possession, they would be entitled to grant a lease for possession under one stamp. The decision above referred to certainly seems to have been not in accordance with the generally received opinion of the Profession. (See Lee on Abstracts, p. 275.)

NOTICE.

The subscription for the current half-year is now due, and subscribers desirous of availing themselves of the great reduction allowed for pre-payment, should forward the same in the course of the ensuing week. The prepaid subscription is 1l. 5s. for the half-year, and 2l. 7s. for the year, being a reduction respectively of 25 and 30 per cent.

Post-office Orders must be made payable to Mr. JOHN CROCKFORD, Publisher of the Law Times.

CONVEYANCING.

THERE is no subject that so urgently demands the most anxious consideration of the Profession as the present state and prospects of this important branch of business. We may be assured that great changes are impending which, if not anticipated by the prudence of the Profession, and preparation made to meet them, will be productive of very serious consequences to the general emoluments, and thus to the social status, of its members.

It would be more pleasant to flatter our readers with hopes that the innovations threatening are impracticable; that the lawyers are powerful enough to resist them; that the legislature is too much busied with other matters to trouble itself about law reforms. It is easy to write leading articles exhibiting the difficulties and absurdities of short forms, and the folly of cheap conveyances; but, satisfied that neither argument nor ridicule will avert the mischief, it is the part of an honest friend to set about the more troublesome and unpleasing task of warning the confident, rousing the indolent to action, and suggesting the course which should be pursued under the circumstances, so that the evil may be diminished by foresight, and as much of good extracted from it as energy and exertion can secure, both from legislation and by internal arrangements. Such task be ours.

LORD BROUGHAM's new bill for abbreviating conveyances would, of itself, offer small cause for alarm, whether measured by the influence of its author or the worth of the measure. But its reception is a sign of a change that has taken place in the minds of those who have more power to carry out their opinions. The truth is, and the Profession cannot be too often and too earnestly warned of it, that the coming changes in the commercial policy of the country, the abolition of the protection hitherto possessed by agriculture, has turned the attention of the landowners to the various burdens by which land is affected. Among these, not the least grievous they assert to be the cost of conveyances. It is a tax upon the property, and practically operates to diminish its value by preventing its free interchange in the market. Resolved, if the produce of their land is to compete with the produce of the world, that it shall do so on more equitable terms, and that land shall have no heavier burdens, or be more trammelled than personal property, the landlords are already crying out for relief from these impediments. An intimation was given in the short debate on the introduction of Lord BROUGHAM's Bill, that they are resolved, by some means or other, to reduce the difficulties and costs that attend the transfer of land. On this point all parties were agreed. The men who desire it have the power to carry out their desire; and when interest urges we may be sure that the wish will ere long shape itself into action.

True, there are difficulties not calculated upon; obstacles not foreseen; forces that may be arrayed in powerful opposition to the design. But with such a stimulus, we may be sure that these, though they may delay, cannot defeat. For good or for ill, whether with or without the sanction of the lawyers, no long time can elapse before the legislature will compel great changes in the practice of conveyancing.

It is, therefore, a matter for grave consultation with the Profession, if it shall commit itself to an uncompromising opposition, which, we verily believe, will be hopeless against the forces ranged on the other side; or if it shall, with as much good humour as it can command, admit the fairness of the landlords' demand, give its practical aid in the accomplishment of the object, and accompany this with such conditions and securities as may greatly modify, if not altogether remove, the evil, and which, although they might be denied to a conquered opponent, could not be refused to an assistant and ally.

What, then, should be done to lighten a mischief we cannot hope altogether to avert? Let us make terms; let us convert hostile measures into a friendly compromise. Let us say to the landlords, "We admit your complaint. We feel with you that the cost of conveyancing is greater than it should be; we allow that land should be made a more marketable commodity. We will cordially aid your endeavour to make it such by reducing the cost of its transfer, and removing present obstacles. But your measures will not effect your object. They are wanting in practical wisdom. They are framed in the closet, not in the office. They purpose to legislate for parts of a great system, without reference to the working of the whole machine. You apply your remedy too partially; you attack a symptom, and not the disease. Take us to your counsels; meet us in friendly conference; call in our practical experience to correct your theories. We will shew you the true seat of the mischief; we will prove to you that it is in your own legislation that the cause of the cost of conveyancing is to be found. Your unjust, because unequal, stamp laws, your imperfect Statutes of Limitation, have produced the greater portion of the cost and difficulties of which you complain. They swell the amount of our bills, but they do not add materially to our profits. If land were more readily transferred we should gain in the increase of conveyances at least as much as we should lose in diminished charges. We will lend you our experience and our influence; but you must do us some acts of justice in return. We are grievously wronged by a tax imposed upon us alone of all the professions. If you reduce our profits, relieve us of this burden. Conveyancing is the most profitable branch of the lawyer's practice, and requires at least as much skill as any other. Yet is the larger portion of this business abstracted from us by persons who have paid none of the fees, who have not been compelled to the costly education, who have been submitted to no test of examination, as we have been. Prohibit this invasion for the future."

By language such as this, and by such a course of conduct, do we believe that the Profession will more profit than by a dogged opposition to changes that must be made.

The particular arrangements by which they should strive to make those changes harmless we propose to consider in future articles.

AN EXPLANATION.

MANY correspondents have inquired what is "THE LAW DIGEST," some time since announced as an intended addition to the LAW TIMES, and now actually in course of publication.

The design is to present half-yearly a complete Index to the Law as propounded by the Judges and by statute during the preceding six months.

The plan is this. Suppose, for instance, it is desired to know what has been promulgated upon the Law of Executors, or of Bankruptcy, during the period over which the DIGEST extends. By referring to that word, a note of every case published will be found under its appropriate subdivisions; thus affording immediate access to the actual law, brought down to the latest practicable period.

This plan, of course, does not differ materially from other Digests; but in its execution it is unique. The value of such an Index must depend wholly upon its completeness. Unless every case ever reported, is to be found there, it is almost worthless. Now, it so happens, that the other Digests are not complete. One gives only the cases reported in what are called "the regular Reports;" others omit altogether those of the Law Journal, the Jurist, or the Law Times. No one presents all the reports. But THE LAW DIGEST, disclaiming all petty jealousies of other reports and publishers, and looking only to the wants of the Profession and the purpose of such a work, includes all the cases in all the reports, and thus contains many hundreds that will be looked for in vain elsewhere.

The utility of such a publication must be apparent. It is printed like the LAW TIMES, for the convenience of being bound with its half-yearly volumes, which will thus present a ready reference, whose value can only be appreciated by the practitioner, who seeks his information amid the hurry of business.

As this is a first attempt to form so comprehensive an Index Legum, doubtless some defects will be apparent, spite of the vast labour and care that have been bestowed upon its preparation. These practice and experience will remove, and each succeeding half-year will enable us to make it more and more perfect, especially if our readers will point out any errors, or improvements, or additions, which, when they come to use it, may suggest themselves.

In its length it will be about four or five numbers; according to the number of reports and statutes the half-year may have produced. And in future it will be brought out before the close of the volume of the LAW TIMES, so that it may be completed simultaneously with it, and avoid the present delay in the binding.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE conviction and transportation of one of this tribe at Birmingham, and the decision in Reg. v. Buchanan, will, we hope, inspire them with a more salutary dread of public exposure than they have hitherto exhibited. They have no shame, but they have fears; therefore we continue to publish their doings. Here is the latest received: it comes from Manchester. Mr. N. BROWNING, Clerk, should be looked to.

"Hannah Johnston,
"I am instructed by Mr. William Cartwell, of 9, Green-street, Oak-street, to apply to you for a debt of 8s. 7d. due to him for goods sold; and if the same, together with all lawful costs and charges, be not paid to me, or to plaintiff, within five days from this date, an action will be commenced against you for the recovery of the same, under the provisions of the late Act of Victoria, cap. 127, and dated August 9, 1845, intituled 'An Act for the better securing the Payments of Small Debts.'

"And for your information I hereby quote from the Penal Clause the following:—

"Any debtor refusing to disclose every transaction respecting his property, or the sale or disposal thereof, or having made away with his property for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, or of contracting more debts than he was able to pay, or who being in receipt of wages or salary, or other income, and shall refuse or neglect to pay such instalments as shall be fixed by the Court, for every such offence, and in respect of each and every such instalment, he shall be liable to forty days' imprisonment in the Common Gaol."

"N.B.—No imprisonment, under this Act, goes to extinguish any debt nor instalment fixed by the Court; and by a late order of the Home Secretary, fraudulent debtors are limited to prison diet, and allowed to see their friends only once a week.

"N. BROWNING, Clerk.
"April 11, 1846."

HEIRS-AT-LAW AND NEXT-OF-KIN.

READERS will observe the addition of a new feature to the LAW TIMES.

It is proposed to preserve here a complete list of Heirs-at-Law, Next-of-Kin, Legatees, &c. that have been advertised for during the present century. Such a list may be valuable for reference, and certainly is peculiarly fitted for a Journal circulating among the Legal Profession. Of course none will be included that have appeared during the current year. These are proper subjects for advertisement, and would be liable to duty. The further particulars as to references, and the date when, and place where, the advertisements appeared, are also omitted, for the same reason; but they may be known at the Office, where a register is kept. We trust that the interest and utility of this information will justify the labour bestowed on its collection.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

PART VI. of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, completing the first volume, will be ready on Saturday next.

Mr. SAUNDERS's Practice of Summary Conveyances, with the addition of a collection of Precedents, is now in the press, and will be added to the publications of the Society.

We repeat, that all the valuable law books, published by Messrs. KNIGHT will be supplied to the members at the Society's prices, viz. a reduction of 20 per cent.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

A Summary of the Law of Railways, with an Appendix. By FREDERICK WALFORD, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second edition. London: Blankarn. 1846.

This work has been considerably enlarged, although the general arrangement remains as it was when we noticed the first edition. That arrangement, therefore, it will be unnecessary to repeat. Since its first publication, many novel questions have arisen, to which Mr. WALFORD has devoted great learning and astuteness, especially on the subjects of the rights and liabilities of the parties concerned in companies for the formation of railways, such as allottees of shares, provisional directors, &c. in ignorance of which so fearful an amount of responsibility has been incurred, and so much ruin and misery have been produced. The Appendix includes the latest reports of the proceedings of two of the most important committees of the present session, useful as a guide to practitioners; the most recent resolutions of both Houses of Parliament, the suggestions lately issued by the chairman of committees, and a succinct view of the question what constitutes a locus standi to be heard before a railway committee against a bill, and the grounds of opposition that may be taken by opponents. Forms of railway deeds have been added, together with some unreported cases of recent occurrence. We have had occasion lately to notice many works devoted to the law of railways. Our readers will best judge, from the description we have given of the nature of the contents of each, which of them best supplies the information they require. It will be seen that Mr. WALFORD's is as comprehensive as any that has appeared, and it has in its favour the additional testimony of a second edition.

Bail Court Reports. By THOMAS W. SAUNDERS and EDWARD LAWES, of the Middle Temple, Esquires, Barristers-at-law. Vol. 1, Part I. Benning and Co.

THIS is the first attempt to give to the Profession a distinct series of reports of the cases decided in the Bail Court. A few of them find their way into the Q. B. Reports; many are reported in the Jurist and Law Journal; notes of every case by Mr. SAUNDERS are regularly published in the LAW TIMES, and the most important of them are comprised in the New Practice Cases of the Verulam Society. But this is the first complete collection, and the cases appear to be very carefully and fully reported.

10. Bankrupts and their Assignees.

As the law formerly stood, under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 7, a trader, from the moment of his committing an act of bankruptcy, was deprived of all power of disposing of his property, so that all alienations or dispositions made by him after that time were absolutely null and void (Henley's Bankrupt Laws, 258, 3rd edit.); and this whether the purchaser was or was not cognizant of the act of bankruptcy. By a subsequent enactment, however (21 Jac. 1, c. 15, s. 1), no purchaser for a valuable consideration was to be impeached unless a commission issued within five years after the act of bankruptcy. By a still more recent enactment (46 Geo. 3, c. 135), all bond fide conveyances and transactions with any bankrupt, more than two years before the date of his commission, were rendered valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy, unless the party purchasing had notice of it. And by the still more recent Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 81, all conveyances by, and all contracts with, any bankrupt, bond fide made and entered into more than two calendar months before the issuing of the commission, are rendered valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy, if the person dealing with the bankrupt had not at the time of such dealing notice of any prior act of bankruptcy. And even if the purchaser had such notice, provided he were a bond fide one, and for a valuable consideration, the sale will not be impeached by reason thereof, unless a commission or fiat shall be sued out against the bankrupt within twelve months after the act of bankruptcy, instead of the five years, as the law stood previously. (Sec. 86.) And under the recent Act, 2 Vict. c. 4, s. 12, all bond fide conveyances by a bankrupt, previous to issuing a fiat against him, are rendered valid, notwithstanding a prior act of bankruptcy, unless the purchaser has notice of it. Nor will a purchaser be affected by such notice, unless a fiat be sued out within twelve calendar months after the act of bankruptcy; and all contracts entered into with any bankrupt before the issuing of the fiat are rendered valid, unless in the case of a fraudulent preference.

Property of bankrupt how vested in his assignees.—As the law formerly stood, the estate of the bankrupt did not become vested in his assignees until it had been duly assigned to them by the commissioners (stat. 20 Jac. 1, c. 19), in which assignment the provisional assignee or assignees (if any had been chosen) must have joined; and until such assignment was made, the property was not transferred out of the bankrupt (Ex parte Proudfoot, 1 Atk. 253; Jacobson v. Williams, 1 P. Wms. 385, 386); but now, under the late Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, ss. 25, 26, all the real estate of the bankrupt vests in his assignees by virtue of their appointment, without any deed of conveyance whatever. And it is the duty of the assignees to sell the property at the earliest convenient opportunity; nor ought they to delay the sale upon the probability of the property fetching a higher price at some future period (Ex parte Goring, 1 Ves. 168; see also 6 ib. 622; Henley's Bankrupt Law, 215, 3rd edit.; Ex parte Montgomery, 1 G. & J. 338); and the Court will reluctantly interfere to stay a sale upon an application from the assignee for that purpose; and the provisional assignee is now expressly prohibited from all control over this subject.

Power of sale in assignees.—The assignees may sell by private contract; but for all this they should be cautious of so doing without the consent of the creditors; for if it were to be shewn, upon a complaint made by the latter, that more money might have been made of the property by a public sale, it would be a circumstance of evidence against the assignees not to be disregarded. (Ex parte Dunsman, 2 Rose, 66; Macpherson v. Gibb, 1 C. & P. 149; Henley's Bankrupt Law, 216, 3rd edit.) And where the property is sold by public auction, no assignee should buy in any of the lots without the knowledge and approbation of the creditors; as in that case, should any loss be incurred upon a resale of any of the lots so bought in, he will be charged with the loss on the lot undersold, notwithstanding there may be a gain upon the resale of the other lots sufficient to make a balance in favour of the bankrupt's estate. (Ex parte Lewis, 1 G. & J. 69; Ex parte Buxton, ib. 355.)

Assignees bound to produce a good title.—In Pope v. Simpson (5 Ves. 145), Lord Roslyn expressed an opinion (which seems wholly uncalled for by the circumstances of the case) that where parties purchased of assignees, they had no right to expect more than that the assignees should deliver over such a title as the bankrupt had; but this doctrine, which is at utter variance with former decisions upon the subject (Orlebar v. Fletcher, 1 P. Wms. 737; Spurrier v. Hancock, 4 Ves. 667; Henl. Bkt. Law, 218, 3rd edit.; 1 Mad. Pract. 438, 2nd edit.), has not since been adhered to. Its correctness was indeed repeatedly denied by Lord Eldon (see White v. Poljambé, 11 Ves. 337; McDonald v. Hansom, 12 Ves. 277; see also 18 Ves. 512), who said expressly that he never knew the principle adopted by Lord Roslyn in Pope v. Simpson. "Previously to that decision," observed his lordship, "I always said, and I say now, that if assignees of a bankrupt agree to sell, they agree to sell with a good title" (11 Ves. 343); and it has since been finally determined that assignees of bankrupts stand in precisely the same situation as other vendors of real property (McDonald v. Hansom, supra); consequently, they may, like ordinary vendors, enter into stipulations with respect to the title and the evidence to be adduced in support of it (Frome v. Wright, 4 Mad. 364); and this it is their bounden duty to do should the circumstances of the title require it. They must also, where the property is sold in lots, and in fact in all cases where the title-deeds are not to be delivered over to all the purchasers, take especial care to provide against furnishing attested copies, or other copies of deeds or documents that cannot be handed over to the purchaser; for unless protected by a stipulation of this kind, assignees must, like all other vendors, where the title-deeds cannot be delivered, give attested copies of them at the expense of the estate. (Ex parte Stuart, 2 Rose, 215; Henl. Bkt. Law, 218, 3rd edit.; see also ante, p. 6.)

Effect of Fine and Recovery Substitution Act upon estates of bankrupt tenants in tail.—Before the passing of the Fine and Recovery Substitution Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), where a bankrupt was tenant in tail, the mode by which the entail was barred was by the usual deed of bargain and sale of the commissioners, which had the same effect as any rightful assurance by the tenant in tail himself. (1 Com. Dig. 98, pl. 34, 35.) Hence, if he were tenant in tail in possession, the bargain and sale would have produced the same effect as a common recovery, and have barred not only the estate tail, but also all remainders expectant thereon. (1 Prest. Abs. 173, 174.) But where the bankrupt had only an estate tail in remainder, expectant on an estate of freehold in some other person, the commissioners could only have conveyed a base fee, producing the like effect that a fine with proclamation by the bankrupt himself would have done; because, not having an estate of freehold, he was unable to suffer a recovery. (Pye v. Danbuz, 3 Bro. C. C. 595; Jervis v. Tayleur, 3 Barn. & Ald. 557; see also 1 Com. Dig. 98, pl. 35; Henl. Bkt. Law, 228, 3rd edit.) Upon this doctrine a doubt arose whether at a future period (when the bankrupt or his issue, who but for the bankruptcy would have been seised in tail in possession, and so qualified to suffer a recovery), the commissioners could, by a subsequent bargain and sale, produce the effect of a recovery, and, thus barring the remainder, enlarge the previous base fee into an absolute estate in fee simple: a point so exceedingly doubtful, that it became the usual practice to require a common recovery, either from the bankrupt himself, or from his issue in case of his death (1 Prest. Abs. 174); but now, under the 56th section of the Fine and Recovery Substitution Act, a disposition by the commissioners will have the same effect as a recovery by the bankrupt and his issue under the same circumstances; that statute empowering the commissioners to dispose of the estate just in the same manner as the bankrupt himself could have done; and also, by a subsequent disposition, to enlarge the base fee into a fee simple, absolute in all cases, where the bankrupt himself or his issue could have done so; the statute placing the commissioner, as to any power of alienation, in precisely the same situation as the bankrupt himself would have occupied. In like manner, also, is his power of disposition restricted; consequently, if there be a protector to the settlement, as the latter gives or withholds his consent, to that extent is the commissioner enabled to bar the entail. (Sec. 38, and see ante.) And where, for want of such consent, the commissioner is only enabled to pass a base fee, and there should afterwards, during the continuance of the base fee, cease to be a protector, the base fee will become enlarged into a fee simple absolute. (Secs. 60, 61.)

Power of commissioners of bankrupts to confirm voidable estates.—The commissioner is also empowered, accordingly as the protector gives or withholds his consent, to confirm a voidable estate in favour of a purchaser (sec. 62); and where there ceases to be a protector during the continuance of a base fee, where that only passes it will become enlarged into a fee simple absolute; but it is by the same clause also provided, "that if the disposition made by such commissioner as aforesaid shall be made to a purchaser for valuable consideration, who shall not have express notice of the voidable estate, then and in such case the voidable estate shall not be confirmed against such purchaser and the persons claiming under him."

Acts of bankrupt how void as against disposition by commissioners.—All acts and deeds done and executed by the bankrupt tenant in tail are rendered void against any disposition by the commissioner under this Act (sec. 63); but, subject to the powers given to the commissioner, and to the estate in the assignees, the bankrupt shall have the same powers of disposition under this Act as he would have had if he had not become bankrupt. (Id. id.)

Effect of disposition by commissioners.—The disposition of the commissioner shall, if the bankrupt be dead, have in the cases therein mentioned the same operation as if he were alive; that is to say, in case at the time of the bankrupt's decease there shall be no protector of the settlement by which the estate tail of the actual tenant in tail, or the estate tail converted into a base fee, as the case may be, was created; or in case the bankrupt had been an actual tenant in tail of such lands, and there shall at the time of the disposition be any issue inheritable to the estate tail of the bankrupt in such lands, and either no protector of the settlement by which the estate tail was created, or a protector of such settlement, who, in the manner required by this Act, shall consent to the disposition, or a protector of such settlement who shall not consent to the disposition; or in case the bankrupt had been a tenant in tail entitled to a base fee in such lands, and there shall, at the time of the disposition, be any issue who, if the base fee had not been created, would have been actual tenant in tail of such lands, and either no protector of the settlement by which the estate tail converted into a base fee was created, or a protector of such settlement, who, in the manner required by this Act, shall consent to the disposition. (Sec. 65.)

Disposition of commissioners, except of copyhold, must be enrolled in Chancery.—The disposition of the commissioner, except in the case of copyholds, will be void, unless enrolled in Chancery within six months after execution; and all dispositions of lands held by copy of court roll must be entered on the court rolls of the manor; and if there shall be a protector who shall consent to the disposition of such copyholds, he shall give his consent by a distinct deed, which consent shall be void unless the deed of consent be executed by the protector, either on or at any time before the day on which the deed of disposition shall be executed by the commissioner; and such deed of consent shall be entered on the court rolls; and it is imperative on the lord or steward to enter every deed required by this Act to be so entered on the court rolls of the manor, and to indorse on every deed so entered a memorandum signed by him, testifying the entry of the same on the court rolls. (Sec. 59.)

11. Corporations.

All ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations were restrained by certain statutes, passed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth (stats. 1 Eliz. c. 19; 13 Eliz. c. 10; 14 Eliz. c. 11 and 14; 18 Eliz. c. 11; and 43 Eliz. c. 49), from every mode of alienation except that of leasing; and they were placed under very considerable restrictions even in the exercise of this power. Incumbents of livings were, however, enabled, under the statutes 17 Geo. 3, c. 53, and 21 Geo. 3, c. 66, to raise money, by way of mortgage, for repairing or building houses; and by statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 147, incumbents of benefices are enabled to exchange parsonage-houses and glebe lands, with the consent of patron and ordinary, for other houses and lands, and also to purchase lands to be annexed to such benefices as glebeland thereof, and by mortgage of their tithes, rents, and other profits, to raise money for such purchases. But previously to the late Municipal Reform Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 69), there were no restrictions imposed upon lay corporations (10 Rep. 30, b; Sid. 162; Colechester, Mayor of, v. Lowton, 1 Ves. & Bea. 226, 244), who might have alienated their lands, except for election purposes, as freely as any other class of persons; but by the 94th section of the Act above alluded to, they are now restrained from selling or mortgaging any real estates, or leasing them for a longer term than thirty-one years, and at reasonable rent, except in pursuance of some agreement entered into on or before the 5th of June, 1835; but when the council are desirous of selling, they should represent the case to the Lords of the Treasury, with the approbation of three of whom they may sell on such terms as such lords may approve of. But the council are nevertheless still empowered to grant building-leases for terms not exceeding seventy years, provided the lessee contract to erect buildings thereon of the yearly value of the land. (Sec. 90.) If, however, such corporate body be seised as such, and not as charitable trustees, of any lands to which an advowson or right of presentation to a benefice is appurtenant, or of an advowson in gross, &c. such advowson or presentation is directed to be sold under the direction of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; the produce vested in the public funds, and the yearly interest carried to the account of the borough fund. (Sec. 139.)

With respect to leases granted by ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations, it seems that, by the common law, they were, in many cases, only binding on the parties by whom they were made, and not upon their successors. (4 Com. Dig. tit. xxxii. ch. v. pl. 32.) And the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 28, made all such leases for term of years, or life, good and effectual against the lessors and their successors; yet, by subsequent enactments (1 Eliz. c. 19; 13 Eliz. c. 20; 14 Eliz. c. 11; 18 Eliz. c. 11; 1 Jac. c. 3), all ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporations were restrained from alienating the lands for more than the term of twenty-one years, or three lives; upon which leases the accustomed rent, or more, must be yearly reserved thereupon. (2 Blac. Com. 321.) But notwithstanding that the duration of the leases must not exceed three lives, or twenty-one years, they may nevertheless be granted for a more limited period. (1 Jus. 44, b; 4 Com. Dig. tit. xxxii. chap. v. pl. 40.) Houses in corporation or market towns may, however, under the statute

14 Eliz. c. 11, s. 17, in some instances be let for forty years; provided they be not the mansion-houses of the lessors, and have not more than ten acres of ground belonging to them; and provided the lessee be bound to keep them in repair; and they may also be alienated in fee-simple for lands of equal value in recompense. But when there is an old lease in being, no concurrent one shall be made unless the old one shall expire within three years. (2 Blac. Com. 321.) And no lease, by the equity of the statute, shall be made without impeachment of waste; and all bonds and covenants tending to frustrate the provisions of the 13th and 18th of Eliz. are void. (Co. Litt. 45; 2 Blac. Com. 321; 4 Com. Dig. tit. xxxii. ch. v. pl. 53.)

Observations on the construction of these restrictive statutes.—"Concerning these restrictive statutes," Sir W. Blackstone remarks (2 Bl. Com. 321), "there are two observations to be made. First, they do not by any construction enable any persons to make any such leases as they were by the common law disabled to make. Therefore a parson or vicar, though he is restrained from making longer leases than for twenty-one years, or three lives, even with the consent of the patron and ordinary, yet he is not able to make any lease at all, so as to bind his successor, without such consent. Secondly, that though leases contrary to these Acts are declared void, yet they are good against the lessor during his life, if he be a sole corporation; and they are also good against an aggregate corporation so long as the head of it lives, who is presumed to be the most concerned in interest; for the Act was intended for the benefit of the successor only, and no man shall take advantage of his own wrong." The learned commentator then proceeds to remark that there is yet another restriction with regard to college leases by statute 18 Eliz. c. 6, which directs that one-third of the whole rent then paid should for the future be reserved in wheat or malt, reserving a quarter of wheat for each 6s. 8d., or a quarter of malt for every 5s.; or that the lessee should pay for the same according to the price that wheat and malt should be sold for in the market next adjoining to the respective colleges on the market day before the rent becomes due."

Alterations effected by stat. 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 20.—The Act 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 20, has made some important enactments as to the renewal of ecclesiastical leases, by which it is provided that from the 1st of March 1836 no ecclesiastical person shall grant any new lease of any land or tithes, parcel of his ecclesiastical possessions, by way of renewal of any lease granted for more than two lives, until one of the persons for whose life such lease was made shall die, and then only for the surviving lives or life; and such new life or lives as with the life or lives of the survivor or survivors shall make up the number of lives, not exceeding three, for which such lease shall have been made; and where any lease shall have been granted for forty years, no ecclesiastical person shall grant any new lease by way of renewal until fourteen years of such lease shall have expired; or where for thirty years, until ten years shall have expired; or where for twenty-one years, until seven years shall have expired; and when any such lease shall have been granted for years, it shall not be renewed for life or lives. (Sections 1, 9.) It is also provided that, wherever any ecclesiastical person shall grant any renewed lease, it shall contain a recital of a lease for lives of the names of the cestuys que vie, stating which are dead, &c.; and if a lease for years, for what term of years the last preceding lease was granted; and every recital is to be deemed evidence of the truth of the matter recited; and a penalty is imposed on persons introducing recitals into such leases, knowing them to be false. But by a subsequent enactment, passed in the same session, it was enacted that leases granted under the provisions of the former Act are not void on account of their not containing such recitals as are in that Act mentioned. The same Act then proceeds to state, that where a practice has existed for ten years past to renew such leases for forty, thirty, or twenty-one years, at shorter periods than fourteen, ten, or seven years, the lease may be renewed conformably to such practice; provided that such practice shall be proved to the satisfaction of the bishop. (Sec. 4.) This Act is not to prevent ecclesiastical persons from exchanging any life or lives in their lease, with the approbation of the king (now queen), archbishop, or bishop, as the ease may be (sec. 5); neither does it prevent grants under Acts of Parliament (sec. 6); nor leases for the same term as the preceding leases (sec. 7); nor will it render illegal leases valid (sec. 8); neither does it extend to Ireland. (Sec. 9.)

JUDGMENT.
March 26.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is unnecessary to advert to the facts of the case, except in so far as they may tend to explain the grounds on which I form my judgment. When the relations of guardian and ward subsist between two persons, and a gift, or any thing in the nature of a gift, proceeds from the ward towards the guardian after the ward becomes of full age, Courts of equity are in the habit of reserving and treating such transactions between them with the greatest jealousy. Lord Eldon, in the case of Hatch v. Hatch (9 Ves. 292), observes, that from the great strictness with which Courts of equity treat transactions of this kind, it is almost impossible that they can be maintained, unless the party claiming the benefit of them satisfies the Court that in the particular transaction the guardian has not misapplied his natural influence. Lord Hardwick and several other learned judges have laid down the same doctrines in cases that have been before them. It is not necessary in such cases that the relation of guardian, as nominated by the parent or appointed by the Court of Chancery, should actually subsist towards the young persons, it is quite enough if they have lived with, or ~~under~~ under the control, care, or influence of, a near relative. In such a case, the principle on which the Court acts between guardian and ward is equally applicable. The point to be considered, then, in the present case, is the relative situation of the parties, and the course of conduct pursued towards each other. The young lady, it appears, was entitled to certain property when she came of age, amounting to £1,100*l.* in money, and the moiety of a freehold property, which produced 149*l.* a year. This property was vested in trustees. She had been left an orphan at nine years of age by the death of her mother. She was then sent to school by the trustees, and from that time until she attained the age of seventeen she invariably passed her holidays with her uncle and aunt, who resided in Thirsk, in the county of York. The uncle was a tradesman in that town, and this young person continued to reside with him from her attaining seventeen, until the period of her marriage, in the year 1841, the uncle receiving from the trustees a yearly allowance for her support and maintenance. In addition to this fact of residence, there is evidence that, from the time she went to her uncle's, up to the time of her marriage, she was under the control and influence of her uncle, and that she invariably submitted to and acquiesced in that control. The case, therefore, falls as strictly within the rule of the court as the actual relation of guardian and ward had subsisted between the parties. What then is the nature of the transaction itself? Two months after the young lady came of age, and obtained possession of her property, Daniel, her uncle, asked her to join him in a promissory note for 500*l.* in order to guarantee a balance then due by him to his bankers, and to secure further advances; so that, as a consequence, the note must be paid by her in the event of his insolvency. It is said by the counsel for the bankers, that this is a very indelicate act on the part of Daniel; but that it was not invalid. I think that it was not only very indelicate act, but a very improper act. Daniel, the uncle of the young lady, was the person to whom she would naturally look for advice in the event of her requiring it. If any other person had made to her a similar proposition, namely, to join in a promissory note for 500*l.* without any consideration, and she had appealed to her uncle for advice in the matter, he would have been his duty, as a cautious and prudent man, to have explained to her the nature and consequences of such a transaction, and to have dissuaded her from the act, because her property might ultimately become liable for the payment of the note. If such is the advice the uncle ought to have given her in the case of a third person, how can he now, after having induced her to do such an act for himself, expect that it can be maintained? Hawkswell, the manager of the bank, states that he explained to her the nature of the transaction, and that he thought she understood it. Although a person conversant with business and with bills of exchange might have understood the nature of the transaction as a continuing guarantee for the balance due to the bankers, I do not think that a young lady like the plaintiff was capable of understanding it to its full extent. That is the impression on my mind, and it is the duty of those who seek the benefit of the transaction to satisfy me that she did understand it. I am not satisfied. It was the duty of the parties to have explained the precise nature of the transaction, and that she might, at some time, be liable to pay the 500*l.*; and unless that was done, the transaction cannot be sustained. It has been stated, in the course of the argument, that the young lady refused to go to the bank to sign the note in question, and that Hawkswell, therefore, obtained the signature at Daniel's house, because she did not like it to be supposed that she was becoming security for her uncle. I think it much more probable that the true reason of her refusing to go to the bank was, that Daniel did not wish it, lest it should be discovered that she had become security for him.

It has been urged that the note is a continuing guarantee. From the view I take of the case, that point is not one of importance; but I do not think that it is a continuing guarantee for all advances to be made by the bank to Daniel.

It is said that there has been long-continued acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff. It ought to be recollected, however, that there has been no application made during several years for payment, and, independently of that, the influence and control of the uncle continued throughout the whole period, from the time of the signature of the note till the plaintiff's marriage in 1841, being more than four years. There is nothing, therefore, in the assertion that the plaintiff has acquiesced in a transaction upon which it does not appear that she had received any further information. The case is precisely the same as that of Hatch v. Hatch, to which I have already referred. It has been said that the defendants, the bankers, knew nothing of the position of the parties, or the circumstances under which the acceptances had been procured. I admit that the managers of the banking company at York are free from blame, but they are bound by the acts of the agent at Thirsk, who was the intimate friend of Daniel, and who it is clearly proved knew the circumstances of Daniel, and who was also aware of the position of his niece. No one can venture to say that if the transaction had been one merely between Daniel and Hawkswell, the latter would not have been bound by it, and at the same time have bound his employers. If that is so, the acts of Hawkswell with respect to the plaintiff, in the same manner, bind the banker, because he acted as their agent. I entertained little doubt on the question when the case was opened to me, and the more I look at the facts, the more I become confirmed in opinion that the decision of the Master of the Rolls is a correct one, and that the plaintiff must have the relief she asks.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 14 and 15.

JONES V. MORGAN.

Partnership—Contribution—Practice—Parties—Defendant.

A bill was filed for contribution by one of a number of partners, against some others only of the partnership, stating that the partnership had been wound up and the debts paid, and the only reason for its present existence was for the purpose of contribution. The bill, by its statement, shewed that two of the defendants, and several of the absent parties, had paid up much more than the price of their shares, by an allegation that all the absent parties had either died insolvent, and that the plaintiff was unable to procure administration to them, or were now wholly insolvent, and out of the jurisdiction; but the bill did not pray process against them when, &c. The bill stated that the plaintiff, as partner, had been compelled to pay a call upon him more in proportion than that paid by the defendants, and that the defendants were the only persons who were at all capable of contributing towards payment to the plaintiff of such excess. The bill then prayed for a contribution, but not any partnership account. To this the defendants demurred for want of equity and want of parties, but the demurrer was overruled.

It appeared from the bill that Abram Combe, late of Edinburgh in Scotland, since deceased, having the intention of forming a company, to be called "The Orbiston Company," contracted from General John Hamilton an estate consisting of 280 acres of land, called "The Orbiston Estate," at the price of 19,995*l.*

for the said intended company. That he constituted himself agent and trustee for the said intended company, and as such contracted to borrow 12,000*l.* part of such purchase-money, from the Scottish Union Insurance Company; 3,000*l.* from Archibald Ainslie, and to secure 4,995*l.* the remainder of the said purchase, by a bond to be executed by him as such trustee, on behalf of, and obligatory upon, the said intended company. That in further pursuance of his design he drew up certain articles of agreement, intitled "Articles of agreement of the Orbiston Company, March 18th, 1825." The articles of agreement stated the objects of the society, which were for the education of children upon the principles of Mr. Robert Owen. The second article was, "That the stock of the company shall not exceed 50,000*l.* divided into two hundred shares of 250*l.* each." Seventh, "That the trustee chosen by the company shall have power to borrow money upon security of the company's property to the extent of 100*l.* on each share, being the exact cost of the land, and to expend the sum subscribed in the way most congenial with the wishes of the subscribers, in the erection of dwelling-houses, workshops, manufactories, and in furnishing utensils and machinery, or in payment of any just claim due by the company." Eighth, "That the stock shall be advanced by instalments of 10*l.* per share quarterly, commencing the first on the 15th August, 1825; and the second on the 15th November, and so on, quarterly, until 100*l.* on each share shall be paid up." Twelfth, "That the trustees shall find security, to the satisfaction of the company, for the proper discharge of his duties; and if he shall expend or incur debts on the company's account beyond the sums actually subscribed, it shall be considered that he has exceeded his powers, and that he and his securities are responsible for the same; or if a meeting of the subscribers shall authorize such excess of expenditure, then the said subscribers, or those who concur, shall be liable for the same, it being a fundamental principle of the company to avoid every species of speculation which could possibly make the individual members liable for more than the sum which they actually subscribe." The will also stated the deed of conveyance from General Hamilton to Abram Combe, upon trust for the said company, dated the 13th May, 1825; and that the said Abram Combe, in order to raise the said sum of 12,000*l.* and 3,000*l.* granted as such trustee a heritable bond to the said insurance company for 12,000*l.*; a similar bond to the said Archibald Ainslie for 3,000*l.*; and for the remainder of the purchase money a like heritable bond to General Hamilton for 4,995*l.*; all of which were dated 11th May, 1825; that between the 15th March, 1825, and the 17th Oct. 1825, the following persons became partners and shareholders, together with the plaintiff, in the said company, for the number of shares respectively subscribed, viz. Archibald James Hamilton, since deceased, 50 shares; Hannah Mary Rathbone, since deceased, 10 shares; John Minter Morgan, a defendant, 10 shares; Edward Cowper, a defendant, 1 share; the said Abram Combe, since deceased, 10 shares; John Grant, out of the jurisdiction, 2 shares; Daniel Reid, of Edinburgh, a bankrupt, whose estate had been fully administered, 1 share; George Small, of Edinburgh, aforesaid, a bankrupt, whose estate had long since been fully administered, 2 shares; William Combe, out of the jurisdiction, 2 shares; Joseph Applegarth, out of the jurisdiction, 2 shares; John Gray, of Edinburgh, a bankrupt, whose estate had been fully administered, 4 shares; William Falla, deceased, 1 share; Robert O'Brien, who died in Canada, utterly insolvent; and Alexander Majoribanks, a bankrupt, whose estate had been fully administered now residing out of the jurisdiction 1 share; and plaintiff 2 shares. That at a general meeting of the said Orbiston Company on the 17th of October, 1825, it was declared that the amount of the said shares should be reduced from 250*l.* to 200*l.* each. The bill then stated in what manner the several parties became partners in the company. With respect to Hannah Mary Rathbone, it stated that William Rathbone her son, being duly constituted her agent in all matters connected with the said Orbiston Company, wrote and sent a letter, dated 3rd July, 1825, to the said Abram Combe, wherein he said, "My mother desires me now to say, that as far as she understands the nature of the proposals, she prefers taking stock to the extent of 1,000*l.* to lending that amount, provided it will equally serve to promote the views of the company; and I shall also venture to add, and provided she is secure from any other claim upon her than the amount which she is desirous to invest in this plan, I beg to enclose on her account 100*l.* for the first call."

In another letter from the said William Rathbone to Abram Combe, dated November 10, 1825, he said, "My mother is so much in earnest respecting the great experiment, that she is desirous to be a stockholder in the concern; she is aware that not only the amount of her stock, but that she herself is responsible; but feels confidence, that even should the sanguine expectations of success be frustrated, yet that any responsibility beyond the amount invested is merely nominal."

The undertaking was commenced, but in the year

1828 it utterly failed. All the property and effects of the company were sold, and all the debts thereof paid, with the exception of the sum of 3,876*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* part of which remained due upon the said bond for 4,995*l.* given to the said General John Hamilton, which he had assigned, and which had ultimately become vested in Messrs. Smith, Payne and Co. bankers; and the residue remained due upon the said bond for 3,000*l.* given to the said Archibald Ainslie.

It appeared from the bill that Arch. Jas. Hamilton, whose subscription for fifty shares amounted to 5,000*l.* had paid for the purposes of the company 15,455*l.*; that Abram Combe, whose subscription for twenty shares amounted to 2,000*l.* had paid for the purposes of the company 2,536*l.*; that Hannah M. Rathbone, whose subscription for ten shares amounted to 1,000*l.* had paid for the purposes of the company 2,800*l.*; that John M. Morgan, whose subscription for ten shares amounted to 1,000*l.* had paid for the purposes of the company 2,600*l.*; that William Falla, whose subscription for one share amounted to 100*l.* had only paid the sum of 70*l.*; that Edward Cowper, whose subscription for one share amounted to 100*l.* had only paid the sum of 20*l.*; and that the plaintiff, Henry Jones, whose subscription for two shares amounted to 200*l.* had previously to the 17th August, 1832, only paid the sum of 128*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* The bill then stated two several actions commenced in the Scotch courts against the partners in the said Orbiston Company. One by Messrs. Smith, Payne, & Co. for the sum of 4,000*l.* the balance due upon the said bond for 4,995*l.*; the other by Archibald Ainslie, for the sum of 1,073*l.*; the balance then due upon the said bond for 3,000*l.* That at the time when such actions were brought the estate of the said Arch. Jas. Hamilton, which was then vested in one Thos. Mansfield, for the benefit of his creditors, was indebted to plaintiff in consequence of a loan from plaintiff in the sum of 4,156*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.* That at the time of such actions brought the plaintiff, being a foreigner, and forth of Scotland, the pursuers raised letters of arrestment jurisdictionis fundenda causa against him, and thereupon caused fence and arrest of all sums of money due to him by the said Thomas Mansfield as such trustee. The bill then stated that there being no defence to the actions verdicts were taken by consent in Smith's action for 4,000*l.* and 475*l.* costs, and in Ainslie's action for 1,073*l.*; that by an arrangement come to between the said Messrs. Smith and Co. plaintiff, and the said Thomas Mansfield, Messrs. Smith and Co. in consideration of 3,000*l.* paid by Mansfield, assigned their said debt to him for the plaintiff, and the said Arch. Ainslie, in consideration of 750*l.* paid by Mansfield, assigned his said debt to Mansfield for plaintiff. The bill stated that the said debts which were due upon the said bonds to Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Co. and the said Arch. Ainslie were then vested in the said Thomas Mansfield, in trust for the plaintiff. That the plaintiff had, in manner aforesaid, paid to and on account of the stock and debts of the said Orbiston Company, sums of money amounting together to 3,876*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* and the further sum of 575*l.* on account of the costs of the said proceedings against him by the said Messrs. Smith and Co. and Arch. Ainslie, amounting together to 4,451*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* That at the time when the plaintiff made such payments respectively, the plaintiff and all the other partners of the said Orbiston Company were liable in Scotland to pay the debts of the said company, towards which such payments were applied, and that the plaintiff had not, nor would any of the other partners have had any defence against the claims of the said creditors. That all the partners in the said Orbiston Company ought to have paid and satisfied all the debts and liabilities of the said company, rateably, according to the number of shares which they respectively held in the said company; and that each of the said partners in the said company as are capable of paying, and of being compelled to pay the debts of the said company, or so much thereof as have not been paid by others, ought to have paid such debts or so much thereof as last aforesaid, rateably according to the shares which they respectively held in the said company. That the following persons are the only persons who ever were partners in the said company, that is to say, the said Archibald Jas. Hamilton, Abram Combe, Hannah M. Rathbone, J. M. Morgan, plaintiff; the said John Grant, William Combe, George Small, Daniel Reid, Robert Foster, William Fulk, Thomas Jessop, Robert O'Brien, Wm. Brown, G. Brown, James King, John Gray, Alexander Majoribanks the younger, Joseph Applegarth, and Edward Cooper. That the said Archibald James Hamilton, Abram Combe, and Robert O'Brien are respectively dead; and that neither of them ever had any property within the jurisdiction of the Court, and there is not any just representative of either of them within the jurisdiction of the Court; that they respectively died insolvent, without leaving any property whatever, and plaintiff, cannot, by any means, procure the appointment of a personal representative of either of them in England, or recover any contribution from the estate of either of them either in this country or elsewhere, by reason of there being no property whatever of either of them.

That the said John Grant, William Combe, George Small, Daniel Reid, Robert Foster, Thomas Jessop, William Brown, George Brown, James King, John Gray, Alexander Majoribanks the younger, and Joseph Applegarth, all respectively reside out of the jurisdiction of the honourable Court, and are all in utterly insolvent circumstances, and have no property whatever, and plaintiff cannot, by any means, recover any contribution against them; or their, or either of their, assignees or curators, by reason of there being no property or estates whatever of either of them. That he knows not, and is unable to discover, who are or is the assignees or assignee, or curators or curator, of the estate of the said Daniel Reid, George Small, John Gray and Alexander Majoribanks, or any or either of them. That the said Hannah Mary Rathbone died on the 10th Aug. 1839, having made her last will and testament, and thereof appointed William Rathbone and Richard Rathbone, defendants hereto, the sole executors thereof, who proved the said will in the proper ecclesiastical court on the 26th Sept. 1839, and her said executors have received assets more than sufficient to pay all her funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and liabilities, including what is due to plaintiff in respect of the matters aforesaid. That the said John Hamilton is dead, but he never resided nor had any property whatever in England, and there is no personal representative of him, and plaintiff is unable to procure the appointment of a personal representative of the said John Hamilton in England, and he has left no property whatever. That the said William Falls died on the 4th Aug. 1839, having made his will, whereof he appointed his wife, Elizabeth Falls, and Russell Blackbird, and W. R. Hunter, defendants hereto, executors; all of whom, except his said wife, duly proved the same, and have possessed themselves of the personal estate of their testator more than sufficient for satisfaction of all his debts and liabilities, including what is due to plaintiff in respect of the matters aforesaid. That the said John M. Morgan is a person of considerable wealth. That the said Hannah M. Rathbone was a partner for profit and loss to the extent of ten shares in the said company; and the said John M. Morgan was a partner for profit and loss to the extent of ten shares in the said company; and the said Edward Cowper and William Falls were respectively partners for profit and loss to the extent of two shares, and no more, in the said company; that the said William Rathbone and Richard Rathbone, and Theodore Minoribanks, in respect to the estate of the said H. M. Rathbone, and the said R. Blackbird and W. R. Hunter in respect of the estate of the said W. Falls, and the said Edward Cowper and the said John M. Morgan are the only persons from whom it is possible for plaintiff to recover any contribution towards the payments made by him on account of the said company. That the aggregate of the payments which have been made by the said H. M. Rathbone, John M. Morgan, Edward Cowper, and Wm. Falls, and the plaintiff, on account of the said company, is 9,643. 9s. 9d.; and the same ought to have been borne between them in the proportions following:—five twelfth parts thereof, amounting to 4,143. 2s. 4½d. by the estate of the said Hannah M. Rathbone; other five twelfth parts thereof, amounting to 4,143. 2s. 4½d. by the said John M. Morgan; one twenty-fourth part thereof, amounting to 414. 6s. 2½d. by the estate of the said Wm. Falls; one twenty-fourth part thereof, amounting to 414. 6s. 2½d. by the said Edward Cowper; and the remaining one twelfth part, amounting to 828. 12s. 5½d. by plaintiff; whereas, in fact, the said H. M. Rathbone has paid and borne only 2,600l. of such debts, being 1,343. 2s. 4½d. less than her just proportion thereof with reference to plaintiff; and the said J. M. Morgan has paid and borne only 2,600l. of such debts, being 1,343. 2s. 4½d. less than his just proportion thereof with reference to plaintiff; and the said Wm. Falls has paid and borne only 70l. being 344l. 6s. 2½d. less than his just proportion; and the said Edward Cowper has paid and borne 90l. only, being 394l. 6s. 2½d. less than his just proportion; and plaintiff has paid and borne 4,453. 9s. 9d. of such debts, being 3,624l. 17s. 3½d. more than his just proportion thereof with reference to the said J. M. Morgan and E. Cowper, and the estates of the said Hannah M. Rathbone and William Falls; and that the said J. M. Morgan, Edward Cowper, and the representatives of the said H. M. Rathbone and Wm. Falls ought respectively to pay and contribute to plaintiff, rateably with plaintiff, towards the excess of payments by plaintiff on account of the debts of the said company beyond his proportionate share thereof with reference to them. The bill then charged the same accordingly, and that an account ought to be taken of the amounts which plaintiff and the said defendants ought respectively, as between themselves, to have borne and paid on account of the liabilities of the said company, having regard to the inability of the said plaintiff to obtain any contribution whatever from any of the other partners in the said company, and that they ought to contribute and pay to plaintiff the just proportion of the excess of plaintiff's payments in proportion to the number of shares in the said company held by the said H. M. Rathbone,

Wm. Falls, Edward Cowper, and J. M. Morgan, to plaintiff respectively. The bill then charged that all the real and personal estate whatever of the said Orbiston Company had been sold and disposed of and conveyed and made over to the purchasers thereof, and every debt due to the said company, except such as were irrecoverable, had been collected, and all the proceeds of such sales and disposition of money received in respect of such debts, had been exhausted in paying the debts and liabilities of the said company, and that there remained no property whatsoever of the said company. That the said company was dissolved several years ago, and all the accounts of the property of the said company. And its affairs had been adjusted and settled between the partners, except the liabilities of such partners to contribution. And the said company no longer exists, except for the purposes of contribution among such of the members thereof as are capable of making contribution. The bill then prayed that the said Wm. Rathbone, Rich. Rathbone, and T. W. Rathbone, in respect to the estate of the said H. M. Rathbone, and the said Russell Blackbird and W. R. Hunter, in respect of the estate of the said Wm. Falls, and the said Edw. Cowper, and John M. Morgan and John Grant, might be decreed respectively, to contribute and pay to plaintiff towards the excess of his said payments, as compared with theirs, a rateable proportion of such excess, having regard to the number of shares of the said Hannah M. Rathbone, J. M. Morgan, Edw. Cowper, Wm. Falls, John Grant, and plaintiff in the said Orbiston Company; and that an account might be taken of the amounts which plaintiff and the said defendants ought respectively, as between themselves, to have borne and paid on account of the liabilities of the said company, having regard to the insolvency of the other members of the said company, and the inability of plaintiff to obtain any contribution whatever from any of the other partners therein; and that the said defendants might be decreed to contribute and pay to plaintiff such just proportion of the excess of plaintiff's payments, in proportion to the number of shares in the said company held by the said H. M. Rathbone, J. M. Morgan, Wm. Falls, Edw. Cowper, and John Grant, and plaintiff. To this bill the defendants Edw. Cowper, J. M. Morgan, and the executors of Hannah M. Rathbone, put in separate demurrers for want of equity and want of parties.

Roll and Giffard, in support of the demurrer by the representatives of Mrs. Rathbone.—Our grounds of objection to the bill are threefold. In the first place, it is clear, upon the face of the bill, that Mrs. Rathbone stipulated with the company, that though she was aware, as a shareholder, of her liability to the public to an unlimited extent, yet as among the shareholders themselves she was not to be so, but only to the amount of 1,000l. Secondly, the plaintiff's statement of a debt which he alleges was owing to the firm of Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Co.; and having stated that the company were so indebted, he says that he paid that debt, and that it was assigned over to a trustee for him, in whom it is now vested; and also that previous to his paying that debt, Messrs. Smith and Co. had released Mrs. Rathbone from the payment of that debt. Thirdly, the greatest injustice might be the consequence, unless the representatives of each shareholder who, upon taking the accounts, might be entitled to receive any thing, were before the Court. We admit it as a principle of law, that although where a defendant is a mere accounting party, you may, by alleging bankruptcy or insolvency (as in this bill), dispense with the necessity of having him before the Court; yet, where he is not simply an accounting party, but may, upon the accounts being taken, have something to receive, no such allegations can obviate the necessity of having him here. Moreover, the object of taking the accounts being to ascertain what is due from and to each individual, the absent party has a right to come into this court to see what, if any thing, is due to him. Hills v. Nash (10 Jur. 148) is an authority in our favour.

James, Parker, and Bunt, for J. M. Morgan's demurrer, contended, that as there might be partnership debts outstanding, the only proper decree would be to wind up the partnership accounts, which could not be done in the absence of the parties. That it was for the plaintiff to shew Majoribanks ought not to be made a party, as it was perfectly consistent with the record that he has something to receive. As to Arch. James Hamilton, he having paid too much, it was not possible for him to have died without property, and therefore limited administration ought to have been taken out to him. All that the bill states ought not to be taken as true; for supposing a party stated in a bill that A died, leaving a son, but that there was no heir-at-law, could that be taken as true? In the same manner it cannot be taken as true that administration cannot be obtained, for the Court knows the contrary. Another objection to the will is, that process is not prayed against the parties out of the jurisdiction of the Court when they shall come within the jurisdiction.

Cases cited: Munoz v. De Tastet (1 Bea. 109); Taylor v. Fisher (4 L. J., N. S. Ch. 95). Stewart and Wilcock, contra.—To bring yourself within the above cases, you are bound to shew that the persons out of the jurisdiction are necessary parties [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—You had better confine your observations to the third point; I do not think that any thing turns upon the others.] This is a simple bill for contribution; the frame of the bill is only similar to an action against a shareholder for contribution. The case of Wright v. Hunter (5 Ves. 792) is an authority that this Court will, upon the doctrine of contribution, allow a bill to be filed for whatever an action would lie. In the bill for that purpose, it would only be necessary to allege an inequality of payments, stating the amount paid by the several parties, and how it happened that the plaintiff paid more than the individual in question; and if the bill were simply for contribution, and not for an account, it would be necessary only to make the solvent persons parties to the suit.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—If the allegations set forth in the bill are such as shew that it is a case simply for contribution, I have nothing upon a demurrer to do with the possibility of there being something receivable by other persons not now before the Court; for, as the bill stands, I must, for the purposes of the demurrer, take it as a bill only for contribution, and not for an account. My opinion is, that it is nothing beyond a bill for contribution merely. Demurrer overruled.

THOMAS V. GWYNNE.

Practice—Infant—Person to convey an estate—Stat. 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, s. 8.

Piggott applied to the Court in this case, already so often before it, to direct some person to convey the estate, part of the subject-matter of the suit, under the 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, s. 8. The suit was a creditors' suit; and by a decree therein, the estate was ordered to be conveyed by John Thomas, infant tenant in tail thereof, according to a deed approved of by the Master, but he had been kept out of sight, so that the process of the Court could not be duly served. This application was therefore rendered necessary, The MASTER of the ROLLS granted the order.

DONOVAN v. NEEDHAM.

Bequest payable at a future time—Interest—Maintenance—Portion to children.

No interest is payable on a legacy given to a person payable at a future time.

An exception to the rule is made in the case of a legacy by a parent to a child, in which case interest is given for maintenance of the child, on the principle that the parent did not mean to leave the child without the means of subsistence.

But if the parent has provided for the maintenance of the child out of another fund, the interest is not given on the legacy.

By his will, of the 5th of March, 1836, James Donovan gave the estate of Buckham Hill, in Sussex, to his son George, in tail male, with remainders in tail as therein mentioned; and he also gave him 20,000l. 3l. per cent. Consols, to be paid on his attaining twenty-one; and if he died before he attained twenty-one, the 20,000l. Consols was to go to the next in remainder who should take an estate tail. The testator then gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to his trustees in trust, after payment of 2,000l. to his wife, and the 20,000l. Consols to George, for his younger children equally, to be paid to them, if sons, at twenty-one; or if daughters, at twenty-one or marriage, and to be vested on their attaining twenty-one; or if daughters, on attaining twenty-one or marriage, with benefit of survivorship. If there should be no younger children entitled to take them, the whole was to go to George. The testator then directed his trustees, "during the minorities of his said children, to pay such sums as they should think proper for education, maintenance, &c. of his said children, and for placing them in such professions or business as might be advisable." By a codicil, he gave George a further legacy of 15,000l. on the same terms as the 20,000l.

The testator, at his death, left George and three younger children, all infants, him surviving, and the question was, whether George was or not entitled to interest on his legacies for his maintenance. At the hearing of the cause on further directions, the Court was of opinion that George was entitled to his legacies at twenty-one, but to no interest in the mean time. George having attained 21, presented a petition to have his legacies paid to him; and he also presented a petition of rehearing so far as the order made on further directions declared he was not entitled to interest on the legacies, and made them part of the common fund out of which the maintenance of all the children was to arise.

Kindersley and H. Clarke contended that George was entitled to interest on his legacies at 4l. per cent. from the death of the testator.

Turner and Randell, for the younger children, contended that the provision for maintenance was general for all the children out of the testator's residuary estate, and that George's legacies formed part thereof till he attained twenty-one; and they cited Crickett v. Dalby (3 Ves. 10), Wynch v. Wynch (1 Cox, 433), Hearle v. Greenbank (3 Atk. 768, 716).

Roupell and Heathfield, for the trustees.

March 2nd.—The MASTER of the ROLLS, after stating the facts, said that, at the hearing of the cause on further directions, he was of opinion that the defendant, George Donovan, was entitled to have his legacies paid him on his attaining twenty-one; but was not entitled to the dividends or interest thereof in the meantime, but only to maintenance out of the estate like the other children. The case now came before the Court on a petition of rehearing, and it had been contended that George ought to be held to be entitled to interest from the death of the testator, or at least from one year after that event. The rule laid down by Lord Hardwicke, in Hearle v. Greenbank, was, that no interest was to be allowed on a legacy payable at a future day. The general rule was that; but a legacy payable at a future time given by a father to a child was an exception, for interest in such a case was allowed, but that was for maintenance, on the presumption that the father did not mean to leave the child unprovided for till the legacy was paid. In Wynch v. Wynch, Lord Kenyon had stated the rule to be, that where a legacy was given by a father to a child, whether vested or not, it carried interest, if no maintenance was provided; but if there was, then the rule was the same as in the case of a stranger. After the best attention he could give the case, he could not distinguish it from the former cases; and there was nothing to shew that the legacies given to George were to be separated from the rest of the personal estate till the time of payment. The testator spoke of all his children in the maintenance clause, and did not designate any fund out of which each might be maintained, nor did there appear any intimation that George was to be supported out of his own legacies. He must dismiss the petition with costs.

GIBSON v. NICHOL.

Bill to redeem mortgage—Cost of parties—Insolvent estate—Provisional assignee of Insolvent Court—Trustees for creditors of a paise incumbrancer—Disclaiming interest.

The provisional assignee of the Insolvent Court who has been made a party to a redemption suit, but has disclaimed all interest in the mortgaged estate, which is incumbered beyond its value, is not entitled to his costs; nor are the assignees in trust for the creditors of a paise incumbrancer entitled to their costs, though they disclaim all interest in the property.

The bill in this case was filed by the plaintiffs, mortgagees of the freight of the ship Triton, the property of John Nichol, the younger, one of the defendants, to redeem Aaron Smith, who was both a prior and a subsequent mortgagee. When the cause came on to be heard, a question was raised at the bar as to the priorities of the several incumbrances; but it being alleged that the pleadings were not framed so as to bring that point in issue between the parties, the Court considered the objection valid, and declared the plaintiffs entitled only to a decree to redeem, and for the common mortgagee's account. This the plaintiffs declined taking; and the case therefore was reduced to a question of costs on the dismissal of the bill. There were several incumbrancers subsequent to the plaintiffs, of whom John Nichol, the elder, and Mr. Dobson were two. The latter had assigned all his property to Benjamin Dixon and John Fowler, in trust for the benefit of his creditors. John Nichol, the younger, having become insolvent, his interest in the mortgaged property became vested in Mr. Sturgis, the provisional assignee of the Insolvent Court, who, together with Messrs. Dixon and Fowler, had been made parties to the suit, but had disclaimed all interest, the incumbrances on the property far exceeding the value, and they now asked to have their costs.

Follett, for Mr. Sturgis, the assignee of John Nichol, the younger, said that this case differed from the other cases on the subject; for in the latter, the assignee had claimed an interest, whereas in this case he disclaimed all interest. He cited Silcock v. Roydon (2 Y. & C. C.C. 376); and Apted v. Tickner, and Smart v. Sturgis, before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce; and Gabriel v. Sturgis, before Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

Webster, for Messrs. Dixon and Fowler, the assignees of Dodson, contended that the rule was, that a defendant disclaiming was entitled to his costs, if continued to the hearing. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question is, whether a defendant disclaiming may not have some duty to perform, or some act to do, to work out the rights of the parties?] These trustees had power to abandon the trust, and they did abandon it; and they ought either to be dismissed with their costs, or the cause should be set down on the disclaimer. He cited Applby v. Duke (1 Hare, 303); Cash v. Belcher (1 Hare, 310); Tipping v. Pover (1 Hare, 405); Williams v. Longfellow (3 Atk. 582, 591); Clarke v. Wilmot (1 Phill. 276.)

Turner, Rousfield, Rolt, Stevens and Batten, for other parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said he would communicate with Vice-Chancellor Wigram before he decided.

March 3.—The MASTER of the ROLLS said he would allow his costs to Aaron Smith, the first mortgagee, but to no one else.

RE BLAKE AND YOUNG.

Practice—General orders—Indorsement of memorandum—Construction.

The Twelfth General Order of the 26th of August, 1841, amended by the General Orders of the 11th of April, 1842, which requires the time to be stated for doing any act ordered or decreed, does not apply to any orders or decrees but those made in a suit, notwithstanding the words "every order or decree" therein used.

In pursuance of an order to tax a solicitor's bill, it was taxed at a certain sum, and a balance of 195l. 3s. 8d. was found to be due from the solicitors. A four-day order was then obtained for payment of this balance by the solicitor, or in default thereof, that he should be committed to the Queen's prison. The Twelfth General Order of the 26th of August, 1841, amended by the General Orders of the 11th of April, 1842, requires an indorsement on the order or decree served upon the party of a memorandum, apprising him of the consequences of disobedience to the order; but in this case no such memorandum had been indorsed.

Elderton now moved for a tipstaff, and at the same time took occasion to mention to the Court the omission of the indorsement on the four-day order. The words "every order, &c." at the beginning of the general order, were very stringent, and seemed to comprehend every case. There was no use in indorsing such a memorandum to a solicitor, but it was right to call the attention of the Court to it. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—These general orders apply to a cause; it is any party to a cause that is intended; here it is not in a cause at all.] No, it is only on taxation of a solicitor's bill. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—How would the indorsement give information of what you are going to do? It would rather intimate something different. What you want is a tipstaff, and the order speaks of an attachment. I can do nothing, and any thing I might order would not protect you. You must not let me be surety to your client; you must take the risk.] The four-day order has been duly served, and the only thing is the indorsement.

The MASTER of the ROLLS granted an order to bring the party to the bar of the Court for contempt in not paying the balance due, and expressed his opinion that the General Order did not apply to a case like the present.

YORK v. WHITE.

Practice—Dismissing bill, or staying proceedings after decree.

A consent motion in a creditors' suit to dismiss the bill, or stay proceedings thereon after a decree has been made, will not be granted, because the decree has the same operation in favour of creditors as a judgment.

Moore, in this case, moved to dismiss the bill, with consent of the parties to this suit, under these circumstances:—The suit was a simple contract creditors' suit, instituted by the plaintiff, in 1835, against the executrix and heir-at-law of the testator, and the usual decree was made therein. The plaintiff proved his debt, but no other creditors came in, though they had been advertised for in the usual way, but only once, and there were no assets available for the purposes of the decree, the specialty creditors having completely exhausted them. There was, therefore, no further prosecution of the suit, either by the plaintiff, or his executrix after his death; and it was now revived merely to have it disposed of in some way or other, and the costs of the heir-at-law were undertaken to be paid. The question then was, whether to move to dismiss the bill with the consent of all parties, or to stay proceedings; and it was submitted the latter was preferable. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—What good will that do you?] The order to stay proceedings may be entered on the judgment roll as a satisfaction to purchasers of the real estate.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—A decree has been made, and advertisements issued in pursuance thereof, and only one debt, the plaintiff's, has been proved. The advertisements being only partial, what can I do? Nothing. The suit has been revived for the express purpose of having something done; and I think the better course would be to bring it to a hearing in the usual way. I can make no order on this motion.

MALDEN v. Fyson.

Practice—Specific performance—Title—Dismissal of bill—Costs.

When the purchaser files his bill for a specific performance, and a good title is not shewn, the practice is to dismiss the bill, without costs.

The defendant in this case, not having shewn a good title, was asked by the plaintiff to rescind the contract, and pay expenses, which he refused to do. The plaintiff then filed his bill for specific performance; and, it being plain that no good title could be made, he then offered to come to terms, and dismiss with costs, but the defendant would not consent, and a reference to the Master was therefore necessary. The Master found that no good title was shewn, nor indeed any title, as there was no attempt to produce any documents. The cause now came on upon further directions, and the only thing to be done was to dismiss.

Blaxam, accordingly, in the absence of Turner, on behalf of the plaintiff, asked the Court to dismiss with costs. There was a deposit which ought to be returned, and with interest, as in Lord Anson v. Hodges (5 Sim. 227), though that was a case in which the vendor was plaintiff. The plaintiff would also gladly take a reference to the Master to ascertain the measure of his damages; but that, of course, could only be granted with consent.

Kindersley, for the defendant, said the practice of the Court in such cases was to dismiss the bill, without costs, and leave the plaintiff to bring his action; and the plaintiff is then in the same situation as if there had been no bill. It was so much a matter of course for the Court to do so, that he had not thought it necessary to take any note of the cases. In Thomas v. Dering (1 Keen, 729, 11 Jur. 211, 427), all that was done was to dismiss the bill, but without costs.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You come here because the defendant has not done his duty; and the only purpose of your coming can't be accomplished through the fault of the defendant. I must dismiss simply, without costs. The old cases are of no value; but if you have any ground for relief on the new cases, I will let you mention it again.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Tuesday, April 28.

WILLIAMS v. BLAND.

Vendor and purchaser—Probate of will.

Where a contract had been made for the sale of personal property, and an objection was raised to the title in consequence of a will, by which the property was given, being proved in a Diocesan Court, instead of the Prerogative Court, a bill for specific performance filed by the purchaser was dismissed, but without costs and without prejudice to an action, the plaintiff declining to accept the title, and the defendant declining to prove the will as required.

This was a suit instituted by a purchaser, for the purpose of compelling the specific performance of an agreement for the sale to him of two curtesies for 500l. each upon the lands and tolls in respect of the drainage and navigation under an Act passed in the 7th year of the reign of George the Third, entitled, "An Act for the more effectual draining of the lands lying in the level of Ancholme, in the county of Lincoln, and making the river Ancholme navigable from the river Humber, at or near a place called Ferryby Sluice, in the county of Lincoln, to the town of Glemford Briggs, and for continuing the said navigation up or near to the said river, from thence to Bishopcleeve, in the said county of Lincoln." The contract for the sale of the two curtesies was made in October, 1844, through the agent of the defendant. On the 11th of November, 1844, an abstract of the title was delivered to the plaintiff, and by that abstract it appeared that the original mortgages were made to Sir John Webb on the 6th of April, 1793, and that by indentures dated the 15th of March, 1794, the securities were assigned by Sir John Webb to Thomas Goulton, his executors, administrators, and assigns. T. Goulton, by his will, dated the 2nd of December, 1811, gave the residue of his property (including therein the two sums of 500l. each), one third part thereof unto his cousin, Richard Goulton, one other third part thereof unto his cousin, James Goulton, and one other third part thereof unto William Hesledon and George Nelson, upon the trusts therein mentioned, and appointed the said Rich. Goulton and Jas. Goulton executors of his will. Upon the death of Thos. Goulton, the said Rich. Goulton and James Goulton, in the month of Aug. 1812, duly proved the said will in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Richard Goulton survived his co-executor James Goulton, and by his will, dated the 7th day of July, 1831, gave all the residue and remainder of his personal estate and effects unto his two sons, Thomas Goulton and William Goulton, in equal shares, and appointed them joint executors of his will; and they, on the 3rd of Jan. 1832, proved the same will in the Consistory Court of the Bishop of Lincoln. By an indenture dated the 1st of February, 1840, the said Thomas Goulton and William Goulton assigned the said taxes and tolls (subject to such equity of redemption as the same were then subject to) to the defendant, Luke Bland, his executors and assigns. The principal objection raised to the title by the plaintiff was upon the representation to Richard Goulton, and his executors were required to prove his will in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Beaman and Himsley, for the plaintiff, cited Fowler v. Richards (5 Russ. 39); Jernegan v. Baxter (5 Sim. 568); and Twyford v. Trail (7 Sim. 92).

Russell and Taylor, for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he considered the question raised too doubtful to force the title upon the purchaser.

The following decree was then made:—The plaintiff admitting that the only objection to the title is that the will of Thomas Goulton has not been proved in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and that administration de bonis non has not been granted by the Prerogative Court, and the plaintiff declining to accept the title, and the defendant declining to prove the will, dismiss the bill, but without costs and without prejudice to an action.

Wednesday, April 29.

ASHTON v. DALTON.

Equitable mortgage—Construction of memorandum accompanying deposit of title-deeds.

Prima facie a deposit of title-deeds creates an equitable mortgage upon the whole property comprised in them, and it lies upon those who contend the contrary to prove it.

This suit was instituted for the purpose of establishing an equitable mortgage, and for an account of the moneys due to the plaintiff in respect of it, and for a sale of the property to discharge the claim. On the 13th of August, 1827, Philip Peacock, being indebted to John Ashton, deposited with him the title deeds of certain property of which the said P. Peacock was then seized in fee, and which consisted of three several messuages or tenements, buildings and premises, in the parish of St. Mary, in the town of Huntingdon; and on that occasion the following memorandum was signed by P. Peacock:—"I do hereby agree that the writings of my own dwelling-house, with the title-deeds therunto belonging, remain in the possession of Mr. John Ashton, St. Ives, draper, till such time as my account due to him for goods does not exceed the sum of one hundred pounds, at which time they shall be restored to me free from any expense. Witness my hand, this 13th day of August, 1827, Philip Peacock." It was alleged by the bill that during the life of P. Peacock the amount was not reduced to 100l. and at the time of his death, P. Peacock was indebted to Ashton in the sum of 274l. 9s. 9d. John Ashton, by his will, dated the 19th of September, 1833, gave all his real and personal property to Elizabeth Ashton (the plaintiff), and appointed her executrix. Ashton died on the 10th of October, 1833. P. Peacock died in Sept. 1827, having, by his will, dated the 8th of April, 1825, appointed as to pass real estate, appointed his wife, Susanna Peacock (deceased), sole executrix of his will, and leaving James Pigram Peacock his oldest son and heir-at-law. Susanna Peacock having renounced probate of the will, letters of administration, with the will annexed, were, on the 11th of September, 1838, granted to Samuel Edward Cooch, a creditor. J. P. Peacock, by his will, dated the 22nd of August, 1833, gave all his messuages or tenements and hereditaments, with the appurtenances, unto his wife Marianna (afterwards married to Samuel Dalton), and, after her decease, to his son, James Pigram Peacock. The principal question discussed in the suit was as to the extent of the security, the title-deeds relating to three houses, and the memorandum accompanying the deposit mentioning the mortgagor's own dwelling-house only.

Russell and W. Milne, for the plaintiff.

Wigram and Pitman, for the defendants, contended that the memorandum created a lien upon the deeds only, and that the intention of the parties was to give a lien upon the dwelling-house mentioned in the memorandum, and not upon the other property.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that prima facie a deposit of title-deeds created an equitable mortgage upon the whole property comprised in them, and that it laid on those who contended the contrary to prove it. He must look at the whole document, and there the term "writings" must be held to include the title-deeds in question. The intention of the parties could not be disappointed by the loose form of the instrument. The lien, therefore, extended to the whole of the lands included in the title-deeds; and if, before the death of Philip Peacock, the debt was reduced below 100l. there was no lien; but if, at his death, it exceeded 100l. the lien extended to the whole property.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

April 17 and 23.

STINTON v. TAYLOR.

Replication—Dismiss—Time—Vacation—Costs.

In March 1846, a motion was made to dismiss for want of replication, when the plaintiff was ordered to file a replication within a month; and in default, the bill should stand dismissed without further order. The time for filing the replication under the above order expired on the 8th of April, but the Easter Vacation, which began on the 4th of April, intervened, and the plaintiff did not file his replication until the first day after the Vacation, which was on the 16th of April. On the 17th of April the defendant served the plaintiff with a warrant to tax his costs as of his bill dismissed under the order.

Palmer now moved for leave that the plaintiff might now file his replication as of the 8th of April, on the ground that the offices were shut during the Vacation, except for very special proceedings.

Jervis, for the defendant, opposed the motion, and submitted that the office was open all the year round for the purpose of filing replications.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Your application should be for an order to restore the bill, which is at present, under the previous order, out of court. You must amend your notice of motion to that effect; you may then file your replication, consenting that publication shall pass in due course, as if the replication had been filed on the 8th of April, and the plaintiff must pay all the costs of the proceedings to tax on the dismissal and of this motion.

WHITCOMBE v. DEAKIN.

Foreclosure—Judgment creditor—Disclaimer—Costs. In order to entitle a party disclaiming to his costs, in a foreclosure suit, he must, on the first notice of the proceedings, inform the plaintiff of his disclaimer.

This was a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage. A judgment creditor of the mortgagor was made a defendant, who, by his answer, admitted the judgment, and that it still remained unsatisfied, and, save as aforesaid, he did not know whether he had any lien on the lands in mortgage, and denied any charge thereon, and disclaimed all interest in the property.

Romilly and Erskine appeared for the plaintiff.

Rogers, for the mortgagor.

Speed, for the judgment creditor, asked for his costs, and cited Gabriel v. Sturgis (6 Law T. 452).

Romilly objected to the LAW TIMES being read as an authority, as the names of the reporters were not published.

Speed replied that they were regularly published; and the Court allowed the case cited to be read.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The order for costs now asked might have the effect (if the mortgage property should prove deficient) of making the mortgagor pay out of his own pocket the costs of persons who had had dealings with the mortgagor long after the creation of the mortgage security, a result manifestly unjust; I shall, in this case, make the common decree, and, with regard to persons placed in the position of Mr. Speed's client, they ought, on receiving a bill that was filed against them, at once inform the plaintiff they disclaimed all interest; and if, notwithstanding such information, the plaintiff still retained them parties before the Court, they would, at the Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Saturday, April 25.

HUMPHREYS v. MARSH.

Possession of Tenements Act—Trespass or case.

Where parties have broken and entered a house under the authority of a warrant issued by justices, in pursuance of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, s. 1, trespass, and not case, is the proper remedy.

Trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house and ejecting him therefrom.

Plea—1st, Not guilty; 2nd, a justification under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74; 3rd, a denial that the house was the house of the plaintiff; and 4th, liberum tenementum.

The case was tried before the Lord Chief Baron at Shrewsbury, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 100l. It appeared that the defendants, of whom one was the plaintiff's landlord, and the others bailiffs, had entered the house in question under the authority of a warrant issued by two justices in pursuance of the above statute.

Whateley, Q.C. on Saturday, April 18, moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be entered for the defendant of not guilty, on the ground that the action was misconceived; or why a new trial should not be had, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and the damages excessive. First, case, and not trespass, was the proper form of action. The third section of the statute expressly provides that trespass may be brought against the person who obtains the warrant, where the warrant is not executed; but here it was executed, and the general rule applies. The warrant of the magistrates is a protection to all parties entering under it. (Mould v. Williams, 5 Q.B. 469; Brittain v. Kinnaird, 1 Brod. & B.) [He also moved on the grounds that the verdict was against evidence and the damages excessive.]

Patteson, J.—The statute gives an action of trespass against the person who obtains the warrant; he is liable, if he does not execute it; a fortiori he must be liable, if he does.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—There is nothing in the point of law; but as to the rest we will see the learned judge.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now stated that the learned judge was of opinion that there ought to be no rule.

Rule refused.

TAYLOR v. BROOKE.

Award—Costs.

The proper mode to object in an action upon an award that the award is bad, is by plea of no award, but a special plea, setting out the reason is only bad upon special demurrer as an argumentative traverse. An award of a gross sum for costs of two actions, the reference and the award, is bad.

Action upon an award.

Plea, setting out that the award was bad, for awarding a gross sum for the costs of the actions, the reference, and the award, except the costs of the agreement of reference, which were assessed at a specific sum. Demurrer for that the pleader does not traverse, or confess and avoid.

H. Hill, in support of demurrer.—Dresser v. Stamford, decided in the Court of Exchequer last Term, shews that no award is the proper mode of pleading (supra, 6, 192; Gibborne v. Hart, 5 M. & W. 50).

Addison.—It is not specially demurred to upon any ground open to raise this objection. Then the award is bad. The costs are awarded in a gross sum, which is wrong, and there is no authority to award the costs of the reference. Robinson v. Henderson (6 M. & S. 276); Moore v. Darley (1 C. B. 445); were cited.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The arbitrator had no right to lump the sums together. It is not distinguishable from Robinson v. Henderson.

Judgment for defendant.

ROGERS v. GRAZEBROOKE.

A mortgage of the residue of a term less one day, from a day named, gives a right of entry from that day, although there are provisions and covenants for the mortgagor's quiet occupation until default.

Doe dem. Lightfoot (8 M. & W. 559), recognized and confirmed.

Trespass, for entering certain messuages and tenements.

Plea, in substance, that the defendants took under a lease of R. Hunt, a bankrupt, whose assignees they were.

Replication. That prior to the bankruptcy of R. Hunt, he had demised, by way of mortgage, to them, with powers of entry, which they had exercised, and so had become possessed of the premises in question before the defendants entered.

Rejoinder. The defendants set out the demise on oyer, and alleged that the 5th day of March, 1841, when the plaintiff's right of possession accrued, had not arrived. To this there was a demurrer. In another plea the defendants themselves set out the lease. The plaintiffs replied that they had entered under the demise, to which the defendants demurred. There were several special grounds of demurrer, which were given up, and the substantial point raised by the pleadings was, whether a right of entry accrued under the mortgage, prior to the 6th day of March, A.D. 1841.

Martin, Q.C. (with whom was Bovill) in support of plaintiff's demurrer.—The demise by R. Hunt to the plaintiff was, from March 6, 1840, for the whole of the residue of his then term, except one day, in absolute terms, "subject, nevertheless, to the provisions, agreements, and declarations contained therein." There is a proviso that, on payment on or before March 6, A.D. 1841, of 500l. and interest to the plaintiff, that the said demise should cease, and be void. In default of payment, powers of sale are given after three months' notice, and a covenant by R. Hunt that the plaintiff might enter and occupy. If this were res integra, it would be easily shewn that this is an absolute demise, and the subsequent provisions and covenants do not affect the mortgagee's right of entry. But it is already decided both in this court and in the Court of Exchequer. (Doe v. Lightfoot, 8 M. & W. 559; Doe v. Day, 2 Q.B. 147.)

Peacock, contra.—The cases are with the defendant. (Wheeler v. Montefiore, 2 Q.B. 133; Wilkinson v. Hall, 3 B., N.C. 508; Doe dem. Lyster v. Goldwin, 2 Q.B. 143.)

Martin, in reply.—Wheeler v. Montefiore is distinguishable, for there the plaintiff never had entered or taken possession, and the distinction is commented upon in Doe v. Day, 2 Q.B. 143.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I think Wheeler v. Montefiore is distinguishable, and that it may be supported upon the reasons given in Doe v. Day. This case is not distinguishable from Doe v. Lightfoot.

Patteson, J.—I cannot distinguish this in any way from Doe v. Lightfoot.

Williams, J. and Wightman, J. concurred.

Judgment for plaintiff.

WOOD v. HEWITT.

Fixtures.

To determine whether a particular chattel is a fixture or not, the particular circumstances must in each case be considered. And where it appeared in evidence that a mill-hatch, which worked in a groove or fender which was attached to a kind of sill, had, together with the fender, been repaired for some years by the plaintiff, the Court refused a new trial, for an alleged misdirection, the judge having left the question as to the fender to the jury.

Cockburn, Q. C. and M. Smith, shewed cause against a rule for a new trial. It was trespass for removing a fender, being portion of a mill-hatch. One of the issues raised was, as to the property in the fender. It was shewn that the plaintiff, or those through whom he claimed, had repaired the fender on several occasions during forty-one years. It moved in a kind of groove or sill, which was fixed to the soil. There was conflicting evidence as to the right to the soil. The rule had been obtained on the ground that the jury should have been told that if it was the defendant's soil, the fender was his also as a fixture. This could not have been correct, for it is a question of fact, not of law.

Crowder, Q. C. Greenwood, and Cornish, contra, cited Liford's case (11 Co. Rep. 46); R. v. Otley (1 B. & Ad. 141). The verdict was also against the evidence.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It does not necessarily follow that this was a fixture so as not to be the property of the plaintiff. These questions are rarely as to things which are absolutely fixtures; but they are severable or not, according to circumstances. It is a matter of evidence as to how the chattel was intended to be used. Suppose a stone basin left upon the ground for some time; it would become imbedded in the earth, and so in one sense a fixture; but not in the legal sense of being attached to the freehold. I think, however, that the verdict, on the whole, was against evidence. New trial on payment of costs.

REG. V. CHATHAM.

Order of removal—Examination.

The examinations in support of an order of removal to Chatham stated relief given by the officers of Chatham to the pauper in "Gillingham." Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the relief was given out of the parish of Chatham.

—Upon appeal against an order of removal, the Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case. The examinations upon which the order of removal was made contained evidence that the overseers of the parish of Chatham had relieved the pauper whilst residing in "Gillingham," but no other or further description of that place was given. The appellants contended that that evidence was insufficient to support the order; and that was the question submitted to this Court.

Henry and Gladys (being called upon by the Court), in support of the objection.—The evidence is insufficient without some statement to shew that Gillingham is not a part of Chatham. Nothing ought to be left to inference in these examinations; and for all that appears, Gillingham may be a hamlet of Chatham.

Gunning, contra, was not called upon.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There is nothing in the objection. Order confirmed.

BARNES V. SHORE.

Prohibition—Toleration Acts.

None of the Toleration Acts exempt persons in holy orders from their liability in the Ecclesiastical Courts for breaches of discipline, but only exempt them from penalties for nonconformity; therefore a writ of prohibition will not lie to stay proceedings in the Court of Arches against a priest in holy orders for publicly reading prayers on Sunday, and performing ecclesiastical duties and divine services according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England in an unconsecrated chapel, without the license of the bishop of the diocese, and against his nonconformity.

This was a motion for a prohibition to stay further proceedings in the Arches Court of Canterbury against the Rev. James Shore. The facts shortly were, that Mr. Shore, a priest in holy orders, had, some time since, received a license from the Bishop of Exeter to preach in a chapel at Bridgetown, in the parish of Berry Pomeroy. Upon the induction of a new incumbent, the secretary of the Bishop of Exeter stated, that unless a new nomination was obtained, the license would be withdrawn. The chapel was closed in September, 1843. In March, 1844, by the directions of the Duke of Somerset, the chapel was certified in the Archdeacon's Court of Totness as a place of religious worship under the 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, and Mr. Shore resumed his duties as minister of the chapel, conducting the service as before, according to the forms of the Church of England.

On March 13th, 1844, the Bishop of Exeter revoked and annulled his license, and monishing him to cease from officiating in the chapel, and prohibiting him from doing it in future. To this Mr. Shore replied, that "as he had previously withdrawn from his Lordship's jurisdiction, and the chapel was duly registered in the Archdeacon's Court, he was at a loss to conceive on what grounds his Lordship proceeded." Mr. Barnes answered, that the document was addressed to him, "as a clergyman who had been performing duty in the diocese" under the circumstances detailed, and that it "was a prohibition from officiating in Bridgetown Chapel."

On the 16th of March Mr. Shore took the oaths prescribed by the 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, before a magistrate of the borough of Totness, in which borough the chapel was situated, and Mr. Shore resided. In answer to the above letter of the 16th instant, he informed Mr. Barnes "that he no longer regarded himself as a minister of the Establishment," and that he had withdrawn, because he could not "conscientiously submit to the discipline of the Church as administered by the Bishop."

On July 12th, 1844, the Bishop of Exeter issued a commission under the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86.) Proceedings were taken under this commission. Mr. Shore appeared under protest. The Commissioners decided that there was a prima facie case against Mr. Shore, and he was cited in the Arches Court. He appeared under protest, but the protest being overruled, he appeared absolutely. Articles were brought in against him, charging him with officiating as a priest in a consecrated place without the Bishop's license.

On May 31, 1845, Mr. Shore put in a responsive allegation, in which, after stating the facts as above detailed, as to the registry of the chapel, he alleged that he had on conscientious grounds seceded from, and ceased to conform to, the Church of England, and was, at the time of the citation, and still, a "Protestant dissenting minister in holy orders, and a preacher and teacher of a congregation of Protestant dissenters assembling and accustomed to assemble for religious worship," in the said chapel, and claimed exemption under the Toleration Act. Mr. Shore also stated, that although he had availed himself of some of the forms set forth in the Book of Common Prayer, yet that he had made variations therein as not conforming to the Church of England. This allegation the Court rejected, as not setting up a valid defence, holding that the Toleration Acts did not apply to him. The rule nisi for a prohibition was obtained on November 11.

The Attorney-General, Dr. Addams, and M. Smith shewed cause (Jan. 28).—This is an offence against the Ecclesiastical Courts. In Ayliff's Paragon, 208, amongst other causes for deprivation and degradation, nonconformity and the use of other rites and ceremonies are mentioned. The Acts which will be relied upon by Mr. Shore really do not apply to the present question. They contend that a person may continue to be in orders, that he may disobey the lawful commands of his bishop; but that, if he can only clothe himself with the character of a minister of a dissenting congregation, the Toleration Act applies to his case, and that no proceeding can be had against him. We admit this as to proceedings against him for nonconformity; but say that he is liable in respect of other offences, as disobedience to the bishop, he still continuing a priest in holy orders, the Acts must be considered. The chapel has been duly certified,—he has taken the oaths under 52 Geo. 3; and therefore he claims the benefit of the Toleration Act; 1 W. & M. c. 18. By 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, s. 4, which exempts certain persons from the penalties of previous Acts, no provision is made as to taking the oaths, but under sec. 5, they must be taken. By sec. 13, the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the archbishops and bishops is especially reserved. The 19 Geo. 3, c. 44, specifies the oaths and declarations to be taken.

There are two heads of nonconformity in those Acts; 1. Absence from the Parish Church; 2. Attending Conventicles. The first statute referred to in 1 & 2 Wm. & M. c. 18, is 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 14; then comes 23 Eliz. c. 1, s. 5; 29 Eliz. c. 6. These refer to non-attendance at church; and in 29 Eliz. c. 6, is the first mention of the term conformity; for it fixes a monthly penalty "until the offender conform." Conformity, therefore, meant open attendance at the parish church. This is further shewn by 35 Eliz. c. 1, ss. 1 and 4. Nonconformity, therefore, to which the Toleration Act applies, is absence from church. At common law, persons absenting themselves from church, without license of the ordinary, were liable to ecclesiastical censure. None of the Acts inflicting penalties for nonconformity took away the ecclesiastical jurisdiction existing independently of them; indeed, it was expressly retained by 32 Geo. 3. By observing the provisions of 32 Geo. 3, c. 155, exemption from 17 Car. 2, c. 2, is obtained, but that does not relate to ecclesiastical penalties. Nor does 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 1, apply. It is not a proceeding against Mr. Shore for nonconformity, but for disobedience as a priest to the lawful orders of his bishop. Sec. 8 of the Toleration Act applies to a peculiar class of nonconformists, those already in orders, or pretending to orders, who were to be exempted from 13 Eliz. c. 19; 17 Car. 2, c. 2, and 13 and 14 Car. 2, provided they took the oaths and subscribed the declaration, and also subscribed the Articles under 13 Eliz. c. 12, that is the 39 Articles, except the 34th, 35th, 36th, and a portion of the 20th. Mr. Shore has not complied with that section, having only taken the oaths, and subscribed the declaration.

Then can a person in holy orders, at his pleasure, divest himself of his obedience to the bishop? Can he have two characters? It is clear he acted as minister of a dissenting congregation. In the case of Trevel v. Keith (2 Atkyns, 498), this point was decided by Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, who held that it did not extend to clergymen of the Church of England, infringing the discipline of their church. So, also, Dr. Nisbald held in Carr v. Marsh (2 Phil. 203). Button v. Standish (6 Mod. 188); and Law (1 Skinner, 101), were also cited.

The Solicitor-General, Manning, Serjt. and Dr. Twiss, in support of the rule. The question is of vast importance—whether a person once in holy orders, who afterwards conscientiously ceases to be a member of the church in his opinions, is to be liable in Ecclesiastical Courts for becoming a dissenter? There is no question here of the bond fides of the dissent. It must be contended that a clergyman may not change his opinions, or enter a dissenting place of worship, without being liable to punishment. In other words, for a clergyman there is no liberty of conscience, or no freedom of opinion. Can this be seriously contended? Under the Toleration Act he is protected. Mr. Shore says he was a minister of the Church of England, but ceased to be so before the commission of the alleged offence; being a dissenter from conscience and conviction he officiated, as he was entitled to do by law—for the chapel was duly licensed and registered. He did not perform the service according to the Church of England. He is, in fact, prosecuted for his change of faith, as shewn by the allegations. The Toleration Act would then become a dead letter to all clergymen. Mr. Shore is to be punished for acting according to his conscience, and to be restrained from doing so for the future. He is a dissenter, and Trevel v. Keith does not apply. The statutes of Charles relate to nonconformity as contrary to law, and Mr. Shore's within the meaning of that nonconformity. Mr. Shore made the declaration under the Act. He is a Protestant dissenter, under sec. 4, of the Toleration Act, and there is no law or authority to compel a clergyman to abstain from the exercise of his conscientious duty. At the Restoration, the clergy were much persecuted, six or seven thousand imprisoned during the reign of Charles II. and the Toleration Act was passed to relieve the clergy as well as the laity; and it did so, in fact. [PATTERSON, J.—Do you mean to say that a clergyman by his voluntary act can cease to be a clergyman?] The change of faith is involuntary. [PATTERSON, J.—If, then, he again changed he would become a clergyman again.] That question does not arise here, and would be determined by ecclesiastical consideration. [WIGHTMAN, J.—What is the date at which he ceased to be a clergyman? It is the time when he became a dissenter by overtaking the change in his opinions, which was by taking the oaths, and acting as a minister of another congregation. No particular notification of the change is required. Was it intended that the Toleration Act should leave ecclesiastical persons subject to punishment for conduct in accordance with its provisions? The meaning attempted to be put upon nonconformity is too limited. Irving was a minister in holy orders, preaching without the bishop's license. Blackstone's appeal of the statutes as to nonconformity shows that Mr. Shore is really within them in the present instance; (see vol. iv. 61).

If the argument on the other side be correct, Mr. Shore might be punished in the Ecclesiastical Court for not attending church. In the cases cited, the plea of secession was not set up, nor indeed did it exist. (See Burn's Ecclesiastical, 2, 218). A full report is given of the opinion of Lord Mansfield in Evans v. Chamberlain of London (see 6 Bro. P. C. 181); and he there shows, that punishment for religious opinions is contrary to the common law of England, and can only exist by virtue of some positive enactment. He says, "Bare nonconformity is no sin by the common law; and all positive laws inflicting any pains and penalties for nonconformity to the established rites and modes, are repealed by the Act of Toleration, and dissenters are hereby exempted from all ecclesiastical censures." It is sought to fix Mr. Shore with a sin, as well as to admonish him. The writ of prohibition will be granted, where the suit includes more than is properly cognizable in the Ecclesiastical Court. Evans v. Gwyn (5 Q.B. 844). It is part and parcel of the law of the land, that no man should be punished for his belief. Further, it is a mistake to say Mr. Shore a minister in holy orders, and priest of the United Church of England and Ireland. Every priest, by his ordination, becomes a priest of the United Church of Christ, and there is no difference whether this character is obtained by ordination at Exeter or Treves. Mr. Shore, therefore, has two characters, that of priest in holy orders of the Church of England, and a minister of the Church of Christ. The former character is indelible, but the latter is not, and has been put an end to by the effect of Mr. Shore's dissent, and so becoming entitled to the benefit of the Toleration Act. If Mr. Shore is protected from the Ecclesiastical Courts for breaches of church discipline, then every Roman Catholic priest who takes upon himself any of the duties and penalties of a minister, in a diocese without the permission of the bishop of the diocese, will be liable to be sued in the Ecclesiastical Court. Cur. adv. vult.

On Monday, May 4, the Court delivered judgment as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—This was a rule for a writ of prohibition to the Archdeacon of Canterbury, against proceeding in a suit instituted by R. Barnes, gentleman, against the Rev. S. Shore, in the Court of the Bishop of Exeter, and removed by letters of request into the Archdeacon Court, for officiating in an unconsecrated chapel in Bridgetown, in the diocese of Exeter, without the licence, and against the monition of the bishop. Mr. Shore had been admitted to priest's orders some years ago by a former Bishop of Exeter, and had officiated in the same chapel with the licence of the present bishop for some years, but that licence had been withdrawn, and the chapel had been registered under the 52 Geo. 3, c. 156, as a dissenting chapel; Mr. Shore officiated in it, professing so to do as a dissenting minister. Mr. Shore being a priest in holy orders, the general jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which he acts is undoubtedly established. In regard to this point, the cases of Trebeck v. Keith (2 Atkyns), and Carr v. Marsh (2 Phill.) sufficiently establish this position without a minute examination of the canons on the subject. And in the last edition of Burn's Ecclesiastical Law (vol. 1, p. 306), a case is stated from Serjeant Hill's manuscripts of Keate v. The Bishop of London, where this Court discharged a rule preventing Mr. Keate being sued in the Ecclesiastical Court for officiating without the bishop's licence. The question is not whether the charge brought against Mr. Shore can or cannot be substantiated, or if it can be substantiated what penalty he may have incurred. The only question is, whether, by any Act of Parliament Mr. Shore is, under the circumstances, exempted from the jurisdiction of his bishop. It appears that he put in a defensive allegation stating the facts, and claiming exemption as a dissenter, which allegation the learned Judge of the Court of Arches refused to receive, and such refusal raises the question for our consideration. The statute mainly relied on is the 52 Geo. 3, and that statute provides for certifying and registering places of religious worship, and it then provides, by section 4, in substance, that every person who shall preach or officiate in places of meeting duly certified according to that Act, or who shall resort to such place, shall be exempt from all such pains and penalties under any Act of Parliament relating to religious worship, as any person who shall have taken the oaths prescribed by and under the 1 Wm. & M. c. 18, s. 1, entitled "A Toleration Act," &c., and as fully and effectually as if all such pains and penalties, and the several Acts enforcing the same, were recited in this Act, and such exemption as aforesaid were severally and separately enacted in relation thereto. This clause manifestly does not touch the present case; it only exempts from penalties under certain Acts of Parliament. The present suit is not founded on, and has no relation to, any penalty, under any Act of Parliament, or to any Act of Parliament at all, but it is a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, founded upon the common law of the land. There is a clause in 1 Wm. & M. which prohibits proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court under the circumstances there stated; but the 52 Geo. 3 does not incorporate that clause, nor allude to it. The 13th section of the 52 Geo. 3 was referred to on the argument, as saving the jurisdiction of the bishop; but it refers principally to places licensed by the bishop, and does not bear on the present question. From an attentive consideration of all the clauses of the 52 Geo. 3, it is quite plain it does not exempt any person from a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court to which he would otherwise be liable. But the statute clearly exempts from the penalties of the Acts of Parliament then in force as to public worship all persons dissenting from the Church of England who shall take the oaths mentioned in the first section of that Act, that is to say, the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and make the declaration mentioned in the 13 Car. 2. The 4th section further enacted, "Nor shall any of the said persons be presented in any Ecclesiastical Court for or by reason of their nonconformity to the Church of England." The 8th section also exempts persons dissenting from the Church of England in holy orders, or pretending to holy orders, preachers and teachers of congregations of Protestant dissenters who shall take such oaths, and make such declarations, from the penalties of the several Acts of Parliament, but is silent as to any proceedings in any Ecclesiastical Court. The only clause, therefore, in any Act of Parliament that exempts any persons from proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts, is the 4th sec. of the 1 Wm. & M. and that only exempts from proceedings for, or by reason of, nonconformity to the Church of England. In order to avail himself of this clause, Mr. Shore must show first he is such a person dissenting, and has so taken the oaths and made the declaration of transubstantiation; secondly, that he is now sued in the Ecclesiastical Court, for, or by reason of, his nonconformity to the Church of England.

As to the first, some question may be made as to whether the proper oaths have been taken, but it is hardly necessary to inquire closely into that point, for no distinct rule appears to be laid down, as to who may be clearly a person dissenting from the Church of England. But it should seem that as dissent is matter of opinion, any one who says he does dissent is entitled to be considered as dissenting, and any one is clearly entitled to be so considered as a dissenter, as well persons in holy orders, as other people who are laymen; Mr. Shore, therefore, may be entitled to insist on being treated as a dissenter on his mere assertion, if he says so, without any formal act of separation being rendered necessary either by him or against him. But he cannot so divest himself of the character of a priest in holy orders, with which he has been invested by the authority of the Church of England, when ordained by one of its bishops, and when he promised obedience to the Church of England. From that character, and from that vow and promise, he cannot be released otherwise than by the same authority that conferred the one, and enjoined the other. The 76th canon provides, in express terms, "That no man being ordained as a minister, shall from henceforth voluntarily relinquish the same, or afterwards use himself in the course of his life as a layman, under pain of excommunication, and the churchwardens shall present him." Therefore, although he may, as a dissenter, be exempted by the 4th sec. of Wm. & M. from being sued in the Ecclesiastical Court for mere nonconformity to the Church of England, he is not exempt by that, or any other act from canonical obedience to the bishops as a priest, in regard to anything he may do according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England. This brings the whole question to the second or last point, whether he is sued in the present case, for nonconformity to the Church of England, for a breach of discipline as a priest of that church. Now, the 7th Article exhibited in the Archdeacon Court makes that matter perfectly clear, for it charges that Mr. Shore, on Sunday, the 28th of July, did take upon himself publicly to read the prayers, preach, and administer the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and perform ecclesiastical duties and divine services according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, in an unconsecrated chapel, in the diocese of Exeter, without licence or authority so to do, and contrary to, and in spite of, the injunction and monition of the bishop. No one can fail to see that this is not a charge for not conforming to the Church of England. The previous article charges that he was a priest in holy orders, ordained by a former Bishop of Exeter; and the 7th charges that, being such priest, he performed services and duties proper to such places according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, but in a place and under circumstances that made such performance a breach of discipline of that Church, and that he is sued for such breach of discipline. Whether the facts can be proved, that will establish the charge, it is not for us to inquire; Mr. Shore has denied the charge, and the Ecclesiastical Court will doubtless make a proper inquiry into the truth of it. It is sufficient, for the purposes of this motion for a prohibition, to see that the charge is one peculiarly and exclusively of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and that no Act of Parliament exempts a person situate as Mr. Shore is from that jurisdiction, in respect of such charge. We therefore think that the rule must be discharged.

Rule for prohibition discharged.

WRIGHT v. CHATTERIS.

Action for non-completion of a purchase—General and special damage—Award—Entering verdict.

An action for the non-completion of a purchase (the declaration alleging, by way of special damage, the expense of negotiating the purchase, and of investigating the title) was referred to arbitration; and the arbitrator awarded several sums under different heads; amongst others, for investigating the title, 30l.; but added that in that 30l. he included the preparation of an assignment after objection made to the title, and also journeys for the purpose of taking, as well as the taking, of counsel's opinion on the course to be pursued by the plaintiff with respect to a suit in equity, and a contemplated action of ejectment. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any of the charges in and about negotiating the purchase, nor any part of the 30l. awarded in respect of the last-mentioned expenses; and that the residue being less than the money paid into court, the defendant was entitled to the verdict. This was an action for the non-completion of a purchase, which had been referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator had awarded various sums as reasonable sums to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff on various accounts, which were arranged by him under different heads; amongst others were the following: For a journey to negotiate the purchase, &c. 5l.; for the expenses of investigating the title, 30l.; "but which said sum is made up as follows:" including sums for the preparation of an assignment of the property, with a view to the purchase, but after objection to the title; and for a journey from Exeter to London, and for taking counsel's opinion as to a contemplated action of ejectment, and also as to certain proceedings in equity. The declaration in this action charged as special damage the expenses of investigating the title, and also those of negotiating the purchase; and the defendant had paid into court 25l. 15s. A rule nisi having been obtained on the part of the defendant to enter the verdict for him pursuant to the award, Watson, Q. C. and Hughes, now shewed cause. They contended that as to all the charges which came within the head of "Investigation of the title," they were clearly recoverable, according to the case of Hodges v. The Earl of Lichfield (1 Scott, 449); that the arbitrator had found that those expenses amounted to 30l.; and that as only 25l. had been paid into court, the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict.

Crowder, Q. C. (with whom was Taprell), contra.—It is not disputed that the plaintiff has a right to recover all expenses which are properly included under the head of "Investigation of title;" but the arbitrator has included in the 30l. some items which are not allowable. First, the expense of preparing the assignment is not recoverable; it is not laid as special damage; and a similar claim was abandoned in Hodges v. The Earl of Lichfield. The same observation applies to the expense of the journey to London, and of taking counsel's opinion as to the course to be pursued. With regard to the charges for negotiating the purchase, it is hardly contended that they can be supported, although they are laid in the declaration as special damage. In that respect, the declaration in Hodges v. The Earl of Lichfield was the same, and there Tindal, C. J. said, "I think the preliminary expenses ought not to be allowed; they were incurred by the plaintiff for his own information, and at a time when the existence of a contract was matter of uncertainty." [He was then stopped by the Court.]

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—I think Mr. Crowder has sufficiently reduced the amount. Rule absolute.

REG. v. LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.

Entering a respiting appeal.

Pashley moved for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal of paupers from St. Botolph to Stockport. Order was made Nov. 25, and forthwith sent to the respondent parish. At the next general quarter sessions for the city, the appeal was entered and respited under 9 Geo. 1. Notice of appeal was given for the next sessions. At the hearing at the April sessions, it was objected that the general session had no jurisdiction to respite, because more than thirty-five days had elapsed after the sending of the order to the appellants and before the sessions. Rule granted.

SANDERS v. GUARDIANS OF ST. NEOTS.

Poor Law Guardians—Necessaries—Ratification.

It was stated (supra, 61) that Gunning had obtained a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and for a new trial in this case. The Court, however, took time to consider. It was an action against a guardian for work and labour, and materials, for having supplied some iron gates to the workhouse. There was no contract under seal proved, but it appeared that the defendant had frequently seen these gates after they were put up, and the jury further found expressly that they were necessaries. On April 25,

LORD DENMAN, C. J. said—We have seen our brother Parke, who is not dissatisfied with the verdict. The objection to the want of the seal is met, the jury having found that they were necessaries, and that the defendants had adopted the contract. Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 30.

REG. v. GREGORY.—Criminal information for publishing in the Satirist newspaper four separate libels upon the Duke of Brunswick. The defendant was now called up for judgment.—Cockburn, Q. C. and Peacock, were heard in mitigation, and Telford, Serjt. and Wordsworth, in aggravation of punishment.

Sentence, eight months' imprisonment, two for each libel.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Thursday, April 30.

ROSS v. HILL.

Pleading—Bailments.

In all cases of bailment, the promise implied by law is properly described in pleading as a promise "safely and securely" to perform the thing promised, even where the promise implied extends only to the exercise of ordinary care and diligence.

Therefore, where A hired B, a hackney cabman, to convey him and his portmanteau a certain distance, and the portmanteau was lost, the declaration properly charged the cabman upon a promise "safely and securely to carry and convey the plaintiff and his said luggage."

Assumpsit.—The declaration stated that the defendant was the proprietor of a certain hackney carriage, which, at the time of the making the promise, was under the care and management of the servant of the defendant, and was then standing and plying for hire at the terminus of the Great Western Railway; and that thereupon and after the passing of a certain Act, &c. (The Metropolitan Hackney Carriage Act), &c. in consideration that the plaintiff would hire the defendant to carry and convey (inter alia) the plaintiff and his luggage, &c. from, &c. to &c. for hire and award to the defendant in that behalf, the defendant, as and being such proprietor as aforesaid, promised the plaintiff to carry and convey the plaintiff and his luggage safely and securely from the said, &c. to, &c.

Breach.—That the defendant did not safely and securely carry and convey the plaintiff and his said luggage, but, on the contrary thereon, so carelessly and negligently behaved and conducted himself, to wit, by his servant, that by and through the mere carelessness, negligence, and misconduct of the defendant, to wit, by his servant, and not otherwise, &c. the luggage was lost.

Plea.—Non assumpsit.

At the trial, at the sittings in London after Michaelmas Term, it appeared that the plaintiff had hired the defendant's cab to convey him from the Great Western Railway to Southwark Bridge-road, and that in the course of the ride the plaintiff's portmanteau, which had been placed upon the roof of the cab, was lost. There was no express contract between the parties as to the luggage. It was objected upon the part of the defendant that the contract was laid too broadly, as the declaration sought to render the defendant liable, not merely for gross negligence, but at all events, and to fix upon him the chargeability of a common carrier, who is an insurer, whereas a cabman is not. Tindal, C.J. left it to the jury to say whether there had been reasonable care upon the part of the defendant, and reserved leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. The jury having found for the plaintiff, and a rule having been obtained pursuant to leave reserved, Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—It is objected that the defendant is charged as a common carrier, and as an insurer at all events, whereas in fact a cab-owner is not so; and that the declaration should have been, that the defendant undertook to use due and proper care. It is not now contended that the defendant was a common carrier, but he was a bailee for reward, and the words here used have been used in all the precedents in the law to charge a bailee. The words "safely and securely to carry" or "to keep" or to do anything which a bailee is bound to do, are always used to designate the liability even of a gratuitous bailee, who is bound to use only the merest reasonable care. There are three kinds of bailments, in each of which a different degree of care is demanded: 1st, a bailment for the benefit of the bailor; 2nd, for the benefit of the bailee; 3rd, for mutual benefit; but whatever the nature of the bailment, these words are rightly used. In Harris v. Costar (1 Car. & P. 636), which was an action by a passenger against a coachman for injury sustained, the declaration charged the defendant's duty to be "safely to carry." The same objection was taken as here, and Best, C.J. said, "Safely means that he will take due care. The declaration is in the common form." In Coggs v. Bernard (Ld. Raym. 909), Holt, C.J. says, "Nay, suppose the bailee undertakes safely and securely to keep the goods, in express words; yet even that would not charge him with all sorts of neglects; for if such a promise were put into writing, it would not charge so far even then." That was a case of gratuitous bailment, and the words were "salvo et secure." So Clift's Entries, 40; Rastell's Entries, 3 b.; ib. 8; ib. 9, 209 b.; Brown's Entries, 80; Brownlow Redivivus, 16. So also are the precedents in 2 Chitty on Pleadings, 246, 408; Register Brevium, 108, 110; Beauchamp v. Poveley (1 M. and Rob. 38); Dudley v. Smith (1 Camp, 167); Carins v. Robins (8 M. & W. 258); Hutton v. Osborne (Selwyn's N. P. 420). Erle, J. referred to Bourne v. Gutcliffe (3 Scott, N.R. 1). If the words "safely and securely" mean at all events, they are too wide to charge even a common carrier, for his is not an absolute liability. In his case, the words must be subject to all the exceptions which the law imports, that is, those of the acts of God and the King's enemies.

Dowling, Serjt. (with him Atkinson), in support of the rule.—There is no evidence of any express promise, or of any custom in the trade. The plaintiff's duty should have been charged only "to use reasonable care." In Coggs v. Bernard, Holt, C.J. says of bailees for reward, that they are only to do the best they can. The precedents do not shew that this is the proper mode of declaring when the objection is taken as to the variance. Coggs v. Bernard, for instance, was in arrest of judgment. In the case from Clift's entries, 40, the party charged was a common waterman; and in Bacon Ab. "Carriers," A. it is said that lightermen are common carriers. Rastell's Entries, 8, was a case long before 6 Anne c. 3; at that time, therefore, the owners of houses were liable for damage done by fires breaking out in their houses, at all events. (Viner's Ab. "Action for Fire," B.; see also Tubervil v. Stamp, 1 Salk. 13.) It is quite consistent with all that appears in the other cases, that there may have been an express contract. Coggs v. Bernard, moreover, was a case of executory consideration, and good after verdict. Here the objection was taken at the trial that there was a variance between the contract proved and that declared on. Unless this is the correct description of the implied liability of a bailee for reward, the plaintiff must fail. The words "safely and securely" are not sufficient to describe the chargeability annexed to every different kind of bailment from that of a common carrier downwards. It is said, indeed, in Southcote's case, 4 Rep. 84, a, that "a general bailment and a bailment to be safely kept is all one;" but that is expressly overruled in Coggs v. Bernard, and therefore every species of bailment must be described in its own way. According to true pleading principles, a contract must be described according to its legal effect. The cases from Rastell's Entries were probably the support of what was said in Southcote's case, and are impliedly overruled with it. (See also Kettle v. Bromsals, Willes, 118.) There are precedents in Chitty, both ways (2 Chitty on Pleadings, 248), and that would be a reason for going back from precedent to principle.

TINDAL, C.J.—In this case the question is, whether the promise laid in the declaration is the promise made by the party, either expressly or impliedly. It was clearly not an express promise, from the circumstances of the case, the position of the parties, and the nature of the thing. Then it is to be considered, whether it is a promise implied by law. If the words "safely and securely to carry and convey" are to be taken in their strictest meaning, then this is not a promise which the law would raise; but taking the rest of the declaration with them, are not the words capable of a more limited sense? I think that they are. In the first place, there is a long series of precedents in which the duty of the party has been laid in this way, and we cannot suppose that in all the cases there has been an express agreement. The law, therefore, has sanctioned this mode of expression either in the old form of case, or the more modern form of assumpsit. Thus, this mode is employed in the case of the action for fire, and for the improper carriage of goods, which have been cited from Rastell, in which cases the law requires only reasonable and proper care. In these and similar cases it is impossible to suppose that any express agreement existed. From the general observance, then, we are to consider that the words are used not in the strictest and most absolute sense, but with reference to the position of the parties. Here the promise to carry safely and securely means with reference to the degree of care and caution which the law requires in such cases. If, upon such a declaration, it had appeared at the trial that the defendant was a common carrier, then the words would have meant more than they now do; if it had turned out to be a gratuitous engagement by the defendant of his own free will, then a still smaller degree of care would be demandable. The way in which the words are to be construed in this or that particular case, is with reference to the duty imposed by law. I cannot help thinking that this is the effect of Coggs v. Bernard. The declaration there contained a promise like this, "salvo et secure elecare." yet the only objection taken was, that there was no consideration; not, that no evidence could support such a contract. Further, in many cases cited, the breach has been, that the party did not use due and reasonable care. That shews that the pleaders had in view the real amount of liability. I think, therefore, that the promise is properly laid.

COLTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. Harris v. Costar is expressly in point. The judicial construction of the words limits their meaning to an undertaking to use that degree of caution which the law throws upon the party.

CRESSWELL, J.—Reason and authority are in favour of the plaintiff. These words have nowhere been taken to import an absolute insurance. Even a common carrier is not an insurer at all events, but is exempt from being chargeable for the acts of God or the King's enemies. The language of Holt, C.J. in Coggs v. Bernard, goes not only to the law of the case, but to the form of the declaration, which was in principle exactly similar to this.

ERLE, J.—The defendant contends that the declaration means to impute an absolute promise for safe conveyance. But it is rather a promise to convey with due attention to safety. That degree of attention will vary according to the nature of the bailment. The words "due and reasonable care" would not be any more definite than the words here employed. It would be as much a question of evidence what the due and reasonable care required in any case amounted to, as what the promise to convey safely and securely in any particular case imported. Rule discharged.

HOPKINSON v. FINNEY.

Practice—Costs.

Where the indorsement upon a writ of summons claims more for costs than is really due, the proper course of the defendant is to pay the whole, and then procure a taxation. Therefore, where a defendant paid less than the sum indorsed, and in consequence the plaintiff's attorney proceeded in the action, although it afterwards turned out that the defendant had paid more than the plaintiff's attorney was actually entitled to, the Court refused to compel the plaintiff's attorney to pay the costs of the defendant subsequent to the date of the payment.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff's attorney to shew cause why he should not pay to the defendant, or his attorney, the costs of the latter in this cause incurred since February 6. The writ was served on the 30th of January, with an indorsement claiming 16l. 16s. for debt, and 2l. for costs. On the 6th of February, the defendant called at the office of the plaintiff's attorney, and paid him the whole amount of the debt, but only 1l. 14s. for the costs, contending that no more was due. The plaintiff's attorney proceeded to deliver declaration and particulars of demand. A summons was taken out before Maule, J. to set aside the declaration, and that summons was dismissed, with costs 20s. upon the ground of its being made too late. The defendant then obtained an order to refer it to the Master, to ascertain whether any thing was due to the plaintiff for debt or costs, and the Master reported that he found that the sum paid upon the 6th of February exceeded the sum then due by 1s. 8d. An application had been made to the plaintiff's attorney, to indemnify the defendant for the costs incurred. The plaintiff's attorney refunded the 1s. 8d. overpaid, but refused to pay any part of the defendant's subsequent costs. On these grounds, the present application was made.

By the COURT.—The defendant ought to have paid all that was indorsed upon the writ, and then to have obtained an order to tax the plaintiff's costs in the usual way. As he failed to do that, he is not entitled to our assistance. Rule refused.

WILKINS v. NOKES.

Evidence—Admissions.

An answer in Chancery filed by a solicitor for a client cannot be used as evidence of any fact stated in the answer against the solicitor filing it.

Assumpsit.—Indorsement against the maker of a promissory note payable twelve months after date.

Plea 3. "That after the making of the said note, and before the indorsement thereof to the plaintiff, and before the said promissory note became due and payable, to wit, &c. the defendant paid to one J. S. then being the holder of the said promissory note, and the said J. S. then accepted and received from the defendant, &c. in full satisfaction and discharge of the said principal money and interest, &c. and that the plaintiff, at the time of the indorsement to him by the said J. S. &c. had full notice and knowledge of the premises.—Verification."

Replication.—"That the defendant did not before the indorsement, &c. pay to the said J. S. nor did the said J. S. accept or receive, &c. modo et forma.—Issue thereon."

At the trial, before Maule, J. at the second sittings in Middlesex in the present Term, after the plaintiff had closed his case, it was opened for the defendant that proceedings had been taken in a suit in Chancery, Nokes v. J. S. and that in that suit the present plaintiff was the solicitor. The defendant proposed to establish his third plea by the answer in Chancery of J. S. Two letters were put in from the present plaintiff to J. S. the first informing him that he was going to file his answer, the latter informing him that the answer had been filed. The answer itself was then tendered, objected to, and rejected. A verdict was found for the plaintiff; and Byles, Serjt. now moved for a new trial, upon the ground of the improper rejection of evidence. He submitted that the evidence was admissible. It would plainly have been so had the replication traversed that the plaintiff had notice instead of denying the agreement between J. S. and the defendant. But in reality the notice is in issue; because if there were no such agreement, there could be no notice of it. Whatsoever is necessarily implied in the thing traversed is itself traversed. [TINDAL, C.J.—There might be notice of a matter altogether false. CRESSWELL, J.—The replication means this—"Prove your agreement, and then I will admit that I had notice." Then this was evidence of the payment. The indorsee stands upon the title of the indorser. [ERLE, J.—He does not take under, but from him.] This is a declaration made by Wilkins himself, who is the solicitor in the suit. [CRESSWELL, J.—Does he vouch for the truth of what his client says?] If J. S. had made this statement in Wilkins' presence, it would have been evidence against Wilkins. [CRESSWELL, J.—That is because you thereby give evidence not of what the speaker says, but of what the conduct of the hearer is. Is an attorney to be affected by every affidavit which he files for his client in the course of a cause? TINDAL, C.J.—It seems to me to be no stronger than if Wilkins, the attorney, had said that his client had said something about the matter in dispute. You must prove the fact itself by something more than such evidence.] Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 30.

POTTS and OTHERS, Assignees, v. EYTON and ANOTHER.—Channell, Serjt. showed cause. Sir Thos. Wilde, Serjt. (with him Crowder, Q.C. and Archbold), in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

MOXLEY v. RICHARDSON.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial upon an affidavit which had been used in support of an unsuccessful application to the judge at Nisi Prius to postpone the trial. Upon payment into court on or before May 4th of the amount of the verdict. Rule to show cause.

HARRIS v. ROBINSON.—Upon the application of Byles, Serjt. this rule was reopened.

DOE v. ROE.—Dowling, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector. Four of the tenants, since the commencement of this Term, had acknowledged the receipt before the Term of the rent and notice. Three had been served by putting the notice and demand on the door, and the wives of the tenants had since acknowledged the receipt. Judgment as to all but the three last; as to them, rule refused.

Friday, May 1.

SPECIAL PAPER.

GIBBS and ANOTHER v. FLIGHT and ANOTHER.—Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. (with him Channell, Serjt. and Cowling), for the plaintiffs. Talfourd, Serjt. (with him Atkinson), for the defendants. Cur. adv. vult.

THE CITY OF LONDON v. PARKINSON and OTHERS.—Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. moved for a reference to the Master for the purpose of appointing elisors, on the ground of the affidavits and oaths being interested. Rule absolute.

Saturday, May 2.

FRANCIS v. BEUCHER.—Argument concluded. Cur. adv. vult.

BARNES and ANOTHER v. ATTWOOD.—Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the rule for a special jury in this case should not be discharged; or why, if the plaintiff should obtain a verdict with which the presiding judge should be satisfied, the plaintiff should not have judgment as of this Term. Rule to shew cause.

SOMERS v. HODDER.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the rule of Court of April 21st should not be set aside, and why the defendant should not pay the costs of this application. The rule of Court was founded on a judge's order that the plaintiff should amend the issue delivered to the defendant, "and that the plaintiff do pay to the defendant, &c. 13s. 4d. costs." The copy of the order served upon the plaintiff, previous to making the order a rule of Court, was "that the plaintiff to pay," &c. There was, besides, an affidavit that the issue had never been tendered for amendment. Rule refused.

PARKHURST v. GOSBIE.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved for a rule calling upon the judge of the Sheriff's Court of the City of London to shew cause why he should not furnish to the defendant in this case a copy of his notes of a trial between the same parties held before him on the 16th of June, 1842. He produced an affidavit that the notes were material to the defendant for the purposes of his defence. Rule refused.

Monday, May 4.

RE v. HEMSWORTH.—In the case of Hemsworth v. Brian, Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. for discharging the bail in this case, on the ground that there had been vexatious delay in filing the interrogatories which the defendant was under a recognisance to answer. The Court thought that any irregularity or delay had been caused by the defendant himself. Rule discharged, with costs.

RE v. HEMSWORTH.—In the case of Hemsworth v. Brian, Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the prosecutor should not be at liberty to amend the interrogatories filed in this court upon an attachment against the defendant. Rule to shew cause.

STEVENS v. FROST (from the Special Paper).—This was an action of detinue to which the defendant had pleaded not guilty. The plaintiff had demurred, and the defendant having delivered no paper books, the plaintiff had delivered them for him. The Court had, upon a previous day in Term, directed that notice should be given to the defendant that the case would be called on to-day. Notice having been given accordingly, and no one now appearing for the defendant, and Manning, Serjt. for the plaintiff, the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff. Doe v. Roe.—Channell, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector. There were several tenants, who had been regularly served. One piece of ground and one house had been deserted by the late tenants, and the declaration and notice had been affixed to the gates leading to the former, and to the door of the latter. As there appeared an unity of title, the Court granted a rule absolute. Stroud v. Watts.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the certificate indorsed upon the writ of trial herein should not be set aside, and why the Master's allocatur should not be set aside, and why the Master should not review his taxation. The writ of trial was executed before the Under Sheriff, but the indorsement upon the writ (3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 2) purported to be made by the High Sheriff. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 18; and Reg. v. Dym (1 Car. & K. 730) were referred to. Rule to shew cause.

Brown v. De Winton.—Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against, and Byles, Serjt. supported, a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit obtained by the latter.

Rule discharged upon a peremptory undertaking to try at sittings after Trinity Term.

Norton v. Raphael.—Dowling, Serjt. shewed cause against, and Byles, Serjt. supported, a rule obtained by the latter for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

Rule discharged upon a stet process. Forsyth v. Allan.—Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against, and Manning, Serjt. supported, the rule for a new trial. The only question was as to the weight of the evidence.

Rule discharged. Cranwell v. Cooper.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

McDowall v. Spackman.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why he should not pay to the plaintiff 35l. the amount of an award. Rule to shew cause.

Roberts v. Grunisen.—Talfourd, Serjt. (with him Parnell) shewed cause against the rule for a new trial. Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Argument adjourned.

Tuesday, May 5.

Boydell and Another v. Harkness.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and in arrest of judgment. The action was upon a bill of exchange, drawn payable at London, and the declaration averred only a general presentment to the acceptor. Gibb v. Mather (6 Blag. 214); Lyon v. Holt (5 M. & W. 250), were cited. Upon the latter point only, Rule to shew cause.

Boyle v. Chapman.—Byles, Serjt. shewed cause. Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule. It was ultimately agreed between the parties that the rule should be made absolute, upon payment of costs, and upon payment of the costs attending the first summons at chambers in this case. The costs of the second attendance at chambers to be costs in the cause. Rule accordingly.

Jarvis v. Sheridan.—Byles, Serjt. shewed cause. Channell, Serjt. (with him Bovill) in support of the rule. The only question was one of fact, viz. whether the absence of the plaintiff's witnesses at the trial, and the consequent nonsuit, was to be owing to misconduct on the part of the defendant's attorney that he ought to pay the costs of the nonsuit and of this application; and that the plaintiff ought to be at liberty to try again.

Rule discharged with costs. Upon payment of the costs of the last trial and of this rule, the plaintiff to be at liberty to try again.

Ricketts and Others v. Alcock and Others.—Channell, Serjt. moved for leave to sign judgment against such of the defendants as had been served with notice to appear to the sci. fa. herein, and had not appeared.

Rule absolute.

Roberts v. Grunisen.—Argument concluded.

Woolley v. Smith.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to discharge the defendant out of custody, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 126. It was contended that the sum for which the verdict was recovered was a debt provable under the stat. against the defendant, and that the defendant having obtained his certificate was entitled to relief. Rule to shew cause.

Jeffries v. Jablouski.—Dowling, Serjt. moved to set aside the issue delivered in this case for irregularity. The sum sought to be recovered was less than 20l. and the issue delivered with a view to trial before the sheriffs adopted the form prescribed by Reg. Gen. H. T. 4 Wm. 4, without filling up the blanks that appear in the form. Rule to shew cause.

Kays v. Hazwood.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial, upon the ground of misdirection. First, the judge ought to have told the jury that as there appeared to be a written special agreement, there was no evidence to support the declaration, which consisted only of common counts. Secondly, he ought to have told the jury that the agreement amounted either to proof of payment, or to proof of accord and satisfaction. Cur. adv. vult.

Bennett v. Deacon.—Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause, and Byles, Serjt. supported the rule obtained for a new trial upon the ground of misdirection. The only question was, whether a certain communication was or was not privileged. All the Court declared that they were unable to distinguish this case from that of Corhead v. Richards (not yet reported), and as the same authorities were cited and the case just mentioned was so recent, it was useless to discuss it at length. Accordingly, as in Corhead v. Richards, Tindal, C.J. and Erle, J. thought the communication privileged. Coltman and Cresswell, JJ. were of an opposite opinion. The Court being divided, Rule discharged.

Wednesday, May 6.

Reg. v. Hemsworth, in the case of Hemsworth v. Brian.—Byles, Serjt. moved to open this rule, which was disposed of the other day, and that a defect in the title of the affidavits used in shewing cause might be corrected. The object of the motion was, that the affidavits might be put into such a state that a charge of perjury might be founded upon them. The rule upon a previous day had been dissolved of without reference to the particular affidavits. Rule refused.

Huxtable v. Crooner.—Kingslake, Serjt. moved to set aside the execution issued in this case, and to enter a suggestion upon the roll under 46 Geo. 3, c. 66, s. 40. The 1st and 12th sections of the Act were referred to, and the following cases: Burbridge v. Marvin (12 M. & W. 8); Barney v. Todd (3 H. Blac. 366); Gordon v. Lloyd (4 Dowl. 157).

Rule to shew cause. Hensman v. Cole.—Manning, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, Serjt. for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

Rule discharged upon a peremptory undertaking. Skelton v. Alcock.—Channell, Serjt. shewed cause. Byles, Serjt. supported the rule for a new trial, upon the ground of the improper admission and the improper rejection of evidence. Upon reference to the notes of the Under Sheriff, and by affidavits, it now appeared, that the evidence said to be rejected had been actually received, and that no objection had been pressed at the trial against the evidence now said to have been improperly received. Rule discharged.

Rich v. Basterfield.—Talfourd, Serjt. (with him Pearcock) shewed cause. Byles, Serjt. (with him Wordsworth) in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

SLATER v. DANGERFIELD.

Construction of will.

The testator devised as follows: "Also I give and devise unto my grandson, G. D. all those freehold messuages, on, &c. to hold the same for and during the term of his natural life, and from and after his decease I give and devise the same unto and for the use of all and every the lawful issue of my said grandson G. D. their heirs and assigns for ever, equally, and as tenants, and not as joint tenants, when and as he or they shall attain his or their age of twenty-one years."

Held, that G. D. took an estate for life.

This was argued some Terms back, and the judgment stood over until the end of last Term, when it was delivered by Mr. Baron Parke. All the facts and the cases relied on on both sides are very fully set out in the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B.—This was an action for the title-deeds of an estate at Barking, and the only question is, whether the plaintiffs are the parties entitled to the land to which the deeds relate. The question arises under the will of Henry Taylor, which bears date the 23rd August, 1823, which, so far as it is material to set it out, is as follows:—"Also, I give and devise unto my grandson, George Dangerfield, all those freehold messuages or tenements which I purchased of J. Hawkins Haytler, and the outhouses, offices, gardens, and warehouses thereto belonging, situate in the High-street of Barking aforesaid, and now in the occupation of William Bowers, Joshua Molleroyd, and William Reid; and also all that freehold piece and parcel of arable land which I purchased of John Sanders, called Little Paradise Marsh, containing by estimation four acres or thereabouts, with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, situate in Barking aforesaid, and now in their occupation as under-tenants and assigns;" with an habendum "to hold the same unto his said grandson, George Dangerfield, for and during the term of his natural life, and from and immediately after his decease, I give and devise the same unto and the use of all and every the lawful issue of his said grandson, George Dangerfield, their heirs and assigns for ever, equally as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, when and as he or they shall attain his or their age of twenty-one years." In the said will was also contained a devise and bequest of the residue and remainder of the real and personal estate of the said testator, to the effect following, that is to say:—"Also I give and bequeath all my stock and utensils in trade, household furniture, plate, linen and china, and all other my real and personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, not hereinbefore by me otherwise disposed of, unto my said daughter Sarah, the wife of the said George Dangerfield, and for her sole separate use, benefit, and disposal, independent of and without being subject and liable to the debts, management, or engagements of her present, or any future husband that she may marry, in manner hereinbefore mentioned." Henry Taylor died seized soon after the date of his will, and on his death George Dangerfield, the devisee, entered, and being seized, he, on the 18th Jan. 1844, by an indenture of disentailure, continued the property in question to certain uses, under which the defendants have claimed to be entitled to the lands, and obtain possession of the deed in question. In July 1844, George Dangerfield died, never having had any issue. Sarah Dangerfield, the residuary devisee, died in 1837, and all her rights to the lands in question under the residuary devise, became vested in the plaintiffs. This action is brought for the conversion by the defendant of the deeds in question; and it is admitted that the verdict shall be entered for the plaintiffs, if under the circumstances they are entitled to the lands devised by George Dangerfield. The point therefore to be decided is, what estate George Dangerfield took. If he took an estate tail, then by the deed of disentailure the rights of all persons in remainder, including the plaintiff's own claims under Sarah Dangerfield, the residuary devisee, are barred, and the present action cannot be sustained. But if he took for life only, with remainder to his children as purchaser, then as he never had any issue in the estate, the plaintiffs as claiming under the residuary devise are entitled to possession, and will be entitled to recover in this action. The question, therefore, is one of those which are of very frequent occurrence; namely, whether the word "issue" is to be treated as a word of limitation or a word of purchase. The general rule in these cases is clear and well established; the word "issue" in a will prima facie, means the same thing as heirs of the body, and is to be considered as a word of limitation; but such prima facie construction will give way if there be on the face of the will sufficient to show that the word was intended to have had a less extensive meaning, and to have applied generally to children, or to descendants of a particular class, or at a particular time. Though, however, the rule thus stated is perfectly clear, yet its application is often very difficult; the question in each particular case is, what are the circumstances that in each case are to be considered sufficient to indicate that the word has been used in the restricted sense? Indeed the rule itself is one not more applicable to the word "issue" than it is to the words "heirs of the body," or indeed to any other word which can be suggested. In all cases the prima facie import of the words used by a testator is liable to be controlled or modified by the context; when it was once established that a devise to a man and his "issue," means the same thing as a devise to him and the "heirs of his body," it might have appeared reasonable to hold all the rules of construction applicable to the latter words, were applicable to the former also. Considering the great importance of adhering to general rules in the interpretation of wills, with the view of attaining to as much certainty and uniformity of decision as the subject admits, the Courts have been less reluctant to narrow the prima facie meaning of the word "issue" than the words "heirs of the body," and have done so in some cases so nearly resembling the present as to be incapable of being distinguished from it on any satisfactory ground. But we, without deciding what the construction would have been if the words "heirs of the body" had been used, feel ourselves bound to take the same course, and to hold that the grandson, George Dangerfield, took an estate for life. The case of Greenwood v. Rothwell (6 Mann. & Grainger, 628) is precisely in point; that was a devise to J. G. for his life, and after his death to all and every the issue of his body as tenants in common, and the heirs of such issue: under this devise the Court of Common Pleas decided that J. G. took an estate for life. That case is a distinct authority for holding that where there is a devise to one for life, and remainder to his issue as tenants in common, and remainder to the heirs general, the issue to take as purchasers in fee. It would be impossible to decide in the case before us that the grandson took an estate tail, without at the same time overruling the case of Greenwood v. Rothwell, but all the circumstances there, indicating that the word "issue" is a word of purchase and not of limitation, occur also in the case before us, with the further circumstance that in the present case the parties to take under the description of "issue," are only to take when and as they attain the age of twenty-one years, which brings the case very closely within the principle of Merrett v. James (1 Brod. & B. 484), where the gift over in case of the issue dying under twenty-one, was held of itself insufficient to shew that the word "issue" was used in its limited, and not in its general sense. Whether the decision in that case was quite satisfactory is not now in question, but it would be a strange thing where in the present case we find that where the qualification which in Greenwood v. Rothwell was sufficient to induce the Court to treat the word "issue" as a word of purchase, and also the words in Merrett v. James were construed to have the same effect, to hold that both these cases ought to be disregarded, and that acting upon some supposed rule of law, the more extended and legitimate meaning of the word "issue" must be adhered to. But it is not merely these two cases we should have to encounter, in deciding that the grandson took an estate tail; such a decision would be in direct opposition to the case of Lees v. Morey (1 Y. & Col. 589), in this Court. That was a devise to U. J. for life with a remainder to his lawful issue and their respective heirs, in such shares as U. J. should appoint, but in case U. J. should not marry, to U. J. when he should attain twenty-one, then to the testator's son to hold, and his heirs. The Court, after great deliberation, held the word "issue" there to be a word of purchase, and that U. J. took for life only. This decision proceeded on the ground that the issue were intended in default of appointment to take as tenants in common, and to take an estate in fee, but only in the event of their attaining twenty-one, and such circumstances were held sufficient to show that "issue" is used in its restricted, and not in its prima facie general meaning—descendants extending through all time. The Court, in those and similar cases, construed a devise over in default of issue as clearly meaning a devise over on a general failure of issue, and proceeding on that construction of a devise over, it was a very natural corollary that a general devise to issue must have been also intended to embrace all the issue, so as to make the objects of the devise over co-extensive with those, on failure of which the devise over was to take effect; and this might very fairly justify the Court in disregarding the circumstances, which, but for the devise over, would have had the effect of narrowing the prima facie effect of the word "issue." All the other cases relied on by the defendant would, on examination, be found either to have turned the words "heirs of the body" into the word "issue," or else to have wanted some circumstances which, in Merrett v. James, Lees v. Morey, and Greenwood v. Rothwell, were held to make the word "issue" a word of purchase, and not a word of limitation. Upon these authorities we feel bound to hold that the grandson, George Dangerfield, took for life only, and that, on his death, without having had issue, the residuary devise took effect. It may be right to advert to one matter contended for upon the argument at the Bar, namely, that in this case there was in fact a devise over, inasmuch as the residuary clause will carry all the interest not previously given to the issue; but this is founded altogether on fallacy. A gift over in the cases where it has been relied on, has always been a gift expressly in default of issue, and it is important in helping the Court to come to a decision: it depends entirely on the circumstances. That it is to take effect only in the failure of general issue, where the language has always been such as fairly to warrant the Court in saying that the devise over was to take effect only on the general failure of issue, and so reasoning backwards, to infer that in an original devise the word "issue" meant issue to all general issue, may be matter of doubt; but it is quite clear that none of the reasons on which in those cases the judges have proceeded, can be applied to a general residuary devise of all not previously disposed of. It can make no difference whether the interests in real estates are undisposed of, and are to be carried by the law to the heirs, or disposed of by the testator and the devisee. It remains only to advert to a point rather suggested than seriously argued; namely, that even taking George Dangerfield to have been tenant for life only, yet that the deed of disentailment had the same effect as a fine or recovery would formerly have had, in divesting a subsequent contingent estate, and so creating a tortious fee; but the answer given by the plaintiffs' counsel was conclusive. The deed would have had no such operation at common law, and its effect under the statute depends entirely upon its having been executed by a tenant in tail; and as we are of opinion that George Dangerfield was not tenant in tail, his deed can have no statutory operation. We are therefore of opinion, for the reasons we have already stated, that George Dangerfield took an estate for the term of his life only; and that on his death without having issue, the plaintiffs claiming under the residuary devise became entitled to the rents in question; consequently, they are entitled to our judgment in this action.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

WARD v. ROBINS.

In an action on the case for obstructing a water-course, the declaration set out a right to enjoy the water by means of a certain weir, which it alleged ought to have been kept at a certain height; and the breach was, that the defendant pulled down the said weir and placed it at a lower height, whereby the plaintiff was interrupted in his said right. To this the defendant pleaded a special plea, that he was the occupier of the close adjoining the said weir for the time being for twenty-one years next before the commencement of the suit, and now has the right, from time to time, as occasion may require, to lower the said weir, for the purpose of irrigating the said close for the beneficial enjoyment of the same. Held, on special demurrer, that the said plea was not bad as amounting to the general issue, on the ground that as the plea was framed on Lord Tenterden's Act, stating a title under that Act by prior and subsequent enjoyment together, it is not inconsistent with the plaintiff's alleged right at the time, and therefore was not an argumentative traverse, but was good by way of confession and avoidance.

This case was argued some time since, and as the facts of the case and the point decided appear so fully from the judgment of Parke, B. it is unnecessary to set them out here.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B.—This was an action on the case for obstructing a water-course. The plaintiff declares that he ought to have had and enjoyed, and still of right ought to have and enjoy, the benefit and advantage of a stream of water in the county aforesaid, which of right ought to have run and flowed by means of a weir, which weir ought to be kept at a certain height for the purpose of supplying the mill with water. The breach is, that the defendant, at a certain time, pulled down the weir, and placed and fixed the same at a much lower height than it ought to have been. And there is a special plea, as to the supposed pulling down the weir, and placing and fixing the same at such lower height, as in the declaration mentioned, and keeping it continually so placed, except as before at the said divers times that the defendant was the occupier of the said close, called Careless Close, adjoining the water-course, and as the occupier at the time being, of the said Close for a period of twenty-one years next before the commencement of this suit, now has the right, and without interruption had, from time to time, as occasion required, of removing part of the weir, and placing and fixing the same at a lower height than the rest of the said water, and keeping and continuing the said part of the said weir at such lower height as aforesaid, and thereby had the right of irrigating the said close for the beneficial enjoyment thereof. There is a demurrer to this plea, on the ground that it is an argumentative denial of so much of that part of the declaration to which it is pleaded, that the water of such stream or watercourse ought to have run and flowed by means of the said weir. We who heard the argument in this case, namely, my brothers Rolfe, Platt, and myself, have considered it, and are of opinion the plea is good. We came to the conclusion that the plea is not bad as an argumentative traverse, on the ground of the objection stated on special demurrer, on account of the peculiar nature of the right given by Lord Tenterden's Act, the twenty year enjoyment by the occupier. Such enjoyment, in order to give a right under that statute, must be up to the time of the commencement of the suit, not up to the time of the act complained of, consequently the enjoyment of twenty years or more before that act is only what may be termed an inchoate title, which may be concluded or not by an enjoyment subsequent, accordingly as the enjoyment is one not continued to the commencement of the suit. This apparent absurdity arises from a strict construction of the section that has already been fully considered by this Court in the case of Wright v. Willis (1 M. & W. 77), and the literal interpretation adhered to, the Court intimating its opinion that the mischief of such a construction was rather apparent; and the decision in that case was fully allowed and acted upon by the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Richard v. Fly (3 Nev. & Per. 67). The plea, therefore, which states an inchoate right at the time of the act complained of, and that such an incomplete right exist under the statute, gives an implied colourable title to the plaintiff at the time of the act complained of. It confesses a right at that time to have the weir at a certain height, but avoids that right by shewing that the defendant is then in such a position as that by matter subsequent he had such a right to pull down any part of the weir. Had the plea (as it might have done if the facts warranted it) stated a complete right in the defendant at the time of the act complained of, by known existing grant or prescription, it would certainly have been an argumentative traverse, as such being inconsistent with the plaintiff's right at the time to have the weir at the height claimed, it would have been bad without a special traverse of the plaintiff's right. But as the plea is founded on Lord Tenterden's Act only, no title under that Act can be absolutely good at the time of the Act, however old the possession might have been; but the stating a title under that Act by prior and subsequent enjoyment together, is not inconsistent with the plaintiff's alleged right at the time, and therefore is not an argumentative traverse, but is good by way of confession and avoidance. Our judgment is therefore for the defendant.

Judgment for the defendant.

LOAD and ANOTHER, v. GREEN and OTHERS, assignees of John Banister, a bankrupt.

In an action of trover against the assignees of a bankrupt, to recover certain goods, it appeared, that the bankrupt had, on the 1st of July, fraudulently bought the said goods of the plaintiff without any intention of ever paying for the same; immediately after the delivery of the goods he became bankrupt, and a fiat issuing against him, his assignees (the defendants) on the 8th of July, finding the goods on the premises of the bankrupt, seized the same as being in his order and disposition, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 74: Held, that the assignees were not entitled to the goods, as they were obtained by a fraudulent purchase of the bankrupt, and that the plaintiff had a right to disaffirm the sale, recover the property in the goods in themselves, and recover their value in an action of trover against the assignees.

This was an action of trover, brought to recover the value of certain silk and other goods. The defendant pleaded two pleas; first, not guilty; and secondly that the plaintiffs were not possessed of the said goods.

At the trial it appeared that the goods in question had been fraudulently purchased of the plaintiff by one John Banister (just before his bankruptcy), without any intention of paying for them. The goods were delivered to Banister, on the 4th of July, and on the 8th of the same month the defendants, as his assignees, seized the goods on his premises. The bankruptcy, it appeared, took place immediately after the delivery of the goods. The question was, whether the defendants, as assignees, had acquired a pro-party in the goods, as being within the order and disposition of the bankrupt, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, sec. 72, or whether the fraud which had been practised by the bankrupt prevented any property passing to him. A verdict was directed to be entered for the plaintiff, damages 107l. 6s. 6d. with leave for the defendants to move to enter a nonsuit or a verdict.

Humphrey obtained a rule nisi accordingly, against which Martin, Q. C. and Wordsworth, shewed cause, citing Miller v. Demetz (1 M. & R. 479); Ex parte Carlwio (2 Mont. & Ayr. 39); Noble v. Adams (7 Taunt. 59); Ferguson v. Carrington (3 C. & P. 457); Milwood v. Forbes (4 Esp. 171); Tooke v. Hollinsworth (5 Term R. 215); Sinclair v. Stevenson (2 Bing. 514).

Humphrey and Aspland, contra, cited Parker v. Parfick (5 Term R. 175); Wright v. Lawes (4 Esp. 82). Cv. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was, on the subsequent Term, delivered by PARKER, B.—This case was argued before the Lord Chief Baron, my brothers, Alderson, Platt, and myself during the last Term. It was an action of trover against the defendants who were assignees of the bankrupt to recover goods obtained from them by a fraudulent purchase from the plaintiff, without intending to pay for them. If the plaintiff has a right to recover in the suit by avoiding the contract on the ground of fraud, it would be upon the principle of the case of Noble v. Adams (7 Taunt. 59). The purchase took place on the 1st of July; the delivery of the goods on the 4th; the flat, under which the defendants were chosen assignees, issued on the 8th. The petitioning creditor's debt was contracted on the 4th of June; the act of bankruptcy took place on the 23rd of June; the assignees took possession of the goods, and having refused to deliver them up, the plaintiff brought this action. If the act of bankruptcy is taken to be on the 23rd of June, no further question can arise, but the defence of the assignees rests on the ground that they are entitled to the goods as having been in the possession of the bankrupt, the apparent owner, with the consent and full knowledge of the true owner, under the 72nd sec. of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. But to come within that section, the goods must have been in the bankrupt's possession at the time of the act of bankruptcy, or at the time of committing the act of bankruptcy; and if they did not come to him until afterwards, the statute does not apply. (Lyon v. Wilson, and Others, 2 Bing. 334.) If, however, our decision were to proceed on this ground, and we were of opinion that if the act of bankruptcy subsequent to the delivery, the assignees would have been bound to yield to the request of the defendant's counsel, and grant a rule for a new trial on the payment of costs, as at the trial we learned Judge had not his attention sufficiently called to the alleged act of bankruptcy on the 23rd of June. Our opinion, however, is that, assuming that the act of bankruptcy took place after the 4th of July, and that the goods must have been delivered, the assignees are not entitled; as the goods were obtained by a fraudulent purchase, and the plaintiff had a right to disaffirm it, reinvest the property in the goods, and to recover their value in an action of trover against the bankrupt; as the assignees took, by virtue of the assignment, and such interest only as that which the bankrupt had, the plaintiff had a right to recover the value of the goods in the hands of the assignees in the same form of action on a conversion by them, unless the assignees are entitled to these goods under the 72nd section. The question is, whether there was a case of apparent ownership at the time of the bankruptcy, with the consent of the true owner, within the meaning of the repealed Act, the 21 James, and the existing Act, that of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72: we think there was not. None of the cases cited and relied upon by the counsel on the behalf of the defendants decided that where goods are obtained by fraud before the act of bankruptcy, and are in the bankrupt's possession at that time, they pass to the assignees under the clause relating to apparent ownership. In Milward v. Forbes (4 Esp. 178), Lord Ellenborough's judgment proceeded on the ground that the property actually passed to the bankrupt by the sale under the circumstances of that case; and in Sinclair v. Stevenson (2 Bing. 514), the jury negatived fraud, and they also found, incorrectly, as it would seem, the transaction to be usurious; and though the Chief Justice, Lord Wynford, appears to have expressed an opinion that if goods were obtained by means of fraud, and were left in the bankrupt's possession by the true owner for a long time before the act of bankruptcy, the assignees would be entitled to them on the ground of apparent ownership; that dictum was extra-judicial, and the Court did not decide the case on that ground. In Halswell v. Esat (3 Term R. 231), the case was decided on the ground that the property actually passed to the bankrupt, and not only by apparent ownership. Not being bound by the decisions, we must consider whether the case falls within the principle of the 21 Jac.; the meaning of this section is well explained by Mr. Baron Richards in Joy v.

Campbell (Scho. & Lef. 336). In construing the analogous Irish Act, his Lordship says it refers to chattels which are in the order and disposition of any person who is not the owner, and to whom they did not properly belong, and who ought not to have had them, and who had been permitted by the owner unconsciously to have such order and disposition, the object was to prevent deceit by a trader by goods being left in his possession to which he was not entitled; but in the construction of the Act the nature of the possession of the property must be considered, and the words must be construed to mean possession of the goods, and with the consent of the true owner. In order, therefore, to bring this case within the statute, there must be a real owner distinct from the apparent owner, and the real owner must consent to the apparent ownership of another as such. In this case, the plaintiff did not consent to the apparent ownership, as such he never contemplated permitting the bankrupt to obtain credit by means of possession and ownership of property which really did not belong to him, but intended to part with the property itself, and divest himself altogether of all right thereto; and though in consequence of the bankrupt's fraud upon him he had a right to annul the contract, the right did not exist until after the bankruptcy. Consequently, at the time of the act of bankruptcy on which the title of the assignees depends, the bankrupt was not the apparent owner, but the real owner; therefore the statute does not apply. It is to be understood these observations are not meant to affect that class of cases in which the real owner of goods gets into possession only by the interest of the bankrupt, as where he releases the bankrupt under such circumstances that the bankrupt would of necessity carry with him the reputation of absolute ownership. These cases proceed upon the principle that the true ownership and the apparent ownership of the bankrupt are contrary to truth, because it is the result of the consent which the plaintiff gave whether it would, in this particular case, fall within the statute, as where there was a delivery in fraud long before the action brought, and he omitted within a reasonable time to avail himself of the right to rescind the contract, is no question in the present case; for the act of bankruptcy follows the sale and delivery within a short time, and it was mainly on that ground the opinion of Lord Wynford proceeded in the case referred to. The judgment must, therefore, be for the plaintiff, and the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

COLLINS v. HOPWOOD.

Excise Act—Qui tam action—Jurisdiction of Courts at Westminster.

Who may sue for penalties for delivering sacks of coal deficient in weight, under 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 76, when the number of sacks deficient, in respect of one transaction, exceeds five.

This was a demurrer to a declaration. The declaration stated that the defendant was a seller of coal; carrying on his business at a certain wharf within 25 miles of the General Post-office of the City of London, and that he sold to the plaintiff, at the said wharf, two tons of coal, to be delivered to him in sacks; that he then sent from the said wharf to the house of the plaintiff in Broad-street, Westminster, in the county of Middlesex, a quantity of coal in twenty sacks, as and for the said two tons of coal, with a ticket stating that each sack contained 224 pounds of coal, as required by the Act; that the plaintiff thereupon required the carman to weigh seventeen of such sacks, and procured the attendance of a credible and indifferent person to be present at the weighing; that the said seventeen sacks were accordingly weighed, and each of such sacks contained less than 224 pounds weight of coal, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, whereby, and by force of the statute in such case made, and provided, the defendant forfeited, for his said offence, the sum of five pounds for every such sack of coal so found deficient as aforesaid, then and there amounting, in the whole, to eighty-five pounds.

Demurrer, for that the penalties for which the declaration proceeds are under the provisions of 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 76, which imposes these penalties, recoverable only before a justice of the peace, and that an action of debt does not lie.

Scotland, in support of the demurrer contended, that the proceedings should have been before a justice of the peace, as the penalties in respect of each sack could not exceed 5l. and the statute provided that all penalties not exceeding 25l. should be recoverable before a justice of the peace. Even if the whole forfeiture was to be regarded as one penalty, the party must go before a justice, because the statute authorized the mitigation of the penalty, which could only be done by a justice of the peace.

By the Court.—The plaintiff is entitled to judgment. This is one penalty, the number of sacks delivered regulating the possible amount of forfeiture, which may exceed the sum over which the magistrate has jurisdiction. Reece qui tam v. Poole is, in principle, a direct authority in favour of the plaintiff.

REG. v. WOODBRUFFE.

Liability of a person having adulterated tobacco in his possession, under stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 93.

In this case an information had been laid against the defendant for having in his possession a quantity of manufactured cut tobacco, with which sugar and other saccharine matter was mixed, the proceedings being taken under the provisions of the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53. The information having been dismissed by the justices of petty sessions of the borough of Yarmouth, the excise officer appealed to the quarter sessions, who dismissed the appeal, subject to a special case stated by the justices of quarter sessions, for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer. Two questions were raised by the special case for the decision of the Court—1st. As to the validity of the notices of appeal, and of trial of the appeal; and, 2nd. Whether the defendant could be convicted under the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 93, s. 3, of having in his possession adulterated tobacco; it appearing that the defendant, although having such tobacco actually in his possession, was not aware that it was adulterated in the manner prohibited by the Act.

Jas. Wilde, for the Crown, contended, 1st. That the notices of appeal and trial were regular and sufficient, according to the statutes 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, ss. 82, 83, and 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, ss. 22, 23. 2ndly, He argued on the merits that the very object of the Legislature in passing the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 93, is to prevent possession of adulterated tobacco by intentionally stringent enactments, and to throw upon the party charged with this particular offence the onus of shewing that the tobacco in his possession is not so adulterated as charged. He argued that the last-mentioned Act was passed for the protection of the public, and that consequently the Court would give its provisions full effect, notwithstanding any private hardship which might be caused by so doing; and, lastly, he observed, that from the facts stated in the special case it was clear that the defendant had the tobacco in his possession knowingly, and therefore it lay upon him to prove in answer to the information that it was not adulterated. He cited, The Attorney-General v. Lockwood (9 M. & W. 568); Rees v. Marsh (4 Dowl. & Ry. 261); and referred to the recent proceedings in The Attorney-General v. Smith, in which the defendants (distillers) were convicted of an infraction of the Excise Laws.

Crompton, for the defendant, argued that the notices were irregular, and that great hardship and injustice would be occasioned by a strict construction and application of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 93. He cited Bateman's Excise Laws, 123.

Wilde, in reply, was stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C.B.—A reference to the stat. 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 22, 23, will shew that the objections raised to the validity of the notices are unavailing. Then as to the more important question, viz. whether the defendant in the present case has been guilty of a violation of the Excise Laws—he knew that he was in possession of this tobacco—then, by the Act, persons dealing in this article are required to use proper caution, and are made responsible if it be of a specified description, that is to say, adulterated by an admixture of sugar or saccharine matter. The defendant was bound to examine the tobacco, before he suffered it to come into his possession, or he might have protected himself against the consequences of its proving to be adulterated by requiring a guarantee from the vendor. The 3rd section of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 93, is very stringent, and applies even where the party in possession of adulterated tobacco was not aware when it came into his possession, or subsequently that it was so adulterated. The offence has been fully brought home to the defendant.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Order of Sessions quashed, and defendant convicted in the mitigated penalty of 50l.

Motion to enter a nonsuit.

This was an action on a banker's cheque, and there was only one count in the declaration which was in the usual form. At the trial the plaintiff had a verdict. Damages, 386l.

Crowder, Q.C. now moved (pursuant to leave reserved) to enter a nonsuit; he stated that the question would turn on the Stamp Act. It appeared that at the trial a document was tendered in evidence, which, in form, resembled an ordinary banker's cheque, drawn on Messrs. John Brown and Company; it was objected to on the ground that there were no bankers in London trading under the firm of John Brown and Co. and, therefore, it did not come within the exemption in favour of bankers in the Stamp Act (55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 18), but required a stamp. It was then sought on the part of the plaintiff to shew that John Brown and Co. acted as bankers, although not registered at Somerset House under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 39, s. 21. The evidence, however, only went to show that similar cheques had been taken to the office of Brown and Co., and had been paid "over the counter." On the other hand, a witness was called on the part of the defendant, who stated that Brown and Co. were bill brokers, and not bankers, but that he had bought cheques of them, two or three at a time; and had drawn on them, paying in money to meet each transaction: he, however, kept no account with them, or had any pass-book, and the whole mode of dealing was alleged to be fraudulent; for when the cheques were paid away they were crossed, so as to render it necessary to pay them through a banker, and so a day's credit was obtained. [POLLOCK, C.B.—Do not many of the foreign agents pay cheques drawn on them in this way—any agents for instance?] No doubt; but they keep funds of the party so drawing, and act in all respects as bankers. The question really is, did Brown and Co. act as bankers so as to come within the exemption in the Stamp Act?

RAMSBOTTOM V. DUCKWORTH.

Motion to enter a verdict for the plaintiff.

This was an action of replevin for taking certain goods of the plaintiff. The defendant avowed the taking as for a church-rate made in a certain chapelry, of which he was the chapel-warden. At the trial a verdict was directed for the defendant, with leave for the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for 3l. 3s., which was the value of the goods taken.

Martin, Q.C., now moved accordingly on several grounds. 1st. That the rate under which the defendant justified the taking was bad, as being made on the landowners only in the chapelry, and not the whole of the property in the chapelry. (See 1 Burn's Justice, 648, and Ambrose v. Hutton, 1 H. Bl. 644.) 2nd. That the proceedings were wrong, as it was not stated on the face of the plea, that the examination of the persons upon whose complaint the rate was ordered to be paid by the justices (under 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7) was upon oath, but only that they were "duly" examined. This, it was contended, was not sufficient; and Re Gray (2 Dowl. & Low. 539) was cited. It was also objected that there was a variance between the statement of the person to whom the debt was due and the proof; and also that it was not alleged that the warrant (which was directed to the constable of Eaglesfield) was executed by him.

WALLER V. BLACKLOCK.

Motion to review the Master's taxation.

In this case it appeared issue had been joined, and the cause entered for trial at the Summer Assizes for 1844, but was made a remand. In 1845 the defendant made an application to a judge at chambers to be allowed to amend one of his pleas, which was pleaded only to a part of the declaration, and to be allowed to plead it generally to the whole declaration. This was opposed by the plaintiff, but the learned judge allowed the amendment on payment of the costs of, and occasioned by, such amendment. These were accordingly paid, and the amendment made the cause went down for trial, when a verdict was found for the defendant on the amended plea, which went to the whole cause of action, but the issues on the other pleas were for the plaintiff. On the taxation of costs, the Master allowed the defendant the general costs of the trial, but refused to allow him his costs at the previous assizes, when the cause was made a remand, but, on the other hand, allowed the plaintiff all his costs at that assize.

Cocking now moved for a rule, calling on the Master to review his taxation, and contended that there was nothing in this case to take it out of the rule, that where a cause is made a remand, the party ultimately succeeding is entitled to the costs of preparing to go to trial at the assizes at which the cause is made a remand, as well as those of the trial.

ELLIS V. HOZIER.

New trial.

This was an action before the Sheriff of Middlesex; verdict for the plaintiff; damages, 10l. 10s.

H. Wilde now moved to enter a verdict for the defendant, or for a nonsuit, on the ground of misdirection. The action was brought by the master of a club for the arrears of a subscription alleged to be due from the defendant as a member thereof. The only evidence against the defendant was that of a man named Sainsbury, who stated, that in 1841, a person of the same name as the defendant had been elected a member of the club; this the learned Under Sheriff ruled was sufficient to entitle the master of the club to recover the arrears of subscription. It was now submitted that there was not sufficient evidence that the defendant was the person who was so elected; also, that the master could not sue by himself for the arrears of subscriptions of the members; and also on the construction of the rules of the club, which had been put in at the trial.

PARKER V. PERRY.

A notice of declaration describing the declaration as in debt where the writ was issued on promises is irregular, and the Court, on motion, will set aside such notice. Regularity of affidavit taken before a country commissioner, one of a firm acting as defendant's attorneys.

Atherton showed cause against a rule obtained by Greaves, to set aside the notice of declaration given by the plaintiff in the above case; it appeared that the writ was on promises, whereas the notice described the declaration as being in debt. Atherton contended, first, that the affidavit on which the rule nisi had been moved, could not properly be used, inasmuch as it had been sworn in the country before a commissioner who was a member of the firm, acting as attorneys for the defendant in the matter of this application; as to this he referred to Kidd v. Davis (5 Dowl. P. C. 568); secondly, he argued that the application ought to have been to set aside the declaration, and not merely the notice of declaration; he cited Robinson v. Errington (9 Dowl. P. C. 107) to show that the application to set aside the notice and the declaration would have been justified.

Greaves, in support of his rule, observed that the defendant could make no other application than the present, because he could not ascertain whether the declaration was correct or not, except by taking it out of the office where it had been filed, which would, if it proved to be correct, amount to a waiver of the irregularity in the notice; he cited Beaumont v. Dean, (4 Dowl. 354.)

By the COURT.—The first objection which has been taken by Mr. Atherton is answered by the fact, that the attorney's name is not on the record at the present stage of this cause, and it does not sufficiently appear, that the party before whom the affidavit was sworn, acted for defendant at the commencement of the cause. (Doe v. Roe, 5 Dowl. P. C. 409.) As to the second point, the plaintiff's course is clear; if the declaration is right, he must give a new notice; if wrong, he must give a new notice, and declare in the proper form of action.

Tuesday, May 5.

BOYLE V. BRANDON.—This was an action for seduction. Pleas: 1, the general issue; 2, accord and satisfaction; 3, leave and license. The jury found for the defendant on all the issues thus raised; but Kennedy having obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection as to the first issue, Watson, Q.C. consented, on behalf of the defendant, that the verdict should be entered for the plaintiff upon this issue, and for the defendant upon the two other issues. Kennedy subsequently obtained a rule, calling on the defendant to show cause why the Master should not tax the plaintiff's costs on the first issue, as the general costs of the cause, and why the defendant should not pay such taxed costs without deducting his costs on the two other issues. Watson, Q.C. now showed cause against the above-mentioned rule, citing Goodman v. Lane (1 M. & W. 156); Cox v. Raisin (7 Dowl. 203); Jervis's Rules, 366, 367; and Kennedy having thereupon admitted that he could not support his rule, it was discharged. Rule discharged.

CUTLER V. PELLETIER.—Hindmarsh now showed cause against a rule obtained by Fitzherbert, calling on the plaintiff to show cause why he should not be at liberty to sign judgment for 50l. debt, 1s. damages, and 40s. costs, and why the cause should not be referred back to the arbitrator, or why the verdict should not be set aside, or such other order made, as to the Court should seem fit. The Court, without calling upon Fitzherbert, made the rule absolute for entering judgment for 50l. The costs of the cause to follow the award. Rule absolute.

MONEYPENNY V. DEERING.—The arguments in this special case, which was sent by Vice-Chancellor Wigram for the opinion of this Court, and which was part heard on Wednesday, April 29, were this day concluded. Cur. adv. vult.

HAIGH V. PAVIS.—Rule nisi for a nonsuit, or for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

Wednesday, May 6.

BEADLE V. MURRAY.—M. Chambers, Q.C. moved on behalf of the plaintiff in the above action to bring back the venue to London, on affidavits stating the plaintiff's belief that an impartial trial could not be had in Hertfordshire, the defendant being a magistrate of that county, and possessed of considerable property therein, as well as local influence, and some of the principal witnesses belonging to the rural police force for the above mentioned county. The Court, however, thought that the affidavit in support of the motion did not disclose a sufficient ground for their intention to the manner required by the plaintiff, and refused to act.

BLUNDELL V. YATES.—Stammers showed cause upon the rule nisi for a new trial in this case, which had been obtained by Charnock (April 17). The question was whether evidence adduced for the defendant was sufficient to establish his plea of set-off. Rule nisi.

O'BRIEN V. CLEMENT.—Lord moved for a rule nisi to set aside an order of Platt, D. made in this case, and not to be reconsidered. The action was for a libel published in a newspaper, and the order of the learned Judge was, in defendant should be at liberty to plead the two issues;—1st, not guilty; 2nd, as to part of the libel, apology in the declaration set forth under stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 2, together with payment into Court. Rule nisi.

LEE V. DREW.—Thomas showed cause against a new trial in this case. The action was against the master of a bill of exchange, to whom it appeared that great dishonour had been given by the drawer; the being, however, no evidence to show that the drawer had given notice by order or request of the plaintiff, the Court, on calling upon Pigott to support his rule, held, that the rule was clearly insufficient. Rule nisi.

WEDGATE V. HILL.—Humphrey, Q.C. showed cause against a rule obtained by Butt, Q.C. calling on the plaintiff to give security for costs, or for a stay of proceedings until default of his so doing. The case involved no point of slightest interest. Humphrey cited Dingle v. Andrew (Dowl. 596).—Butt in support of his rule. Rule discharged.

COLGRAVE V. SUMMERTON.—Pigott showed cause upon the rule obtained by Huddleston in this case (April 2). Rule absolute.

FILBY V. HODGSON.—In this case Humphrey, Q.C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The verdict had been for the defendant, and the question arising turned on the sufficiency of evidence as to reputed relationship. The Court now intimated that there would be time to show cause. Rule to show cause.

HOLFORD V. BODY.—Crawford, Q.C. showed cause against a rule obtained by Jervis, Q.C. to set aside the award in the above case, or for a reference back to the arbitrator in so far as he might state matters of law for the opinion of the Court. The Court made the rule absolute, with power to the arbitrator to enlarge the time for making his award. Rule absolute.

CASTLEMAN V. CAPPER.—Crawford, Q.C. and Glyn, showed cause (May 1 and May 5) against a rule which had been obtained by Jervis, Q.C. for a new trial in this case, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence and misdirection. The action was on a policy of marine insurance, and the question was, whether a construction of the loss of the vessel insured had or had not been proved by the plaintiff. The argument turned on sources on the materiality to have been proved by either party, and about which there seemed considerable uncertainty, and the Court, on the hearing Jervis, Q.C. and Martin, Q.C. (James Wile, with them), in support of the rule, made it absolute. The Chief Baron, who presided at the trial, expressing in due satisfaction with the verdict. Rule absolute.

REG. V. THE INHABITANTS OF NORSFRET, SALOP. Motion to quash certiorari which has issued upon an affidavit, which omitted in the first the words "before me."

REG. V. THE JUSTICES OF CHESTER.

Mandamus to justices to hear an appeal—Service of notice of appeal.

Townsend moved for a mandamus, directing the above justices to enter continuances, and hear an appeal against an order of bastardy. This was an appeal under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 4, and upon the trial the appellant proved the service of his notice, by showing that it was left at the usual place of residence of the respondent. The justices, however, held this to be insufficient, and that the service of the notice ought to have been personal.—Reg. v. The Justices of the North Riding (1 New Sess. Ca. 574). Rule nisi.

Friday, May 1.

(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

REG. V. THE JUSTICES OF WORCESTERSHIRE. It is no excuse for not serving the notice of recognizance, under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 3, until many days after the recognizance has been entered into, that the party could not be found to be served personally, as the notice may be left at the party's dwelling-house, and sent by post.

Beadon moved for a rule for a mandamus, directing the above justices to enter continuances, and hear the appeal of one James Lowe, against an order in bastardy. The order in question was made on the 10th of March, 1846, whereupon notice of appeal was duly given. On the following 14th the appellant entered into the recognizance, as required by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 3, and gave the notice (as required by the same section), to one William Hayon, on Monday, the 16th, to be by him served on the mother. Hayon attempted to serve her with it personally on the 19th, 21st, 23rd, and 28th, following, but met finding her home he was unsuccessful; on the 21st, however, he met her, and then delivered it to her. On the appeal pending on for trial, it was objected, on the part of the respondent, that the notice of recognizance was not served in time, the 3rd section of the above enactment requiring that "the party entering into any such recognizance shall forthwith give or send a notice in writing of his having so entered into such recognizance to the woman in whose favour the said order shall have been made." * * * Provided that the sending of such notice or notices by the post shall be taken to be sufficient." The justices being of opinion that the notice had not been given, dismissed the appeal. It was now contended that the justices were wrong, inasmuch as the word "forthwith" must be taken to mean within a reasonable time, and that in the present case all due diligence had been used to serve the woman with the notice. (Reg. v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 7 Dowl. 789.)

COLERIDGE, J.—I think that the justices in this case acted perfectly right. The section says that the notice is to be served forthwith: that is, without any delay which the circumstances do not justify; and here the delay is attempted to be excused on the ground that the woman could not be found in order to be personally served before the 31st March, but the section says expressly, that it is not necessary to serve the party personally, and here there is really nothing to shew why the woman was not served according to the statute, by sending the notice to her through the post, and they might therefore have served it by leaving it at the dwelling-house on the 16th. It is a general rule, that, where no particular mode of service is pointed out, a notice may always be served at the party's dwelling-house, and they might have done so in the present case; this, however, they do not do, but delay the service until they can effect it personally, which is not until the 31st.

Saturday, May 2.

THE QUEEN v. THE RECORDER OF KING'S LYNN.
Is an order of removal, if it be clearly shewn that the justices received the complaint within their jurisdiction, and nothing appears to the contrary, it will be intended (without any express allegation) that they also made their adjudication within their jurisdiction.

An adjudication which states it to have been made upon due proof upon oath as otherwise is good, as it will be intended that the words "as otherwise" mean legal proof.

The whole of the adjudication should be read together, so that one part may explain and support another.

Palmer shewed cause against a rule calling upon the recorder of King's Lynn to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue requiring him to return an order of quarter sessions, together with an order of removal confirmed by the same, in order that the said orders might be quashed. The order of removal against which the objection existed was in the ordinary form, and commenced as follows:—

"Upon complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Margaret, in the borough of King's Lynn, aforesaid, unto us whose names and seals are hereunto set, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said borough * * * We, the said justices, upon due proof made thereof, as well upon the examination of the said Sarah Wray, of Sarah Harrison, and of James Hubbard upon oath, as otherwise upon due consideration had of the premises, do adjudge the same to be true. And we do likewise adjudge that the lawful settlement of them, Sarah Wray and the said children, is in the township of Bowling, in the parish of Bradford, in the county of York," &c.

This rule was obtained on the three following grounds—1st, because it does not appear that the justices acted within their jurisdiction; 2nd, because, from the words "as well upon oath as otherwise," it might have been that the justices made their adjudication upon evidence not taken upon oath; 3rd, because it does not appear that the adjudication of the place of settlement was made upon oath.

To the first objection it was answered, that it sufficiently appeared, particularly from the name in the margin, and the whole context, that the justices (who were justices for the borough) were acting within their jurisdiction. (R. v. Casterton, 14 L.J., M.C. 5; R. v. Stockton-upon-Tees, 14 L.J., M.C. 28; R. v. Austen, 8 Mod. 309.) To the second objection, that the words "as otherwise" must be taken to mean "otherwise upon oath," for which there is the express authority of the judgment of the Court in Rev. v. Luffe (8 East, 193), in which Lord Ellenborough said, in speaking of an order described to have been made upon the oath of the said Mary Taylor as otherwise, "it is true that it is not said 'as otherwise upon oath,' but as no evidence can properly be given otherwise than upon oath, it is not going further in making an intendment to support this order than has been done in other cases, to say that such other evidence must also be taken to have been given upon oath." (Rev. v. Fawcington, 2 T.R. 471; Rev. v. Kempton (Covp. 241, Nolan, 4th edit. 233; Rev. v. Brith, 8 East, 636). To the third objection, that the adjudication of the place of settlement, when taken in connection with the stamping part of the order, evidently appears to have been made upon evidence taken upon oath. (Rev. v. Crisp, 7 East, 389.)

Dundas, Q.C. and Metcalf, contra, contended, first, that it did not sufficiently appear that the justices, at the time they made their order, were acting within the borough of King's Lynn, for, from anything appearing to the contrary, they may have gone out of the borough, and have made the order. (R. v. Casterton, supra; R. v. Stockton, supra; 2nd, that the natural position of the words shews that the meaning of the order is, that the evidence was taken upon oath and by other means. (R. v. Buckinghamshire, 14 L.J. M.C. 45); 3rd, that the sentence commencing the adjudication of the place of settlement being distinct from the foregoing part of the order, it does not appear to have been taken upon any evidence whatever.

Carrow, amicus curie, mentioned the case of R. v. Rotherham (3 Q.B. 776).

COLERIDGE, J.—I think this rule ought to be discharged. With regard to the two last points, they are quite settled by the various authorities that have been quoted. As to the first point, the same objection was taken in The Queen and Rotherham, and although it is said that this objection was not much relied upon in that case, I am satisfied that it was fully argued. It appears that the form of the order in the present case is that which has been in use for a great many years, and is the same given in Burn's Justice by Doyley and Williams, which is certainly, therefore, entitled to great weight, and is like the form in the Rotherham case, in which Lord Denman, in giving judgment, said, "Upon the first point (the form of the original order) the Court gave sufficient answers to the various objections which were urged in the course of the argument, which we do not consider it needful to repeat. We shall now only add that we certainly should not be induced upon slight grounds to overturn a form of proceeding which we have reason to believe has been established by the usage of very near a century." As regards the second objection, unless this case can be distinguished from Luffe's case, that is an authority which I shall abide by; but it is said that this is not distinguishable from The Queen and Buckinghamshire, and that according to that case the second objection is clearly sustainable. Now it is clear to me that Luffe's case had been cited in The Queen and Buckinghamshire, with the judgment of Lord Ellenborough, my brother Wightman would not have overruled it. It must be remembered, in considering this objection, that it must greatly depend upon the doctrine of intendment, and it is certainly more reasonable to intend that the words "as otherwise" mean upon legal proof, than that they meant he reverse. I have heard nothing which shews that The King and Luffe is not a good authority, and I think it is precisely in point. Then as to the third objection. It must be borne in mind that this is the same form which has been in use for centuries, and although it is said that in some very late forms, this one is varied, yet this arises more from the greater nicety in modern times than from any legal necessity; and the whole order ought to be looked at, and then it will be apparent that the adjudication of the place of settlement is made upon the evidence which is referred to in the former part of the order. No one can then doubt that as to the complaint, it is made to two justices of the borough, and that it is taken within the borough; but it is said, what was to prevent the justices, after having received the complaint within the borough, from going out of it to make their adjudication? Why, to suppose that they may have done so, would be to intend something which we ought not to intend, and for which there is no foundation. The proper inference is, that the parties having come within the borough to make complaint, the adjudication was made there also; and no place in particular being mentioned as the place where it was made, the fair inference is, that the whole was made at the only place mentioned in the order. The rule, therefore, must be discharged.

Rule discharged with costs.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.

Mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal where the appeal had been dismissed by the Sessions in consequence of the appellants having mistaken the name of one of the removing justices who had signed his name very illegibly.

Chambers, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus directing the above justices to enter continuances, and hear an appeal between the parishes of St. Pancras and Hackney against an order of removal. The appellant parish, owing to the illegible manner in which one of the justices had subscribed his name, had made a mistake in describing the order, upon which the Sessions refused to hear the appeal.

Bankrupt—Commitment for not answering satisfactorily—Sufficiency of warrant.

Allen, Serjt.—moved for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up into this Court a bankrupt who had been committed to prison by the bankrupt commissioner of the Leeds district. He was committed for not giving satisfactory answers; and the objection to the warrant was, that it did not specify which of the answers were unsatisfactory. He also insisted that the learned commissioner was wrong in holding, as a matter of fact, that the answers were unsatisfactory.

COLERIDGE, J.—This rule must be discharged. The case is distinguishable from the case cited. There the warrant, after setting out the questions and answers, stated, "several of which answers not being satisfactory," &c. and the Court held that it was bad for uncertainty; but here the objection does not arise, for the warrant refers to all the answers generally as not being satisfactory, and not merely to certain of them; and the case is like the case of Ex parte Dauncey, 4 Q. B. 671, where such a warrant was held to be good. Then, with regard to the fact, if I could see clearly that the answers were satisfactory, I might feel myself called upon to discharge the bankrupt, but in cases of this description, a judge would be slow to set his own judgment against that of the commissioner, who had the bankrupt before him, and had better means, from all the circumstances, of forming a correct judgment; but I must say, I think the commissioner was right in this case; for however satisfactory some of the answers may appear when viewed by themselves, I must say that the examination appears to me, when viewed as a whole, to be altogether entirely unsatisfactory.

Rule refused.

R. v. GRUNDY AND THREE OTHERS.

Pashley moved for a mandamus against a person of the name of Grundy, and three others, to compel them to produce to the applicants, the justice's warrant under which they are appointed overseers of the poor of the township of Kirkby Lonsdale, in the county of Westmorland. The applicants were ratepayers of the township, and the object they had in view was to question the legality and sufficiency of the appointment, and by that means to quash it. The main objection was, that Grundy was not a substantial householder, and they had reason to believe that this fatal objection to the validity of his appointment appeared upon the face of the document. It was important to the applicant that this document should not be kept back, and very desirable that this Court should enforce its production, instead of allowing the parties, by refusing to produce it, practically to oust the Court of its jurisdiction. (R. v. Great Farrington (9 B. & C. 541). The importance of having this matter discussed was shewn by a very recent case in the Queen's Bench, R. v. Bradford, in Wiltshire, where a question was raised, though not determined, as to the validity of an order of removal thirty years old, made by parties whose appointment to the office of overseers of the poor was, upon the face of it, illegal and void. As it was impossible to say which of the four overseers might have the custody of the appointment, it was submitted that the rule ought to be against all four. It appeared from Burn's Justice, title Poor, p. 33, that the appointment might be removed, and that the Court would look at its validity. (R. v. Justices of Staffordshire, 6 N.E. 84, 89; R. v. Chapman, 1 Wilson, 305; R. v. Sherry, 3 T.R.; R. v. Hull, 7 Dow. 690; R. v. Dawson, 2 Dow. N.S. 20).

DOE dem. HAXBY v. PRESTON AND ANOTHER.

This was a rule to set aside an award of R. M. Matthew, esq. Barrister-at-law.

Addon shewed cause, and on opening the case proposed to read a copy of the arbitrator's notes, verified by the affidavit of his clerk.

Martin, Q.C. (Rev with him) would not object to this being read if the judge thought it right; but the copy, in strictness, could not be evidence, and he submitted that an arbitrator ought not to be called upon to produce his notes; and if this was so, they certainly ought not to be obtained through the medium of the clerk.

COLERIDGE, J.—Arbitrators, and especially when they are gentlemen at the bar, very properly refuse to make any affidavit, and you must not obtain that indirectly from the clerk which you cannot get directly from the master. I cannot allow the notes to be read.

The case was then proceeded with without the notes.

ROWBOTTOM v. BULL.

A judicial reproof of the practice of drawing tricky demurrers and frivolous pleas.

Hawkins showed cause against a rule to set aside a declaration as frivolous.

Butt, Q.C. contra. Cur. adv. vult.
In this case Mr. Justice COLERIDGE made the following forcible observations in condemnation of counsel leading themselves to assist parties in false or frivolous pleading:—"I do marvel that gentlemen who would kick an attorney out of their chambers if he desired any thing wrong in an ordinary way, will, nevertheless, consent to draw tricky demurrers and frivolous pleas. The practice degrades the counsel and special pleader, and makes them ministers of gross injustice, and parties to the frauds of other persons."

AUSTER V. HOLLAND.

Where a trustee under a deed of separation refuses to bring an action to recover the annuity to the wife, secured by such deed, and an indemnity is offered, the Court will not, at the instance of the defendant, set aside the proceedings in an action brought against him in the name of such trustee, even though it is sworn that such action is brought against the wish and consent of such trustee.

Lush showed cause against a rule to set aside the writ of summons, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground that the action had been commenced without the sanction of the plaintiff, and against her express wish. It appeared that the defendant and his wife having agreed to separate, a deed was executed whereby the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff, as trustee, to pay her, for his wife's use, the annual sum of 40l. by monthly payments. Five of those payments being in arrear, the defendant was frequently applied to for them, and not being paid, the present plaintiff was requested to sue for them, and an indemnity was offered her; she, however, declined to do so, whereupon this action was commenced in her name. The present motion was made at the instance of the defendant. It was now argued, that under the circumstances, the action was rightly brought in the trustee's name, it being the only means whereby the annuity could be recovered, she having herself refused to bring the action, and an indemnity having been offered to her. (Chambers v. Donaldson, 9 East, 471, per Lord Ellenborough; Spicer v. Todd, 2 Cramp. & Jer.)

Gray was called upon to support his rule, and contended, that in such a case as this, which he urged was distinguishable from those quoted (particularly as no collusion was shown to exist between the plaintiff and the defendant), the trustee had a discretion to exercise which the Court would not control. (Robson v. Euton, 1 T. R. 62.) That a payment in such an action so brought against the consent of the plaintiff, would be no answer in an action subsequently brought by the same plaintiff for the same amount. (Hubbard v. Phillips, 14 L. J. Ex. 103.) That the only remedy to compel the trustee to sue is in equity.

Coleridge, J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. It is an application to set aside the proceedings in an action brought at the instance of the wife to recover the amount due under a deed of separation, and the ground of the motion is, that the action is commenced without the sanction of the plaintiff, who is the trustee for the wife under the deed. It is suggested that there is collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant, and I think that the facts of the case, rather than the statements in the affidavits, shew that this is really so, because the defendant knows that unless the plaintiff sues he cannot be sued at all, and therefore comes himself to take advantage of her disinclination to proceed, and she, on her part, knowing that she is the proper person to sue; and having had an indemnity offered to her, gives no reason why she will not interfere, but merely declines, so that it is pretty clear that she has either some feeling for the defendant or some against his wife, which induces her to abstain from taking those steps which are required of her. There is really no hardship upon her in this action being brought against her consent, because it appears that she has been offered an indemnity which she does not accept, nor does she even come to this court to complain of the action. If she really objects to the proceeding, she knows that the rule is to apply to this Court, and therefore if the action is not really brought with her good will, it certainly must be taken to be carried on with her sanction. Rule discharged with costs.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF REVIEW.

April 12 and 20.

EX PARTE LANE re LONDON.

Joint and separate estate.—Statute of Frauds.

Where A was a creditor of B, and B and C entered into partnership, and, by verbal agreement among the parties, A was treated as the creditor of B and C, such an agreement was held not to be affected by the Statute of Frauds, and B and C having subsequently become bankrupts, A was permitted to prove against the joint estate.

In this case a debt was due to the petitioner, Miss Lane, from her uncle Mr. William Lendon the elder, a currier, at Exeter. In 1838 a partnership was entered into between William Lendon the elder, and his son William Lendon the younger, but no articles of partnership were executed on that occasion. There was an alteration in the banker's books of the name of the account, but the terms of the partnership were only agreed upon in vague conversations between the partners. The debt due to Miss Lane was alleged by the petition to have been subsequently treated as a debt due from the partnership, and the present petition was for liberty to prove on account of the debt against the joint estate of the Lendons, who had become bankrupt. The petitioner, and Mr. Lendon the younger were examined videlicet at some length. Snoadson, Terrell, Russell, Bacon, and Kingslake, for the different parties.

The following cases were cited: Thomson v. Percival, Ex parte Clover (2 Bro. C. C. 595); Ex parte Parker (2 Mont. Dea. & De Gex, 511); Ex parte Kodie (2 D. & C. 321); Devaynes v. Noble (1 Mer. 591).

The CHIEF JUDGE.—If A is creditor of B, and B and C propose to enter, or have entered, into partnership together, and address themselves to A, the creditor of B, and say "we wish that this debt, due to us from B alone, shall be a debt from B and C together," and A accedes to that, although no writing passes, the agreement is valid and effectual, and is not impeachable or affected by the Statute of Frauds. The effect of it is for a valuable consideration to extinguish the debt, and for a valuable consideration to substitute for it the second. Of course the very words I wish I have referred need not be used. If there is sufficient evidence, under the circumstances of the case, that the intention of the parties was so, that it is as effectual as if the most formal expressions had been used. The question of fact, then, before me is, whether the circumstances of this case, as they may be in evidence, are sufficient to satisfy the Court, simply of fact, that the intention of Mr. Lendon, the uncle, and of Mr. Lendon, the son, and of Miss Lane who stood in the position I have mentioned, was so, however vague and inaccurate to the ear of the lawyer may sound the expression of a trade debt, yet that it is not so with the world in general. It is a familiar notion, a familiar mode of expression, where money has been lent to a trader for the purpose of his trade, and which is known to be used by him in that manner. I am of opinion, upon the evidence, that the impression of Miss Lane, the creditor, and of Mr. Lendon the elder, the debtor, was of that description with reference to the debt that was due from him to her in the year 1838, when he admitted his son in partnership. I think it very probable, treating the debt in the way that I have mentioned, that such consideration the trade as changed by the admission of the son into that business, and that it was considered that the trade was indebted, and still indebted to Miss Lane for the money. I am of opinion that the understanding was communicated to Miss Lane by the uncle and cousin, or one of them, with the assent of both, and that Miss Lane distinctly acceded to that. I am of opinion, that from themselves, if transactions between them proceeded upon that basis, and the evidence satisfies me, placing myself in the position of a jury, that is, considering myself as a judge of fact, that it was in effect agreed between the three, that the separate debt of the father should become the joint debt of the father and the son. I am of opinion that the pecuniary transactions, since the commencement of the partnership, were more daily, if possible, but more certainly upon the same footing. The conclusion at which I arrive in this, that, if any, sum as at the time of the bankruptcy was due to Miss Lane upon this account was a joint debt of both the bankrupts. Let the costs be paid out of the joint estate.

Re—Practice.—Small Debts Act.

The application for a summons under the Small Debts Act must be personally signed by the creditor; it will not be sufficient if signed by his attorney.

An attorney had applied for a summons under the Small Debts Act, the application being signed by himself as plaintiff's attorney. The summons having been refused by the registrar, the attorney was applied to the Court, stating that he was the attorney upon the record for the plaintiff.

His HONOUR said that, referring to the language of the statute, it expressly directed that the summons should be "upon the application of such creditor by any petition or note in writing, according to the form in the schedule (B.) annexed." And the form in the schedule is, "Be pleased to summon C. D. D., to answer touching the debts due to me, by the judgment (or order) of the Court of on my behalf." This clearly shewed that the application should be by the creditor personally.

Re F. F. COOPER.

An insolvent, who has petitioned the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, is entitled to a pass stands in this Court for debts in his schedule contracted since the date of his petition to the Insolvency Court.

Seemingly, that where an insolvent has applied to another tribunal, this Court will not receive his petition on account of debts contracted previously to such application.

Insolvent, in July, 1844, had been taken into execution for a debt under 20l. and had petitioned the Insolvent Court, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; he was admitted to bail, and a day appointed for the hearing of the petition. In August, and before the day so appointed, he applied to a judge in Chambers, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and obtained an order for his discharge. At the hearing of the petition he did not appear. Afterwards he petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 2.

On the part of the opposing creditors, it was objected that the petitioner having already petitioned the Insolvent Court, under which petition his estate was treated in the provisional assignee, was not entitled to claim the protection of this Court.

On the part of the petitioner, it was contended that he, insolvent, had taken himself out of the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court, by obtaining his discharge under 1 & 6 Vict. c. 96. At all events, many of the debts in his schedule had accrued since he had obtained the insolvent Court.

His Honour (after consulting Mr. Commissioner HOLBORN) said, that the schedule containing many debts that had been incurred subsequently to the date of the petition to the Insolvent Debtors' Court, in 1844, the petitioner had obtained a locus standi in this Court.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEPHENSON.)
Friday, April 10.

Re DANIEL STANTON.

Contract—Stoppage in transitu—Part delivery—Practice.

The bankrupt had bought five hogheads of sugar; three were delivered before the bankruptcy, the other two had been stopped in transitu. Held, that proof as to the three hogheads delivered should be received, but that the right of the vendor to the property retained being questionable, the dividend was ordered to be retained until the right to the property was established in a Court of law.

In this case a proof was tendered on behalf of Messrs. Daniell and Co. under the following circumstances. The bankrupt, who was a grocer at Bristol, had, shortly before his bankruptcy, purchased five hogheads of sugar of Messrs. Daniell. Three of the hogheads had been weighed off, and delivered before the bankruptcy; the sold note had the mark "A," denoting that the hogheads sold bore the same mark, and the delivery note had the same mark with the figures 154—155. Messrs. Daniell now claimed to prove for the value of the three hogheads actually delivered, reserving the right of stoppage in transitu as to the other two.

Palmer objected to the reception of the proof, on the ground that the contract was entire, and that the whole of the goods not having been delivered, Messrs. Daniell could not elect to retain the two hogheads, and prove for the other three. I take it to be the rule of law, that where goods are specifically marked, a delivery of part is a delivery of the whole. (3 B. & Ad. 507; Hammond v. Anderson, 1 New Rep. 70; Cranshaw v. Bland, 1 New Rep. 378.) It is quite clear that here there was a sufficient specification of the goods to pass the property of the whole. The two hogheads which were not delivered remained on the premises of the vendor at the risk of the purchaser. The delivery of the three was a delivery of the whole, in order to complete the purchase. But it may be urged that the two were not weighed off. In principle this is immaterial. (9 A. & E. 904.) The bankrupt was told by the vendor what hogheads he was to have, and what was their supposed weight. The weighing of them afterwards was only necessary in order to ascertain their value with certainty. Now, how would the case have stood on the 5th Jan. (the date of the act of bankruptcy)? What action could have been sustained by the vendors? Could an action for goods sold and delivered have been maintained? They say no. As against the vendor, the individuality of the goods was ascertained. But all the conditions must be performed. Keeping back the two hogheads would invalidate the contract. Perhaps a special action might have lain. Let us suppose that they have a lien upon the two hogheads. Then they stand in the place of a mortgagee; keeping back two of the hogheads is holding a security, and then they seek to prove for the remainder. This is contrary to the principle of the Bankrupt Law. (Archbold's Bankruptcy, 174.)

Knap.—They have no right to object to our proving for the whole, because if they are damaged they have the right to an action of trover. He cited Hanson and Another, assignees, &c. v. Meyer (6 East, 614), and Tanner and Others, assignees, &c. v. Scovell (14 L.J. N.S. Ex. 321), to show that the right to stoppage in transitu continued as to the two hogheads.

Palmer, in reply.—In the cases cited on the other side, there was no individuality, by which the particular goods could be known. I relied throughout my argument upon the fact that the goods in this case were specifically marked.

Judgment deferred.

April 20.—His Honour this day delivered his judgment. The facts of the case, as they have been proved before me, are as follows.—Messrs. Daniell and Sons sold to the bankrupt, on the 24th December last, five hogheads of sugar at 52s. per cwt. to be paid for by bill at three months, and a sold note accordingly was given to the bankrupt, accompanied by an order to Messrs. Bush to weigh off these five hogheads then in their warehouse, and in such sold note and order these hogheads were referred to by certain marks and figures by which they were distinguished and identified. The bankrupt required three hogheads to be weighed off and delivered to him, which was accordingly done. The other two hogheads were not weighed, nor required to be so, but remained in Messrs. Bush's warehouse until after the bankruptcy, when Messrs. Daniell and Sons claimed them under a right to stop them in transitu. The bankrupt has not paid for any of the hogheads, nor given any bill for them. An invoice has been produced dated 23rd December, 1845, in which the weight as well as the price of the five hogheads is stated. At the foot of this invoice is a request that the bankrupt would oblige Mr. Daniell with a bill on account for 180l. at three months. This request is dated the 6th January, 1846, and is admitted to have been sent to the bankrupt by one of Messrs. Daniell's clerks. Messrs. Daniell and Sons now seek to prove for the price of the three hogheads delivered to the bankrupt, calculated according to the weight at which they were ascertained to be previous to such delivery, and according to the rate agreed upon. To this proof the assignees object on the ground that Messrs. Daniell and Sons had lost their right of stoppage in transitu over the remaining two hogheads, which, therefore, belong to the bankrupt's estate, and that, consequently, they cannot be allowed to prove, without first giving up this property to the assignees. The right of stoppage in transitu in this case is certainly a doubtful question, and may materially depend as well upon the effect to be given to the request of the 6th January last, as upon other circumstances which may exist in this case, but to which no reference has been made, and which might be proper to be ascertained, for instance, the transfer (if any) of the hogheads into the name of the bankrupt in Messrs. Bush's books, and the payment of the warehouse rent by the bankrupt or by Messrs. Daniell, and the custom of the trade in transactions of this kind. But it appears to me that I am not called upon, in reference to the proposed proof, to give any opinion whether the transitu with respect to the two remaining hogheads had determined or not; for the whole five hogheads having been sold according to weight, and the three hogheads in respect to which the proof is sought to be made, having been weighed and delivered, there can be no doubt, I apprehend, that as to such three hogheads the contract has been completed, so as to give the vendors a claim for the price according to the weight ascertained. It cannot be considered that the redemption by the vendors of these two hogheads amounted to a repudiation by them of the whole contract. The case of Wentworth v. Oathwaite (10 Mees. & W. 453) is decisive of this point; nor do I understand that it is otherwise interpreted by the assignees, and therefore the claim of the assignees to the two hogheads retained cannot, in my opinion, form any objection to the right of proof for the price of the other three hogheads, but is rather a ground for reserving the dividend thereon until the claim has been settled by a Court of more competent jurisdiction for such purpose. This was the course pursued in the cases of Ex parte Dobson (1 Mont. & Ayr. 666) and Ex parte Atkyns (1 Gl. & J. 391); and although the property in respect of which the proof is sought to be made in Wentworth v. Oathwaite formed part of the goods comprised in the original contract, yet that circumstance does not, I think, form any ground of distinction, the three hogheads in question having been completely separated from the other property comprised in the contract, and having become the subject-matter of a distinct price. It was, in the course of the argument on the part of the assignees, contended that Messrs. Daniell and Sons' claim on the two hogheads should be regarded in the nature of a security, which at all events should, according to the usual practice in bankruptcy, be first realized before this proof is allowed. But, supposing that a stoppage in transitu has the effect of restoring to the vendor his lien for the price of the goods, instead of rescinding the contract, quoad the property retained (a point which seems not to have been finally decided: see Wentworth v. Oathwaite, before cited), yet I cannot think that such a lien can be treated as a security to which the practice in bankruptcy is applicable, so as to prejudice his immediate claim to the proof in question. This proof must therefore, I think, be admitted; but as the right of the vendor to the property retained by them is fairly questionable, and which it is, I presume, the intention of the assignees to dispute, I shall direct the dividend to be retained until the right to the property is decided.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE DISTRICT COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Thursday, April 30.

(Before Mr. Commissioner ELLISON.)

Re MATTHEW COOK, an Insolvent.

Where an insolvent has taken upon himself the distribution of his effects, he cannot claim the protection of the Court, which will not interfere where there is no estate.

The insolvent came up this day for his interim order for protection, and was opposed by William Chater, attorney, on behalf of his principal creditor, and supported by Harle, attorney.

It appeared that the insolvent had, since the month of September last, paid debts to the amount of upwards of 400l. to different creditors, and now only stated himself, in his petition, to be possessed of twenty-five shillings. W. Chater submitted that the insolvent was not entitled to the protection of the Act, because, admitting the statements in his petition and balance sheet to be correct, he had taken upon himself the distribution of his effects, instead of coming to the Court for that purpose. The Acts of Parliament under which the present application was made clearly contemplated a person possessing property capable of division among his creditors; if an insolvent asked to be protected from the just demands of his creditors, it was only reasonable to require that, in return for such protection, he should vest his property in the hands of the Court, to be fairly administered among his creditors. Now the insolvent had paid all his creditors in full, to the exclusion of two. He particularly referred to the language of the petition annexed to the Act, where the terms "property" and "estate available for the benefit of his creditors" were used; terms which it would be absurd to apply to a man who did not possess a fund adequate to the payment of the Court expenses.

Harle.—We are not to assume that the statement contained in the balance sheet is untrue. If true, it is clear that the insolvent has parted with the whole of his property, and that, too, in favour of bond fide creditors. Cases had occurred in the court where protection was granted, although there was no estate. In this case he trusted the Court would recollect that the petition was filed in March, and that the insolvent was now in custody.

His Honour, however, was clearly of opinion that where there was no estate the insolvent was not entitled to the benefit of the Act; and in future, in such cases, he would not permit a petition to be filed; and in cases like the present, where there was no trifling estate, and where it was clear there would be no fund to divide among the creditors, he would receive the petition, but when the insolvent came up for his final order, the case would be adjourned sine die.

Harle applied to have the petition dismissed.

His Honour consented. Petition dismissed.

Uttering forged bill.—What necessary to support indictment for.

In an indictment for uttering, &c. a forged bill, with intent to defraud A. B., it was proved that the bill in question, and several others, were all drawn on A. B. by the prisoner, and indorsed by him, and that they had all been paid into his bankers, and placed to the credit of his account; but by whom, or when they had been so paid in, did not appear. Held, that there was no case to go to the jury; it being necessary to prove some act of the prisoner done in the county, which amounted to an uttering, disposing, or putting off.

The prisoner was indicted for that he, having in his possession a certain bill of exchange for 13l. 10s. the acceptance whereof was forged, knowingly uttered, put off, and disposed of the same on the 14th of July, 1843, with intent to defraud Veere Woodman.

Gunning, Power, and Wells, for the prosecution, proved that the prisoner of late years kept an account at the Aylesbury branch of the London and County Joint Stock Bank, the chief office of which is situate at 71, Lombard-street. The prosecutor had had frequent dealings with the prisoner, both being farmers, and their accounts used to be settled by the prisoner giving to the prosecutor his acceptance for the balance found to be due from him, such being, with but one exception, the result of their transactions. That exception arose on the 29th Sept. 1843, when the balance was 5l. in favour of the prisoner, who proposed, instead of payment, that the prosecutor should give him a bill for that sum and 8l. 12s. in order that he might meet a demand for 13l. 12s. which was then coming due. The prosecutor assented to this proposition, and the bill was given; but the prisoner omitting to take it up at maturity, the prosecutor was compelled to do so. No further transactions would appear, according to the statement of the prosecutor, to have taken place between him and the prisoner after that period; but in the year 1845, he received an application from a Mr. Griffiths for payment of a bill for 20l. alleged to have been accepted by him for that amount in favour of the prisoner. This he at once declared to be a forgery, and on inquiring he ascertained that that instrument had been discounted for Lines by the party then holding it. In the course of last year this bill was put in action, and the cause came on for trial in Michaelmas Term in London, when contradictory evidence having been came into as to the genuineness of the acceptance, the jury decided in favour of the plaintiff, and the prosecutor paid 1011. for debt and costs therein. About the time of this payment it came to the knowledge of the prosecutor that there were other acceptances of his in existence, which he declared to be forgeries, and, on inquiry, it was discovered that during the years 1842 and 1843 the prisoner had been credited by the bank with eleven bills for various sums, all drawn by him on, and purporting to be accepted by, the prosecutor, and made payable at 71, Lombard-street, but on the subject of which, as he now swears, he had never been applied to. Many of those bills were renewable, and had all been provided for by the prisoner, either by fresh bills, or by reference to his balance at their maturity; and among them was that which formed the subject of the present indictment, and fell due just about the time when he obtained a real bill for the same amount exactly under the circumstances above detailed. In order to bring home to the prisoner the charge laid in the indictment, the manager of the Branch Bank was called; but all he stated was, that that particular bill, as well as all the others, had been paid in to the credit of the prisoner by some one or other, and at some time or other; but by whom, or when, he could not take upon himself to swear. Whenever they fell due, however, intimation had always been given to the prisoner; and on two occasions letters had been written to the prosecutor: while it was clear that the body of the bills was in the prisoner's hand, as well as the indorsement.

This being the case for the prosecution, Byles, Serjt. (with him Prendergast and O'Malley) submitted that the prisoner was entitled to an acquittal. No case had been proved against him which called for an answer even. It was necessary to prove some act of uttering, disposing, or putting off by him; and there was nothing to shew that he had ever dealt with any but one bill, and that was the real acceptance of the prosecutor; and certainly nothing to shew that he had any knowledge that this particular bill for 131. 12s. had ever been paid into his account at the bank. Here there was no proof of uttering, even by an agent of the prisoner. It might be by the prisoner himself, or by an agent; and if by the latter, there would be a question whether he was authorized previously or subsequently.

O'Malley contended that the facts that this bill bore the indorsement of the prisoner, and was drawn by him, amounted to nothing. They did not go to shew either that the acceptance was forged, or that the bill so drawn, accepted, and indorsed, had been uttered or disposed of in any way or to any person by the prisoner. The circumstances might be suspicious perhaps; but there was no actual proof of any act done by the prisoner in the county of Bucks, which could be construed to be either an uttering, putting off, or disposing of the act in question, which, for the purposes of this argument, must be taken to be a forgery.

Gunning and Wells contra.—If this had been a single bill entirely unconnected with any other, it might be said that the case was not proved; but there was abundant proof in the case to shew that the prisoner was the man who dealt with this and all the other forgeries, and he must be taken to have cognizance of them, especially as he alone derived any advantage from them.

MAULE J.—I am at a loss to see what it is that amounts to an act of disposing of this bill. What do you say it is which amounts to that?

Gunning.—The disposing or uttering might be effected through the post; and there is strong ground for comment, in the fact that the prisoner knew that the bill was in the bank, for he must be taken to have done so, when he promised a real bill for the exact amount, and did actually pay that in to his account at the bank, in order to retire the forged one. If he did not pay that bill into the bank, seeing that he was the drawer and indorser, and the only man who could have any interest in the matter, it is difficult to say what proof is enough to raise such a presumption.

Byles, Serjt. having replied,

MAULE J. intimated that in his opinion there was no evidence to go to the jury to shew that the prisoner had uttered, disposed, or put off the bill in question, in the county of Bucks. In order to prove such a charge, it was necessary for the prosecution to adduce evidence of some act done in the county which, in the eye of the law, amounted to an uttering, disposing, or putting off; but nothing had been shewn beyond the forgery, which must be assumed for the purpose of this objection; and the fact that the bill so forged had found its way into the account of the prosecutor at the bank. It by no means, however, appeared by whom this and the other bills had been paid into the bank. That might have been by the prosecutor, in ignorance that the bills were forged. Also, he was not guilty. If he knew that fact, the case was proved; but there was no proof that, even if he did know them to be forgeries, he paid them in to the bank. That might have been done by a variety of ways, and unless the particular method was proved to the jury, how were they to say that the payment had been made in this or that way? But in order to arrive at a verdict of guilty, the jury were required to say what it was in the conduct of the prisoner which constituted the offence and act of uttering in the sense of this indictment. Under these circumstances, therefore, he would recommend the jury to say not guilty.

The jury accordingly returned a verdict of Not guilty.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

MR. WATSON has again brought under the notice of the House of Commons that most gigantic of jobs, the Chancery Compensation Fees. The motion for a committee of inquiry was lost by a very small majority, the prevalent feeling being that the deed was done and could not be undone, and that, however monstrous it was in its origin, it is too late now to correct the mischief. But Mr. WATSON has, by his motion, effected this good service to the Profession and the public. He elicited from the House, and emphatically from Sir ROBERT PEEL and Sir JAMES GRAMHAM, an expression of hostility to the entire system of fees in our law courts, and the Premier promised that if Mr. WATSON would take the matter in hand, and move a committee, he should have the cordial aid of the Government. We hope that the honourable and learned member will accept the challenge. There is no man better qualified than himself to undertake the task. In his hands it will be well done. He is no amateur reformer, but will bring practical experience to the work, and thus whatever emanates from an inquiry so directed, will have the confidence of the Profession, without which, changes in the law can never be accomplished with advantage. The subject is one of too great importance to be thus dismissed. At so late a period of the week we cannot give it the notice it demands, and therefore we shall take an early opportunity of returning to it.

The Times, in a powerful article on the subject of the Fees in the Law Courts, introduces the following very truthful remarks, for which the Profession will thank the writer. Usually, the Times is less just to the Lawyers:—

HOUSE OF LORDS.

DEODANDS' ABOLITION BILL, AND DEATH BY ACCIDENTS' COMPENSATION BILL.

FRIDAY, May 1.—Lord CAMPBELL moved the order of the day for going into committee upon these bills.—Lord DENMAN, Lord BROUGHAM, and the LORD CHANCELLOR having expressed their approval of the Bills, they passed through committee, and were reported to the House.

DISSOLUTION OF RAILWAYS.

MONDAY, May 4.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE, on moving the reception of the report on the Railway Dissolution Bill, said it was his intention, in order to meet the objections of certain noble lords, to insert a clause enabling the minority against the dissolution of a company to have the option of purchasing the plans and sections at a valuation to be made at their own cost. He could not, however, accede to the further proposition, of prohibiting persons who had become possessed of scrip since the 31st of March from exercising the right of voting. After a short discussion, in which Earl GREY, Lord REDBULL, Lord KINNAIRD, and the Earl of RADNOR took part, the report was received.

DEODANDS' ABOLITION, AND DEATH BY ACCIDENTS' COMPENSATION BILLS.

THURSDAY, May 7.—Lord CAMPBELL moved the third reading of these two bills. The noble and learned lord said he was sorry to announce that a disastrous rumour had reached his ears, that when these bills went elsewhere, although they had both been passed unanimously by their lordships, they were likely to meet with the fate they experienced last session. He would only say that the principle of these bills was approved both by the law lords and the judges of England. All the law lords in that house had most deliberately considered them, and he supposed they were quite competent to form a sound judgment. Notwithstanding all this, he was told they were immediately to be thrown out of the other house, that deadends were still to be continued, and that if deaths took place by gross negligence, there was to be no compensation. He could only invite the attention of her Majesty's government to the subject, and express his earnest desire that the noble duke opposite (the Duke of Wellington) would draw the attention of her Majesty's ministers in the other house to these bills, hoping it would be borne in mind that this was the only civilized country in the world where, under such circumstances, the law afforded no relief.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said his noble and learned friend had spoken to him some time ago on the subjects of these bills, and he concurred in the measures which he proposed.—The LORD CHANCELLOR: My noble and learned friend should not be quite so credulous in believing the rumours which have reached him. Perhaps they may have been circulated only for the purpose of teasing my noble and learned friend.—Lord DENMAN said the Deadends Bill proposed to remedy an old and absurd law. But that law was the only security for preventing people from producing death by negligence, which was a pretty strong argument in favour of the Compensation Bill. He believed that when these measures came to be well considered, the other House would be convinced both of their merits and their necessity.—Lord CAMPBELL: There is one objection to these bills which I have heard. It has been said, "Suppose the Lord Chancellor were to meet with an untimely end by a railway accident, which we all pray may never occur, how would the jury estimate the loss to his family? What would be considered the tenure of his office? What would be considered a fair compensation to be awarded to his family for their loss?" I have that regard for my noble and learned friend that I hope his valuable life will never be exposed to any such peril. And a railway company would be extremely sorry if my noble friend were to break a limb through any negligence of theirs, because then he might bring an action and recover; but they would not care one farthing if his invaluable life were at once extinguished, because they would then say, "the law affords no remedy against us whatever." For the sake, therefore, of my noble and learned friend, though I hope he will never require the security, I do trust these bills will meet with that support in another place which they have so unanimously received in this House.—The LORD CHANCELLOR: There is a much more difficult case for compensation to provide for than the one which my noble and learned friend had the kindness to suggest. It relates to himself. He would any jury, in the case of accident to him, be able to estimate the value of his hopes? The bills were then read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

TUESDAY, May 5.—Mr. WYKE moved, "That it be an instruction to the committee on legal education (Ireland) to extend their inquiry and consideration to the state, improvement, and extension of legal education in England." Ordered.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE BILL.

WEDNESDAY, May 6.—The House went into committee upon this bill. A few verbal amendments were moved and agreed to on clauses 1 and 2. Mr. LAW then moved the addition of the following clause "Power to award hard labour, and the costs of the prosecution in all cases): "And whereas it is expedient to give to criminal courts the power to award hard labour as a portion of the punishment inflicted on offenders convicted before them, and also to give to such courts the power of allowing reasonable costs in all cases prosecuted or tried before them; therefore, be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the court before which any offender shall be convicted of any misdemeanor, to sentence (if such court shall see fit) such offender to be kept to hard labour, either in the common gaol or house of correction, for the whole or any part of the term for which such court is now by law authorized to direct such offender to be imprisoned, and to direct (if it shall see fit) the costs of the prosecutor, and witnesses for the prosecution, in all cases of misdemeanor, to be paid in the same manner, and under the same regulations, as the costs in certain cases of misdemeanor are directed to be paid by the statute passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intitled, 'An Act for improving the Administration of Criminal Justice in England.'—Sir J. GRAHAM admitted that this clause was a very important one; but he could not help looking with real jealousy at the enlargement of power which it reposed; and feared he should resist it, unless he heard from the hon. and learned gentleman some cogent reasons connected with his administration of justice, inserting it in the bill.—Mr. LAW said that it was difficult at a moment to mention the precise cases in which the hardships he complained of had arisen from its granting the power to criminal courts of awarding costs. The 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 23, applied to certain cases of misdemeanor only, and his object was to extend it to all cases, at the discretion of the court. He had known cases of assault of the most aggravated nature, to which, owing to the nature of the indictment, the 7 Geo. 4 did not apply. An experience of twenty years in the administration of criminal justice convinced him of the necessity of the clause.—Sir J. GRAHAM, feeling the very great importance of the clause, requested his hon. and learned friend to withdraw it, and give notice of it upon the bringing up of the report. The bill had come down from the other House sanctioned by the high authority of Lord Chief Justice Denman, who had not seen this clause, and until he (Sir J. Graham) had had an opportunity of considering the matter, he should not wish to offer a decided opinion in reference to it.—Mr. LAW complied with the request, and withdrew the clause, promising to move it on the bringing up of the report.—The clause was then, after some discussion, withdrawn, and the report ordered to be received this day fortnight.

FEES IN COURTS OF LAW AND EQUITY.—COMPENSATIONS.

THURSDAY, May 7.—Mr. WATSON moved for a select committee to inquire into the nature and extent of the taxation of suitors by the collection of fees in the courts of law and equity, and the application of such fees, and the compensations paid to retired officers of those courts, and into the propriety of continuing them; and particularly to inquire into the orders for compensation made by the Lord Chancellor to the persons filling the offices of clerk of the enrolments, comptrollers of hawkers, riding clerk, six clerks, sworn clerks, waiting clerks, and others, under the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103; and to inquire into the nature, duties, and emoluments of those officers before the passing of that Act, and their right to compensation during life and for seven years after the death of such persons.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL contended that the motion, if agreed to, would be an interference with vested rights.—Sir J. GRAHAM was of opinion that the whole system of fees in courts of justice required examination, and would not oppose an investigation into the general question, without reference to the special cases alluded to by the motion of the hon. member.—After considerable discussion, Mr. C. BULLER said that no less than 300,000l. per annum was received in the various courts of law and equity in the shape of fees, and as there were great facilities for abuse, the necessity for inquiry became the more indispensable. Although opposed to the system of fees, he thought the course of compensation suggested and acted upon by the Lord Chancellor was right in principle. The system of fees was, however, a public scandal, and an inquiry ought to be entered upon with a view to put an end to it.—Mr. BARING, though he expressed his acquiescence in the principle of granting compensation in such cases as those under discussion, yet objected to the lavish rate at which it had been granted in the present instance, and, on that ground, supported the motion.—Mr. B. ESCOTT contended for the repeal of the law which awarded these compensations, as a law inimical to the public interests. He expressed himself favourably to Mr. Watson's motion.—Mr. ROMILLY held that the award of Parliament ought to be held inviolate; but expressed himself favourable to the part of the motion referring to the system of fee-taking in court.—Sir R. PEEL said, that from the period when he first filled the office of Secretary of State, he had felt these fees to be a serious evil. Even when Secretary for Ireland the fact was impressed upon him that there was no hope of being able to effect reforms in the courts of law unless the Government was prepared to act liberally towards those officers. He had, on the part of the Government, no objection to an inquiry with regard to the future; but he must oppose the motion of the hon. member, to whom he would suggest the propriety of bringing forward a motion as respects the future with the assent of the Government. The motion could not be in better hands, and it should have his (Sir R. Peel's) cordial support; but the question before the House would imply a censure upon the Lord Chancellor, who was only acting in accordance with an Act of Parliament.—Mr. WATSON replied, and the House divided, when the motion was lost by a majority of 80 to 65.

NEW STATUTES

Of the Sessions 9 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, only the statutes and parts of statutes of peculiar importance to the Profession are given verbatim. Of the rest, the title, or a brief analysis only, is preserved here.]

CAP. I.

An Act for the further Amendment of the Acts for the Extension and Promotion of Public Works in Ireland. (March 5, 1846.)

CAP. II.

An Act to authorize Grand Juries in Ireland, at the Spring Assizes of the present Year, to appoint extraordinary Presentment Sessions; to empower such Sessions to make Presentment for County Works, and to provide Funds for the Execution of such Works; and also to provide for the more prompt Payment of Contractors for Works under Grand Jury Presentments in Ireland. (March 5, 1846.)

CAP. III.

An Act to encourage the Sea Fisheries of Ireland, by promoting and aiding with Grants of Public Money the Construction of Piers, Harbours, and other Works. (March 5, 1846.)

CAP. IV.

An Act to amend the Acts for promoting the Drainage of Lands, and Improvement of Navigation and Water Power in connection with such Drainage, in Ireland; and to afford Facilities for increased Employment for the Labouring Classes in Works of Drainage during the present Year. (March 5, 1846.)

CAP. V.

An Act to amend an Act for regulating the Construction and Use of Buildings in the Metropolis and its Neighbourhood. (March 24, 1846.)

The first section of this amendment Act authorizes the appointment of an additional referee. Sec. 2 provides that two official referees may act. Sec. 3, that official referees may act as surveyors, with the permission of the Secretary of State, and the existing disqualifications may be relaxed; and where any official referee shall have any interest in the property in question, or have been concerned therein, special referees may be appointed. By sec. 4, the office of official referee is to be vacated by such officer acting as surveyor, either alone or with any partner, or by an agent or otherwise in or about the property. Sec. 5 fixes the salary of the official referees at such sum, not exceeding 2,000l. per annum, as her Majesty shall appoint. Sec. 6 provides that contributions should be paid to the Consolidated Fund, and the salaries paid thereout.

CAP. VI.

An Act to make provision, until the first day of September, 1847, for the Treatment of Poor Persons afflicted with Fever in Ireland. (March 24, 1846.)

CAP. VII.

An Act to apply the Sum of Eight Millions out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the Year 1846. (March 30, 1846.)

CAP. VIII.

An Act to make further provisions as to Unclaimed Stock and Dividends of the South Sea Company. (March 30, 1846.)

CAP. IX.

An Act for amending the Act for rendering effective the Services of the Chelsea Out Pensioners, and extending it to the Out Pensioners of Greenwich Hospital. (April 2, 1846.)

CAP. X.

An Act for regulating the Payment of the Out Pensioners of Greenwich and Chelsea Hospitals. (April 2, 1846.)

CAP. XI.

An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better payment of the Army and their quarters. (April 2, 1846.)

CAP. XII.

An Act for the Regulation of her Majesty's Royal Marine Forces while on shore. (April 2, 1846.)

The public interest, however, will gain by a discussion which has directed attention to the exorbitant expense of obtaining justice in our courts of law and equity. It is usual to lay the blame entirely on the shoulders of the profession, and naturally enough, since the attorney's bill contains, besides his own charges, all the fees he has advanced on his client's account. The suitor looks only at the sum total, and confounds the whole together; but if he will read the items, he will find that not a few of them are tribute paid to the officers of the court. We are not prepared to say that all charges upon the administration of justice ought to be abolished, but it is clear that the fees at present exacted are beyond all measure exorbitant. It is quite enough to look at the large incomes that have been derived from them by a whole host of Masters and Registrars and Clerks, to form a pretty just estimate of the tax imposed upon the suitor. This tax, it must not be forgotten, still continues. In abolishing some offices and reducing the emoluments of all, the fees, it is needful to observe, are neither abolished nor reduced. They will still be paid, and, under the present system, must be paid, to form a fund for the payment of the salaries. The public, therefore, has gained nothing by the recent alterations, of which we have heard so much. That relief is still to come, and Sir Robert Peel pledged himself last night that it shall come. The only wonder is, that since the Prime Minister has been, as he says, impressed with the magnitude of the abuse from the first hour of his official life, he has delayed the remedy so long.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE public mind is evidently moving on the subject of the Criminal Law and its administration. Scarcely a week passes without indication of the hold it has taken upon the sympathies of the philanthropic as well as the thoughts of the philosopher. The great meeting in Exeter Hall proclaimed the state of opinion on the subject of Capital Punishments; and although much was said that smacked more of sentiment than of reason, still there was a great deal of good sense in many of the arguments, and it is certain that this relic of barbarism will ere long be swept from the statute-book. The kindred topic of a provision for discharged prisoners is not suffered to sleep. In many of the cities and boroughs, the inhabitants are bestirring themselves to action. A change in the manner of trying petty larcenies is loudly demanded. Government has given its sanction to the principle of providing an appeal in criminal cases. Ere long we shall find a call for the adoption of the humane Scotch practice of assigning counsel for the defence of poor prisoners. The reform of prison discipline is in actual progress. The punishment of transportation is looked at with a doubtful eye, and its reform is occupying many thoughts. Altogether, there is a prospect of vast improvements in the administration of justice when the more urgent commercial questions are disposed of. A Codification of the Criminal Law must, however, be the first step.

At the request of many correspondents, we have procured a copy of the indictment successfully preferred against the shons lawyer Latham, at Birmingham, and for which we are indebted to the courtesy of the Clerk of the Peace of that borough. It is as follows:—

ROBERTA V. LATHAM.

(Copy Indictment.)

Borough of } The jurors for our lady the Queen, Birmingham. } upon their oath present that heretofore and before the time of the committing of the offence in this count mentioned, divers goods and chattels of one Peter Booth had been seized and taken by one Robert Prince, for and as a distress, on account of certain rent then due from the said Peter Booth to the said Robert Prince; to wit, at the borough aforesaid; and that Thomas Latham, late of the borough aforesaid, labourer, afterwards, to wit, on the tenth day of February, in the ninth year of the reign of our sovereign lady Victoria, the now Queen, at the borough aforesaid, with force and arms unlawfully did falsely pretend to the said Peter Booth that he, the said Thomas Latham, was an attorney, and that he, the said Thomas Latham, could cause the said goods to be restored to the said Peter Booth; whereas, in truth and in fact, the said Thomas Latham was not an attorney, and could not cause the said goods to be restored to the said Peter Booth, as he, the said Thomas Latham, then and there well knew. And that the said Thomas Latham, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, by the said false pretence unlawfully did obtain from the said Peter Booth certain moneys, to wit, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a half-crown, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a shilling, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a sixpence, one piece of the current moneys of the realm called a penny, and two pieces of the current moneys of the realm called halfpence, of the moneys of the said Peter Booth, with intent to cheat and defraud the said Peter Booth thereof, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

And count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that heretofore, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, the said Thomas Latham, with force and arms, unlawfully did falsely pretend to the said Peter Booth, that he, the said Thomas Latham, was an attorney, whereas, in truth and in fact, the said

Thomas Latham was not an attorney, as he, the said Thomas Latham, then and there well knew, and that the said Thomas Latham, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, by the said last-mentioned false pretence, unlawfully did obtain from the said Peter Booth certain other moneys, to wit, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a half-crown, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a shilling, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a sixpence, one piece of the current moneys of the realm called a penny, and two pieces of the current moneys of the realm called halfpence, of the moneys of the said Peter Booth, with intent to cheat and defraud the said Peter Booth thereof, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

3rd Count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that heretofore and before the committing of the offence in this count mentioned, divers goods and chattels of the said Peter Booth had been seized and taken by the said Robert Prince, for and as a distress on account of certain rent then due from the said Peter Booth to the said Robert Prince, to wit, at the borough aforesaid; and that the said Thomas Latham, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, with force and arms unlawfully did falsely pretend to the said Peter Booth, that he, the said Thomas Latham, was an attorney; and that he, the said Thomas Latham, could cause the said goods to be restored to the said Peter Booth, whereas, in truth and in fact, the said Thomas Latham was not an attorney, and could not cause the said goods to be restored to the said Peter Booth, as he, the said Thomas Latham, then and there well knew; and that the said Thomas Latham, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, by the said last-mentioned false pretence, unlawfully did obtain from the said Peter Booth certain other moneys, to wit, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a half-sovereign, and one piece of the current coin of the realm called a crown, of the moneys of the said Peter Booth, with intent to cheat and defraud the said Peter Booth thereof, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

4th Count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that heretofore, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, the said Thomas Latham, with force and arms, unlawfully did falsely pretend to the said Peter Booth that he, the said Thomas Latham, was an attorney, whereas, in truth and in fact, the said Thomas Latham was not an attorney, as he, the said Thomas Latham, then and there well knew; and that he, the said Thomas Latham, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, by the said last-mentioned false pretence, unlawfully did obtain from the said Peter Booth certain other moneys, to wit, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a half-sovereign, and one piece of the current coin of the realm called a crown, of the moneys of the said Peter Booth, with intent to cheat and defraud the said Peter Booth thereof, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

5th Count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said Thomas Latham, on the first day of February, in the year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, unlawfully did falsely pretend to one Martha Collins, that he, the said Thomas Latham, was an attorney authorized to practise in the Mayor's Court of Record for the trial of civil actions in the borough of Birmingham, whereas, in truth and in fact, the said Thomas Latham was not an attorney authorized to practise in the said Mayor's Court of Record for the trial of civil actions in the said borough of Birmingham; and whereas, in truth and in fact, the said Thomas Latham was not an attorney at all, as he, the said Thomas Latham, then and there well knew; and that the said Thomas Latham, on the day and year aforesaid, at the borough aforesaid, by the said last-mentioned false pretence, unlawfully did obtain from the said Martha Collins certain other moneys, to wit, one piece of the current coin of this realm called a crown, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a half-crown, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a shilling, one piece of the current coin of the realm called a sixpence, one piece of the current moneys of the realm called a penny, and one piece of the current moneys of the realm called a halfpenny, of the moneys of John Collins, with intent then and there to cheat and defraud the said John Collins thereof, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

REFORMATION OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS.—BIRMINGHAM, Wednesday.—At a meeting of the Town Council this morning, the Mayor introduced to the notice of the meeting the important question as to the best means to be adopted with reference to the reformation of juvenile offenders, and the following resolution was unanimously passed, and a petition was drawn up for presentation to Parliament embodying the sentiments contained therein:—"That in the opinion of this council the well-being of the community requires that the attention of her Majesty's Government and of the Legislature, should be directed to reconsider and amend the criminal law, so far as it relates to juvenile offenders; that it appears to this council that much advantage would accrue not only to the unfortunate individuals themselves, but to the public generally, by the adoption of a system by which the reformation of offenders might be made more incident with their punishment; and that such a system would be most satisfactorily carried into effect by the formation of establishments at the various gaols, especially appropriated for the purpose. But until some general measure can be adopted throughout the kingdom, it appears to this council that densely populated districts much good might immediately arise by the institution of houses of reformation, at which criminals of various ages, detached from prison without money, with injured character, and without homes or friends, might obtain by honest labour temporary support, and imbibe principles of morality and religion, the effect of which would grant their fellow-subjects in sanctioning their admission among them, and induce the friends of humanity to provide situations, which under their reformed character the individuals might fill with advantage to themselves, and with the chance of doing some reparation to the society which they had previously injured."

HERTFORDSHIRE.—COUNTY AND LIVERY JURISDICTIONS.—The deputy chairman of the Court of Quarter Session, Mr. T. Mills, has given notice that he will move, at an adjourned session, on the 15th inst. the following resolution:—"That it be referred to Lord Dacre and the Marquis of Salisbury to consider and propose terms for merging the jurisdiction of the Liberty of St. Alban in that of the county of Hertford, and the clauses of any Act of Parliament which it may be necessary to obtain for that purpose." A similar notice of motion has been given for the adjourned St. Alban Session; so that we may safely hope that the design will be carried out with unanimity, and that the legislature will not refuse to assent to a measure which is felt to be necessary by the parties connected with the administration of justice in this county.—Hertford Mercury.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

DEAD ended yesterday, but the system of rest will scarcely enable us to bring up the arrears of the judgments. Another double number this week has, however, cleared the way. We have to direct the attention of our reader to some very severe, but we must admit, very just, observations of Mr. Justice COLERIDGE, in the Bail Court, of Wednesday, upon the practice of Counsel and Pleaders lending themselves to the arts of puff-blowing attorneys, by drawing, and thereby sanctioning, tricky demurrers and frivolous pleas.

THE LEGAL SKILL OF MR. O'CONNELL.—It had fallen to his lot, at an assizes in Cork, to be retained for a man on trial for an aggravated case of highway robbery. By an able cross-examination he was enabled to procure the man's acquittal. The following year, at the assizes for the same town, he found himself again retained for the same individual, then on a trial for burglary, committed with great violence, very little short of a deliberate attempt to murder. On this occasion, the result of Mr. O'Connell's efforts was a disagreement of the jury, and, therefore, no verdict. The government witnesses having been entirely discredited during the cross-examination, the case was pursued no farther, and the prisoner was discharged. Again, in the succeeding year, he found in the criminal dock; this time of a charge of piracy! He had run away with a collier, and was having found means of disposing of a portion of his cargo, and afterwards supplying himself with arms, he actually commenced cruising to his own account, levying contributions from ships which he chanced to fall in with. Having "done his bit," while engaged in this profitable occupation, he was brought into Cork, and there met his fate. Again Mr. O'Connell saved him, by getting him out of the jurisdiction of the Court.—The Cork City Gazette, committed within the jurisdiction of the Court.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

ARTICLED CLERKS' SOCIETY.

The gentlemen who, so creditably to themselves, proposed the formation of this very useful society, of which the plan was suggested by a correspondent some time since, have, in pursuance of their object, addressed the following letter to the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls, who have promptly transmitted the replies which we subjoin. The suggestion of the Master of the Rolls will, we hope, be adopted by the attorneys, who should give their cordial aid by contribution and advice to this endeavour of their clerks to obtain the most efficient means, for that best of all education, self-improvement:—

MY LORDS,—We, the undersigned committee of articulated clerks to attorneys and solicitors in England and Wales, having met together for the purpose of considering the propriety and necessity of establishing a general Law Students' Society, and having resolved that such a society would be a great boon to the Profession to which we have the honour of belonging, it was determined that our first steps should be to obtain the sanction of your lordships. We have, therefore, taken the liberty of addressing to your lordships the following observations, under the full conviction that as your lordships have ever lent your powerful influence towards the promotion of all wise and judicious reforms in the law, and of all measures tending to raise the Legal Profession in efficiency and public estimation, your lordships will not deem it an intrusion on your valuable time when we humbly state that we entertain the highest sense of the importance of the society in question; but that, on the contrary, your lordships will grant us your sanction, and render us all proper encouragement.

Our objects may be briefly stated to be educative and protective. We humbly think that nothing will tend so much to secure the honour, respectability, and efficiency of our Profession as carefully watching the education of its rising members. It was to promote this (as your lordships are well aware) that the examination preparatory to the admission of attorneys and solicitors was established, a measure which, in our humble opinion, has already been of great advantage, and which bids fair for much greater hereafter. Your lordships' attention may not have been called to the fact that there is no institution existing, either in the metropolis or elsewhere, receiving the general support of the Profession, calculated to assist the articulated clerk in his studies or to aid him in his preparation for the examination, and that consequently the clerk at the commencement of his articles (for want of that advice and assistance which such an institution might afford) has to struggle with so many difficulties that he too frequently abandons himself to despair of ever acquiring a sound and comprehensive knowledge of his profession, and aims solely at getting up sufficient knowledge to enable him to pass. Knowledge acquired merely for the occasion, and which, not being engrafted firmly in his mind, and made, as it were, a part of himself, is more speedily lost than attained; or, as is frequently the case, he fails, not owing so much to his want of inclination or ability, as of that assistance and stimulus which the generality of youth so much require. We would also request your lordships' attention to the fact that, although amongst articulated clerks are to be found youths at least equal in ability to those of any other profession, and although their number is so great, yet few ever attain to eminence or distinction in their Profession, caused, as we would humbly submit to your lordships, by the absence of an institution such as we now propose. Another consequence is, that the Profession and the public are much exposed to the malpractices of artful and designing men, who, having but a superficial acquaintance with the law, make it an instrument of oppression. Thus the public are injured and the Profession disgraced. The remedy, we humbly suggest, is to be found in the establishment of an institution which will raise the qualified practitioners above the attacks of these individuals, and draw so wide a line of demarcation in respect to character and competency between the two classes, that none in intrusting the care of their fortunes and interests need ever err.

We have viewed with great interest the late proceedings of the benchers of the Middle Temple on behalf of candidates for the bar, and we humbly think that the time is now arrived when the articulated clerks should put forth their claims to the consideration and assistance of the attorneys, and other members of the Legal Profession, upon the subject of education. The present appears, for this reason, to be a very happy crisis, and if we delay urging this subject now, we shall suffer such an opportunity to pass unimproved as may not occur again for many years.

The character of the society will not, of course, be collegiate, but institutional. It is intended to be a valuable auxiliary to the office or chambers; and whilst at the institution the theory and principles of the law are principally learned, the practice at the office or chambers will be rendered more interesting and instructive. It is hoped that theory and practice will be thus happily combined; and that whilst the institution may be as a study, the practice at the office may bear the same relation to the lawyer as the experiments of the laboratory to the chemist.

We have not at present entered minutely into the detail of our scheme, further than was necessary to satisfy ourselves and to convince your lordships of its importance and practicability; and we have thought that, as so much would depend upon the sanction of your lordships to the principle of the measure, it would be better to apply for that in the first instance. Your lordships will already have collected the general character of the proposed institution; but we would more particularly state, that the specific objects which we have at present contemplated are,—the formation of an institution where suitable lectures would be delivered; the formation of a library—and we would here state to your lordships that there is not a public law library in London accessible to the general body of articulated clerks; also the formation of classes, under competent tutors and professors, for private instruction; the institution of periodical examinations, and the award of prizes, honours, and distinctions, to those who most distinguish themselves. Another object would be (as before stated) protective; namely, for the general conservation of the political and social interests of the articulated clerks, as occasion might hereafter be found to arise. Although the majority of those undersigned have but a short time to serve under articles, and are therefore unlikely to reap any of the proposed advantages, yet we are so fully convinced that the scheme we have suggested would effect a more important reform in our department of the Profession than has ever yet taken place, that we have resolved to devote our time and energies towards the accomplishment of our object; and we very earnestly and respectfully solicit your lordships to take the subject into your consideration, and kindly to give your sanction to its principle, which we feel no doubt would insure us abundant success. We fear that the importance and number of your lordships' engagements will prevent your lordships from giving us advice or directions in aid of our proceedings; but it is needless to say with how much respect and gratitude any such suggestions would be received by us.

In conclusion, we would state to your lordships that we represent a very numerous body of articulated clerks, equally desirous with ourselves for success. With great respect, we have the honour to remain your lordships' most obedient, humble servants, London, 13th March, 1846.

To the Right Hon. the Lord Lyndhurst,
Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.
To the Right Hon. the Lord Langdale,
Master of the Rolls.

Copies of the above letter were forwarded to each of the above noble and learned lords, and the following answers have been received from their lordships' respective secretaries:—

(Copy.)

George Street, 28th April, 1846.

GENTLEMEN,—I am directed by the Lord Chancellor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to his lordship, and to state, with reference to the scheme proposed in it, that the Lord Chancellor's engagements prevent his entering into the details of the scheme, or offering any suggestions respecting them; but that, so far as he has had time to examine it, there does not appear any objection to the plan proposed for increasing the professional knowledge of the members of the intended society. I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, your very obedient servant,

H. J. PERRY.

SIR,—On receiving your letter of the 8th inst. I laid it before the Master of the Rolls, and his lordship directed me to offer the following observations in reply.

His lordship is satisfied that much may be done to encourage and promote the instruction and education of articulated clerks, and it would give him very great satisfaction to hear of a well-considered and practicable plan being established for that purpose; but he thinks that such a plan cannot be formed and carried into execution without the advice and assistance of experienced attorneys and solicitors, who may be able to direct attention to the most advantageous course of study, and concur in the application of the time which may be required for pursuing it. I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

G. W. SANDERS.

Rolls, 15th April, 1846.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The case of M. Charles Leclerc, the barrister, who has excited so much interest in Paris, has at length been brought to a close in the Cour Royale, by his being sentenced to be struck off the rolls. It should be remembered that M. Charles Ledru, after having prosecuted a priest named Contrafatto, and obtained against him some twenty years ago a condemnation to twenty years' hard labour, published some time since a letter, stating his belief that he had been deceived by false evidence, and that Contrafatto was not guilty.

Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.—We regret to state that Mr. Justice Coleridge, who has been suffering from indisposition for a short time past, is again unable to attend his official duties. The learned judge presided in the Bail Court yesterday, but by the advice of his medical attendants left town this morning for Brighton.—Standard of Thursday.

In the Lord Mayor's Court, on Monday, an action of some importance to traders within the City was decided by a jury; the City Recorder presiding. Mr. Sturt, the defendant, carries on the business of a warehouseman at Wood-street; and he was sued by the City Chamberlain for the penalty of 5*l.* for carrying on business without having taken up his freedom. It was admitted that Mr. Sturt dealt in cotton, linen, woollen, and other manufactured goods, which were purchased from manufacturers in Manchester, Scotland, and other places; that he received them in bales, which were opened and exposed to parties wishing to purchase them; that these goods were purchased on the usual terms—a credit of two months, or a discount of 2½ per cent. for cash. Sir Thomas Wilde, for the City, contended that this traffic was essentially a "retail" trade, which rendered the person carrying it on liable to a penalty for not taking up his freedom. The Solicitor-General, for the defendant, asserted that the business was a "wholesale" one, and exempt, in consequence, from such penalty. The Recorder put it to the jury, as traders in the city of London, and as men of experience, to say whether the defendant came within the province of a wholesale dealer or not. He considered that the corporation bye-law which regulated the case did not apply to wholesale dealings; and that a warehouseman did not carry on an art, mystery, or handicraft, within the meaning of the bye-law or Act. The jury, after consulting together for half an hour, returned a verdict for the defendant.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SOLICITORS' INSURANCE OFFICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The letter of the Wiltshire Shareholder, shewing what he had actually done to advance the interests of this society, induced me to call at the offices in Chancery-lane this morning, to inquire how it was going on. I there saw a paper containing an abstract of the business already transacted, and as I am sure it will interest all your readers as much as it pleased and surprised me, I send you a copy of it.

PROPOSALS RECEIVED.

Total number, 48.
Amount	£29,647 19 0
Accepted, 29	16,049 19 0
In progress, 12 ..	10,199 0 0
Declined, 5	2,699 0 0
Withdrawn, 1	200 0 0
In suspense, 21 ..	500 0 0
Paid upon 21	10,949 19 0

This is astonishing—I should think unprecedented—in an Insurance Office that has been at work only one month! and fully justifies the sanguine expectations of its first supporters, and proves the excellence of the principles upon which it is founded.

Most cordially do I join my brother shareholder of Wiltshire in congratulating the Profession upon the prospects of this, our own Insurance Office, and in thanking you for the skill and labour you have devoted to the designing and carrying out this singularly successful enterprise.

I hope all the shareholders will follow the example set by your correspondent, and effect an insurance on the life of himself or some member of his family, which is the immediate intention of, Sir,

Your reader from the first,
A KENTISH SHAREHOLDER.

CONVEYANCING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your admirable article on Conveyancing, in last Saturday's paper, must I think have met with the approbation of all who perused it. I, as one of the gentlemen whose cause you advocate, most heartily thank you for it. At the same time I hope that you will not let the matter drop, but that you will endeavour to effect something at this crisis (so important as it is to the Profession at large) without delay. Could you not devise some method of combining the Profession for united action? I feel assured that the case is urgent, and so I hope you will excuse my troubling you.

I am, Sir, &c.

Kent, May 4, 1846. A CONVEYANCER.
P.S. I inclose my name and address.

RIGHT TO FURNISH ADDITIONAL ABSTRACT ON TRANSFER OF MORTGAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It has been mooted in the provinces, whether, on a transfer of a mortgage, it is the right of the mortgagee's solicitor to furnish an abstract, of and from the mortgage-deed, to the solicitor of the new or intended mortgagee, or whether it is the right of the mortgagor's solicitor to do so, from the copy draft mortgage, taken (as is usual) by him on effecting the mortgage.

[We believe it to be the privilege of the mortgagee's solicitor, but we shall be glad of the opinion of others, if we are wrong in this.]

PARLIAMENTARY COUNSEL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As a junior member of the bar, I congratulate my fellow juniors upon the recent retirement of so many of their seniors from the Common Law Courts. Their names may be seen in the new Law List, under the head "Parliamentary Counsel." That they have so retired is the only reason I can discover for such a list being published; but there the list is, and henceforth, therefore, I suppose, that as a member of the Chancery bar does not come into the Common Law Courts, except upon special occasions, so as a general rule, the "Parliamentary Counsel" will be satisfied with Parliamentary fees, without the higher standing and position to be acquired by the slower and less painful practice of the Common Law Courts. If this be not so, then the list should be struck out, lest other simple-minded men like myself should make the same mistake.

A JUNIOR BARRISTER.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A. B. C." asks information as to the following point of practice from the experienced of the Profession:—

Will you, or some of your correspondents, advise a country solicitor, what search may be made under the following circumstances? The estate of a testator, who died upwards of forty-five years ago, was paid into court in what is supposed to have been an administration suit. Forty years ago a solicitor in the country, concerned for several legatees, went up to town with them, and they then received a part of their money. The solicitor died in the same year, and no steps whatever appear to have been taken since in the cause. His office papers are not now to be found. The legatees, executors, and parties named in the will are dead, without the residue of the fund having been paid out of court. The parties can only guess at the name of a cause from the names of the legatees, executors, &c.

What search can the remaining relatives make after their money? Is there any means of finding it out through the Accountant-General's books? What becomes of money paid into court and neglected to be drawn out?

"DELTA" asks an opinion on the following points of professional etiquette:—

May I trouble you, or some of your able correspondents, for an opinion on the following point in professional etiquette:—Mr. A. is the attorney of the mortgagor, B. that of the mortgagee. A. sends his clerk twenty miles with the principal and interest payable on the mortgage, requesting him to retain the deeds on receiving the money. B. refuses, telling A.'s clerk, "that he perceives the object of A. is to deprive him of the fees to which he considers himself 'entitled,' but he shall advise his client not to receive the money until the release has been perused and presented for signature."

A.'s client is thus put to the expense of a useless journey. Was A. guilty of a breach of professional etiquette in tendering the money before preparing the release (the object being to save his client the expense of an abstract, without which, or the deeds, he was unable to draw release); or did B. not adopt a most unjustifiable and unprofessional course in refusing to deliver up the deeds; his only reason as he stated, being, that he was thus deprived of his fee for abstract? By an opinion from you, to which both parties must bow, you will greatly oblige.

A "SOLICITOR" submits the following:—

By the statute 4 Vict. c. 21, being the Act for rendering a release as effectual for the conveyance of freehold estates as a lease and release, by the same parties, it is required that every deed to operate by virtue of that Act shall be expressed to be made in pursuance of it. I am not aware that there was any other legislation on this subject until the passing of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, which is entitled "An Act to simplify the transfer of Property." The latter statute enables every person to convey by deed, without livery of seisin, enrolment, or prior lease, all freehold land as he might previously have conveyed by lease and release, and declaring that every conveyance should take effect as if it had been made by lease and release. This statute does not appear to render a direct reference to its terms necessary in deeds to which it may apply. By the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 106, the statute to which I have last alluded was repealed, as to so much of it as abolished mortgages remainders, as from the commencement, and as to the residue as from the 1st Oct. 1845. In the month of March, 1845, a deed was executed which contained the usual operative words of a release, but not the word "convey." It however purporting to be a conveyance or transfer of freehold land, and was stamped with lease and release stamps, but made no reference to any statute. An objection has been raised to the efficacy of the deed in question, on the ground of the absence of such a reference as above mentioned. I shall be obliged if you or some of your correspondents will state whether the objection is well founded.

"B. M." submits the following query:—

Can any of your readers inform me what is charged by solicitors for preparing the transfer of Railway Debentures, and otherwise completing same?

CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

THE great importance of this measure to the interests of the Profession and of the public alike, demands a more particular notice than was enabled to give to it last week.

Few, perhaps, are aware of the enormous amount of property devoted to charitable purposes. From the report of the commissioners, it appears that the landed estates alone extend to 442,915 acres; this, at the lowest computation, is worth upwards of forty-four millions. This does not include the land covered with buildings. The house property has been valued at twelve millions. Besides these, there is at least an equal amount of personal estate, mortgages, and rent-charges. The same authority estimates the entire property devoted to charitable purposes in England and Wales, at "from seventy-five to one hundred millions."

This vast property is administered by about 50,000 trustees. The reports of the commissioners shew how mismanaged is the greater portion of it. But those reports do not disclose a tithe of the abuses familiar to all who have lived in places where charities exist and watched their proceedings. It is no exaggeration to assert, that one half of the whole is not made to yield its fair annual value; that of the income received not one half reaches its proper destination; that many of the purposes to which the residue is really applied are useless, and not a few of them injurious. Frequently are they made to subserve the uses of party or sect; to buy parliamentary or municipal elections, or to make places and swell bills for the convenience of private interests.

That such is the fact will need no proof with professional readers, whose duties must continually compel them to witness instances of the abuses of charitable trusts. At present, the only remedy is in the Court of Chancery. The cost and the delay of such a proceeding are generally worse than the evil it is sought to cure. Hence the infrequency of applications for the interference of that Court even where abuses are notorious. In this, as in all like cases, everybody's business is nobody's. The interest of no individual is sufficient to induce him to litigate for the common good, and so the abuse continues untouched.

And even when the Court of Chancery is invoked, its powers are practically limited. It holds itself bound by the expressed will of the donor, however circumstances may have changed, and however it is little fitted for the existing condition of society. The cases in which it will depart from the words, to carry out the spirit, are very few. Hence the charities are not made to yield the greatest, but permitted to produce the smallest, amount of public benefit.

Again, there are many hundreds of charities of too small value to afford the cost of a Chancery suit. These are, of course, abandoned in despair, to be plundered with impunity.

These evils have been, for many years, crying aloud for redress. The newspapers and periodicals have blamed the cowardice or the laziness of successive governments for neglecting to apply a remedy to so manifest a mischief. At length, Lord LYNCHURST has undertaken the task, and instead of being met in a spirit of captious hostility, seeing the opposition he is sure to invoke from the numerous and powerful interests having a personal stake in the maintenance of existing abuses, his endeavour ought to be, by the disinterested of the Profession and the public, received with respect, and examined, with a view to its improvement and greater efficiency for its object, and not with purpose to destroy it.

It is in this spirit that we enter upon its examination.

The objects sought are twofold: first, to secure the proper management of charitable trusts; second, to provide a more simple, speedy, and inexpensive means for redressing wrongs, and directing the application of the property to the purposes which shall be most in accordance with the spirit of the donation; that is, in such manner as, from a survey of the circumstances of the donor, it is probable he would have applied his gift had he lived at this time.

Lord LYNCHURST's Bill appears to aim much more at the first object than at the second. It empowers the Lord Chancellor to appoint three commissioners of charities and two inspectors; the former to hold during good behaviour, the latter to be removable by the Lord Chancellor. They are to appoint and remove necessary subordinates.

These officers are invested with various powers; first, generally over all charities; second, over charities not worth 100*l.* a year; third, over charities vested in municipal corporations.

Their powers, with respect to all charitable property are, on the application of the trustees, to direct its mortgage, sale, or exchange; to grant building and other leases, authorize the compromise of claims, direct how the accounts shall be kept and audited, and receive every year statements of the receipts and expenditure; inquire into the receipt and application of the revenues; require accounts, vouchers, and returns, and summon before them any trustees or officers and examine them on oath. They are to report to the Crown triennially the revenue and expenditure of all charities; and to state whether any or what of them have ceased to be beneficial, or have become injurious, and what of them require to be reformed or regulated. Sections 49 and 50 direct the registration of all deeds affecting charities.

To these powers there can be no honest objection. They afford sufficient security against mal-appropriation of funds, and impose a mighty check upon jobbing of all kinds. Active commissioners would be vigilant to permit of no leases unless the full value were reserved, and to sanction no sales or exchanges that were not at least as much for the good of the charity as of the other party. But we find no provision in the Bill empowering the commissioners to direct the regulation, or reform, or the better application, of charities reported to them requiring reform, or as having ceased to be beneficial, or having become injurious.

Their powers in reference to charities whose income does not exceed 100*l.* per annum are much more extensive. Here they may act judicially. Whenever they suspect mismanagement, the commissioners may proceed to the locus in quo, examine witnesses upon oath, and award judgment; may order payment of money retained by any officer; remove trustees and officers found guilty of abuse, breach of trust, or neglect; appoint new trustees and make regulations for the future management of the charity; they may appoint trustees where there are none; and direct a new application of the charity when the original purpose has failed. From their decision there is no appeal; but they are empowered to rehear the case within two months and revise their own judgment.

Lastly, as to the charities formerly vested in municipal corporations, they are empowered, on application by ten householders, to appoint trustees where none have been yet appointed, and where there are trustees, on a like application, alleging that the trust is not fairly administered, to appoint such an additional number of trustees as they may deem necessary to secure impartiality. They are to fill up all future vacancies of trustees, subject to an appeal to the Lord Chancellor.

Such are the main features of this important measure; and, upon a calm and candid review of them, it must be confessed that it is more easy to complain of their stringency, and to object to the large powers given to the commissioners, than to suggest means that will accomplish the end without them. Power to investigate abuses and to enforce proper management, must be lodged somewhere; if it be left, as before, to the Court of Chancery, the existing impediments will survive. If it be delegated to any other authority, none seems more fitted for its exercise than the commissioners, who will be directly responsible to the Crown, and consequently to Parliament and the country, for the proper discharge of their duties. However, we pause here, purposing next week to review the scheme above described, with intent to point out such practical objections and improvements as have been suggested by our own experience and the communications of correspondents.

THE LAW LIST.

We hasten to correct a very extraordinary—shall we term it error, or injustice?—which has made its appearance in the Law List of the present year, for the first time.

Among the lists of Counsel practising in the various courts there has been introduced one with the title of "A List of Counsel usually practising in Parliamentary Committees," and containing some thirty names.

From this it might be supposed that only the Counsel there named undertook that branch of business.

But the fact is, that all Counsel, without exception, take briefs before Parliamentary Committees. There is no exclusive list. There are only two or three whose principal business it is. All the rest practise more in the courts than in the committees.

Therefore the framers of the Law List had no more right to insert an exclusive list of Parliamentary Counsel than of Queen's Bench Counsel.

We do not believe that the Editor, who has been hitherto remarkable for fairness in the conduct of that valuable manual for the Profession, would have ventured of himself to frame the partial list he has published, or that he would have given it a place, had he observed its injustice. It is plain that the list must have been imposed upon him by some party interested in its publication.

We hasten, however, so far as we can, to correct the error, by assuring the Profession that the Parliamentary Counsel named in the Law List have no more claim to the title than all other Counsel, and that the publication is altogether unauthorized either by custom or by the fact.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

It will be seen by the report of the parliamentary debates on subjects affecting the law and lawyers, that Mr. WYSE has obtained the sanction of the House of Commons to the extension of the inquiry of the committee appointed to investigate the state of Legal Education in Ireland, to a similar inquiry into Legal Education in England. The question has thus assumed an aspect of more importance than ever. The attention of our readers will often hereafter be directed to the proceedings of this committee.

It will be observed, also, from a correspondence that appears among the "Proceedings of Law Societies," that the Articled Clerks are making an effort, by combination, to procure for themselves more opportunities for the advancement of their studies than they can command at present. The attempt is highly creditable to them, for it indicates a resolve to keep pace with the general progress of the community. The lawyers must advance with the age, or they will be trodden down. Such a society as that projected by the Articled Clerks would tend vastly to exalt the general character, and consequently the social position and influence, of the entire Profession. It is, therefore, a matter of interest to the masters as well as to the clerks. We hope that the efforts of the one will have the cordial concurrence and aid of the other.

LAW DIGEST, OR INDEX LEGUM.

THE fourth number of this elaborate work is now ready, and the fifth, completing it, will be published next week, so that subscribers will soon be enabled to bind it with their last volume of the LAW TIMES, to which it is intended to be an appendix, where all the law of the previous half year may be found with speed and certainty.

RAILWAY LITIGATION.

THE argument as to the Liability of Allottees, which has appeared in recent numbers of the LAW TIMES, has called forth many commentaries, some assenting, others dissenting, but the majority being largely in accordance with the views we have endeavoured to maintain. It is from no disrespect to these correspondents that we refrain from an attempt to answer objections and remove doubts, but because enough has been already advanced upon both sides of the question to enable the reader to form a fair judgment upon the point at issue.

But these communications have been accompanied by many other queries relative to the vast ocean of Railway Litigation. Gladly would we have extended to the various difficulties and doubts that have been suggested to us the same minute investigation as was devoted to the subject of the Liability of Allottees; but their number makes the task impossible, and the complication of many of them would perplex the astutest lawyer of the age. Without, therefore, pretending to reply to the numerous questions that have been forwarded, we propose to notice some of the most practically important, with a view to the guidance rather of action than of opinion.

But before we enter upon these, we must introduce to the notice of the readers of the LAW TIMES a very sensible pamphlet upon Railway Litigation, just published by Mr. T. T. A'BECKERT, the eminent solicitor of Golden Square. (a) His suggestions are those of the experienced man of business, so superior to the crude notions of the amateur legislator. He brings the knowledge acquired in the office and learned from cases of actual occurrence to the solution of the great problem, now occupying the thoughts of statesmen, how the difficulties into which the events of last autumn have plunged the country may be dispersed with the least damage to all the parties involved. To Mr. A'BECKERT belongs the honour of having lifted the first potential voice against the injustice, so shamefully sanctioned by the press, of relieving the allottee by the ruin of the Provisional Committee-man; not unfrequently the most innocent party in the affair. Mr. A'BECKERT wields a vigorous pen. His pamphlet is by no means dry and technical. He treats his subject after a fashion pleasing and intelligible to every reader. He states the precise evils calling for a remedy, and, moreover, as so few writers care to do, he prescribes the manner of the cure. As there is novelty in both, we will describe them with some minuteness.

His comment upon the Railway Dissolution Bill are temperate. He complains only that such a measure should be necessary. It argues great defects in the existing law. That a company should be unable to effect its own dissolution, when convinced that its objects cannot be realized, is a discovery that has taken the public by surprise. It appears, indeed, that the entire law of Joint Stock Companies is in a barbarous state, the wants of society having far outrun the slow progress of legislation.

He fears that in the re-action many really good projects will perish with the bad ones. To avoid this, he makes the following excellent proposition:—

To enable the really valuable projects to withstand the panic which has taken possession of the public mind, I would permit the directors of the companies that have passed the ordeal of a committee, to proceed with their Bills, introducing a clause allowing the majority of the shareholders to suspend all operations under the Act for intervals of six months, but so that the whole time for completing the works should not, in the aggregate, be prolonged more than three years beyond the time ordinarily allowed by the Legislature for completing railway undertakings. The shareholders in schemes that had already received the sanction of Parliament, and were thus privileged, would, in all probability, before long, acknowledge that their interests had been materially served by the preservation of the project, the bona fides of which a Parliamentary investigation would, to a certain extent, have guaranteed, and the shares in which would doubtless be eagerly sought for on the taking place of the reaction in favour of railway enterprise, which its intrinsic importance will certainly one day produce.

Turning to the sufferers by the panic, Mr. A'BECKERT boldly asserts the moral and the legal duty of allottees to contribute their proportion of the expenses incurred on the faith of their applications, and the injustice of throwing all the expenses upon the members of provisional committees, not a few of whom took no part in the projects, but merely lent their names, in the belief that they were thus advancing works calculated to be of great public benefit. He calls upon the legislature to adjust, in a fair and rational spirit, the general loss; he shews how this may be done; he asserts that thus only can the demon of litigation be laid, and a stop put to the "dishonesty, misery, and ruin that have for months been running riot through the land." Mr. A'BECKERT's remarks are so full of right feeling and truth, though opposed to the current of popularity, that we extract them verbatim:—

That unhappy class the provisional committee-men, have been and are the most fearful sufferers by this national calamity. Among them are, doubtless, many very foolish and very dishonest persons, but they have in their body others of the highest honour and possessing the finest intelligence, whose only fault has been that of trusting to the national character as a protection against the persecutions that have befallen them.

(a) "Railway Litigation, and how to check it; with Remarks on the Proposed Railway Relief Bill, and suggestions for regulating the future conduct of Railway Enterprises." By THOMAS TURNER A'BECKERT, Attorney-at-Law. London, 1846. E. Wilson.

What were the circumstances under which they were tempted to come forward?

At a time when the desire to invest money in the formation of railways appeared universal, they consented to put themselves forward as the directors of schemes which they were made to believe were of national importance, and would prove advantageous to the subscribers. The public poured in their applications for shares, on the faith whereof were incurred considerable expenses necessary to be at once paid if the object was to be attained which the applicants professed to have in view. These expenses the directors are now called upon to bear alone, while the applicants for shares stand by exulting in their difficulties, and systematically disregarding promises written in language the most comprehensive and explicit, and accompanied with references to third parties as guarantees for their honour and pecuniary responsibility. Was it to be expected that, in a country boasting of its national honour, a whole community would thus disgrace itself? As between man and man, the transaction would stamp with infamy the faulting party, and exclude him for ever from respectable society.

This shameless endeavour of the allottees, aided by the press, to throw the entire burden of an own breach of contract upon the committee-men, have deceived, does, in Mr. A'BECKERT's opinion, call for the interference of the legislature, and he proceeds to point out a practical mode of accomplishing the object. "I propose," he says.

That provisional committee-men shall be bound to treat those projects on which the parliamentary deposit has not been paid as dissolved partnerships, and on submitting the accounts thereof to the inspection of a public officer, and obtaining a certificate to their fairness, the right shall be conferred of enforcing payment from each allottee of his proportion of loss. If the directors, in their original scheme reserved an interest for private purposes, which a finding they could not accomplish, they shew themselves to have thrown upon the public, they ought themselves to bear its burden; and I would, therefore, require that as a condition precedent to the obtaining any relief, they should deposit with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies their original allotment book verified by the oath of their secretary, and that his claim for contribution should be limited to those to whom allotments were made upon the first distribution.

I would also make it compulsory upon the directors to do justice to a class of persons who, as well as others ought to be protected. Those who, on receiving their allotments, paid their deposits, the whole of which are now retained to make up for the deficiencies of others, leaving the sufferers to seek redress either by suing the directors for a return of all the money, or filing a bill in equity for an account and contribution. I believe conscientiously they are not entitled to the first, while the mode of obtaining the last is too expensive, and too thickly surrounded with difficulties to be ventured upon. I would, therefore, give to every allottee who had paid his deposit, the right to recover from the directors, by the order of a commissioner of bankrupts, the difference between the amount the allottees had actually paid, and that which, on the verification of the accounts by the public officer, would appear to have been their due proportion.

If these suggestions were adopted, justice would be done to all who had acted bona fide, and the difficulties in enforcing the performance of an undertaking, which in honour and conscience ought to be carried out, would be at an end, and the seeds destroyed of a crop of litigation which will otherwise overrun the land.

We are glad to find that the opinion of a sensible and experienced lawyer as Mr. A'BECKERT confirms our own, as to the legal liability of allottees, and he appears to have taken very nearly the same views as we had done of the real purport of the famous cases of Nockels v. Crosby and Compagnie v. Saunders.

We cannot refrain from taking another significant passage upon this subject:—

The allottee community may abuse provisional committee-men till the vocabulary of Billingsgate is exhausted; they may denounce with Ciceroian eloquence the swindling and fraudulent character of the scheme they requested to be parties to; but, after all, their argument may be put in these words, "I proposed to belong to the affair when I fancied I might have made a pound or two by being concerned in it; but as I find, if I keep my engagement, the account will be the other way, I shall break my word."

The injustice of allowing the repudiating allottee to triumph, as they now do, over the unfortunate provisional committee-men is, positively speaking, when we bear in mind that, upon the former class, is chargeable the dreadful responsibility of having for a time paralysed the commercial energies of the country.

and degraded its character. It was they who brought into existence all that there was of evil in the late railway movement. Had it not been for their false pretences, the spirit of enterprise would have been kept within its proper limits; but they, and they alone, turned it from its useful course, and converted a fertilizing river into a sweeping inundation. Their proceedings were as petty and cowardly in conception as they have proved pernicious in practice. They had all the vice of a gambler without his boldness. They played for a stake they never intended to produce if the east of the die should prove against them. Affecting a desire to take a part in a great national work, they systematically undermined it, and made what might have been a noble monument of a nation's power a heap of ruins.

I know that this is not the popular view of the question. I know that the allottees are encouraged by the press in a systematic resistance to the claims made upon them. If the demand be written authoritatively, they are advised not to be bullied; if it be accompanied by an appeal to their sense of justice, they are warned against being wheedled; if the sum be a trifling amount, the applicant is ridiculed for his mendicant spirit; if at all formidable, he is denounced for his audacity. Surely the time will come when reason will exert her influence, and justice maintain her sway, and shall no longer be tempted to exclaim, with Marc Antony—

"Oh, Judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason."

Fervently—I may say passionately—do I hope that the moral sense of the people will arouse itself, and that the time will quickly arrive when the real authors of a national calamity will be recognized, and no longer be abetted in bullying their victims, but compelled to stand forward and do them justice.

But Mr. A'BECKETT does not rest here. He suggests a method for preventing a recurrence of the mischief. He proposes that some rules of law should be laid down to secure a defined liability, capable of ready enforcement, in those engaged in railway enterprises. We have not space left for an entire description of the plan, but it embraces strict registration of all names before announcement, and a bond-fide taking up of all the shares before proceeding to Parliament. Ample safeguards are suggested for directors and allottees, to secure from both their fair proportions of the expenses necessarily incurred.

Such a pamphlet, from such a quarter, cannot but have great weight with the government; with the Profession, and with the public. Earnestly do we hope that many, if not all, of its suggestions will be embodied in the Bill now before the Parliament. They are eminently practical, and it gives us the more pleasure to make it known in quarters where its propositions can be carried into effect, because if passed, it would be a set-off against the stains which we are reluctantly compelled to admit have been cast upon it by many of its members, who have exhibited in the use they made of the recent railway mania, and the advantage they have taken of their victims, what Mr. A'BECKETT too truly terms "matchless impudence, combined with extraordinary rascality."

But this clever pamphlet has detained us so long, that the intended notes upon some of the most urgent questions arising out of Railway Litigation must be postponed until next week. E.W.C.

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS.

By PROFESSOR CARR.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE XIV.

I have treated hitherto of cases where there has been a warranty of a specific chattel. The same principles, with some variations, regulate the rights of parties under executory contracts, and the same language has been applied to them.

If I undertake to supply goods of a certain specified quality, and the goods I do supply are of an inferior quality, this has been frequently described as a contract wherein I bargained that the goods shall be of the quality specified, and commit a breach of faith. It would, perhaps, be more correct to look upon this as a breach of a contract, wherein I engage to do a certain specified thing, and fail to do it. (Fugman v. Hopkins, 4 M. & G. 369.)

A good deal of confusion has arisen in many of the cases on this subject, from the unfortunate use made of the word "warranty." Two things have been confounded together. A warranty is an express or implied statement of some thing which the party undertakes shall be part of the contract, and though part of the contract, yet collateral to the express object of it. But in many of the cases, some of which have been referred to, the circumstance of a party selling a particular thing by its proper description has been called a warranty. But it would be better to distinguish such cases as a non-compliance with a contract which he has engaged to fulfil: as, if a man offer to buy peas of another, and he sends him beans, he does not perform the contract; but that is not a warranty; there is no warranty that he shall sell him peas: the contract is for the sale of peas, and if he sends him any thing else in their stead, it is a non-performance of it. So, if a man were to order copper "for sheathing ships," that is, a particular copper prepared in a particular manner; if the seller sends him a different sort, in that case he does not comply with the contract. This is not properly classed under the head of warranty. The distinction is illustrated by the following case:—Suppose a party offered to sell me a horse of such a description as would suit my carriage, he could not fix on me the liability to pay for it, unless it were a horse fit for the purposes I wanted it for. But if I describe it as a particular bay horse, in that case the contract is performed by his sending me that horse; and, even if it were part of the contract (a collateral part) that it should be fit for the purpose, that may be a warranty; and, though I may have a ground of action if it is broken, yet still it would be a performance of the contract. If this view is right, it would be more correct to consider a warranty as a collateral undertaking in the sale of a specific chattel, and a breach of warranty to be considered as a breach of an incidental undertaking.

Any non-compliance with the terms of an executory contract is to be considered as a non-performance of the substance of the original contract. This distinction appears to me to throw light on the differences that exist between the two cases. If this view is marked out, it would be found, probably, that a warranty exists only where the property passes to a purchaser by the bargain itself. Where the property is not passed to the purchaser by the bargain itself, the undertaking that the goods shall be of a given quality must be deemed to be not collateral to the bargain, but a part of the substance of the original contract. One main difference between the two cases is, that in the case of an executory contract, if the undertaking or warranty is broken, the purchaser is at liberty, even after he has received the goods, to return them to the seller, and afterwards delivered according to sample, would not be bound to receive the bulk if it does not correspond with the sample; nor, after having received what was tendered and delivered as being in accordance with the sample, will he be precluded by a simple receipt from returning the article within a reasonable time, for the purpose of examination and comparison. (Stephens v. Wilkinson, 2 B. & Ad. 320.) Where goods are ordered for a particular purpose, the seller impliedly undertakes that they shall be fit for that purpose. This is an instance of what is termed an implied warranty. If beer be sold, to be consumed at Gibraltar, the sale is an affirmation that it is fit to go so far. If the purchaser says, "I want copper for sheathing a vessel," and the merchant says "I will supply you well," this constitutes a contract, and amounts to a warranty that it shall be fit for sheathing (according to the language of the earlier cases). It appears that without any express engagement on the part of the merchant, a knowledge of the purpose to which the copper was to be applied would make him responsible for its being reasonably fit for the purpose. (Jones v. Bright, 5 Bing. 533), and two other cases in 4 B. & C. 108, and 4 Taunt. 847.

Where goods are ordered of a manufacturer, a warranty is always implied that they shall be of a merchantable quality. (Laing v. Fidgeon, 4 Campb. 169.) The difference between the sale of a specific chattel and an order for such a quantity of goods or for articles to be manufactured, I apprehend, to consist in this:—In the sale of a specific chattel, the purchaser has the power of examining it before he makes the bargain; if his examination is unskilful or careless, the blame lies with him. Caveat emptor. But when goods are ordered, the power of examination does not rest with the purchaser; the individual articles sent are selected by the purchaser. It is but reasonable, therefore, that on him should be thrown a responsibility corresponding with the examination endorsed of the purchaser, or the implied understanding between the parties. In all these cases the rule I have mentioned applies. In such executory contracts, where an article, for instance, is ordered from a manufacturer who expressly or impliedly contracted that it should be of a certain quality, or fit for a certain purpose, and the article sent is such as never could have been accepted by the party ordering it, and he does not return it so as to make him answerable for it, in this and similar cases the latter may return it as soon as he discovers the defect, provided he has done nothing in the meantime more than was necessary to give it a fair trial. (Brown v. Edgington, 2 M. & G. 279.) We have had a good deal to consider with respect to delivery, but I have not yet inquired into the question in what does delivery consist? Delivery, in its simplest form, consists in that which has been termed by Lord Kenyon "actual transmutation from hand to hand." (7 T. R. 71.) I go into a shop and buy goods; the tradesman hands me the goods across the counter and I take them; there the delivery is complete. The case that approximates nearest to actual transmutation from hand to hand is where goods are left by a tradesman or his servant at the house of the buyer, supposing the goods to be the same and in effect identical. The third kind of delivery is where goods pass through the hands of a carrier or other agent; thus, I order goods in London, to be sent to my house in York; the goods are sent by the carrier; here the act of leaving the goods with the carrier is a delivery to me. In order to understand clearly what constitutes a delivery, it may be useful to inquire into the nature of possession. According to the theory of our law, possession appears to signify properly what was called by Lord Tenterden "the corporeal power" over the thing. (5 B. & Ald. 140.) As long as my goods are in my house, I have the corporeal power over them; I am in a condition, in point of fact, to deal with them as I please, to exercise all the rights that belong to me as owner. In this case the goods are, in every sense of the word, in my possession, and they cannot, in any sense, be said to be in the possession of another. If I send the goods to your house to be taken care of for me, the corporeal power over them is transferred from me to you; nevertheless, I have not lost, nor have you acquired as against me, the right to deal with the goods as owner; though the corporeal power is with you, I still retain the legal control. Where the corporeal power is thus severed from the legal control, possession is sometimes, and for some purposes, attributed to the person that has the legal control; at other times, and for other purposes, it is attributed to the person who has the corporeal power. Hence, it appears that the term "possession" is ambiguous. This is indeed evident from the phrase frequently used that "the possession of the agent is the possession of the principal." By this is meant that the agent has the corporeal power over the thing (the possession in one sense), but this is only in behalf of the principal, in whom is vested the possession in the other and more important sense, namely, the legal control. Lord Kenyon says—"In the case of a carrier there is a mixed possession: actual possession in the carrier, and an implied possession in the owner." And Buller, J. says—"The carrier is considered in law as the servant of the owner, and the possession of the servant is the possession of the owner." The person who has the legal control without any corporeal power is not in possession, in the strict and primary sense of the word; but inasmuch as he has all the rights which result from possession, he is in law deemed to be in possession, and his condition with respect to the goods is therefore sometimes termed possession in law, or possession implied by law, whereby it is distinguished from possession in fact, which exists whenever there is the corporeal power. Sometimes it is termed a constructive possession, or virtual possession, as distinguished from the actual possession. Where goods are delivered by transmutation from hand to hand, or, by being left at the house of the buyer, there is at once a total change of possession; at the moment of delivery the corporeal power, as well as the legal control, is at once transferred from the seller to the buyer. Where goods are sent by a carrier, the change of possession is not so immediate; after they have left the hands of the seller, there is an interval before the goods come into the hands of the buyer; during that interval the goods are not in the actual possession of either party. But at the moment when the goods pass from the hands of the seller to the hands of the carrier, the legal control over the goods is lost by the seller, and acquired by the buyer; the seller cannot countermand the delivery; the carrier holds the goods on behalf of the purchaser; they are constructively in his possession; in other words, the delivery to the carrier is a delivery to the buyer. It appears to have been considered at one time that the delivery to the carrier was not a delivery to the buyer, unless the buyer had either expressly or impliedly authorised the goods being sent by the carrier in question, so as to constitute him his agent. (2 Wms. Saund. 47.) On the one hand, it is clear that if the seller sends the goods by an agent of his own, he may at any time while the goods are in the hands of his agent countermand the order which he has given him; the goods are not yet delivered by the seller; as long as they are in the hands of the servant of the seller, they are in the possession of the seller himself; he may exercise any legal control that he is justified in using over them as his own goods. On the other hand, it is equally clear that if the seller puts the goods into the hands of an agent of the buyer, he can exercise no further power over them. (Vale v. Bayle, 1 Cowp. 294.) In the earlier cases the question frequently arose whether the carrier was or was not the agent of the buyer. (Dawes v. Peck, 8 T. K. 330.) This investigation was a very unsatisfactory one, and only decided by a petitio principii. Now, however, it is clearly settled (at least where it is a part of the bargain that the goods shall be sent by the carrier at all) that unless the carrier is the special agent of the seller, it is immaterial whether he may or may not have been employed by the buyer—immaterial, even, whether his existence is known to the buyer. Delivery to the carrier, inasmuch as it puts the goods out of the control of the seller, is delivery to the buyer. (Dutton v. Solomonson, 3 B. & P. 582; Brown v. Hodgson, 2 Campb. 38; Copeland v. Lewis, 2 Stark. 33.) Where goods had been shipped by order and on account of S. and Co. of Hamburg, it was held, these goods having been damaged, S. and Co. were the parties to bring the action, the goods having become theirs, and not the person who shipped them. (King v. Meredith, 2 Camp. 839.) The case of King v. Meredith shews that it is immaterial whether the carrier is employed by one party or the other. There is also the case of Fragano v. Long (4 B. & C. 219). Fragano, a merchant at Naples, sent to Mason's at Liverpool, an order for hardware, to be dispatched on insurance being effected; terms to be three months' credit after arrival. Mason marked the oak with Fragano's name, and sent it by canal to Liverpool, where it was shipped to Naples. Here, but for the order of Fragano, the goods would never have left Mason's warehouse; they were marked with Fragano's name, so that there could be no doubt about their individuality. And that case fell within the general rule, that where goods are to be delivered at a distance for the seller, they are in law delivered to the buyer as soon as they are sent off. So it was held in the case of King v. Meredith, that the goods were the property of the purchaser as soon as they were sent off; the goods were sent properly, and the carrier had substituted water for spirits, nevertheless the purchaser was bound to pay, they having been delivered to the carrier in the proper state. So in Fragano v. Long, the action being against the carrier for negligence, it was held the proper person to bring the action was Fragano, the person to whom they were sent. (Alexander v. Gardner, 1 Bing. N.C.), and also the very instructive case of Richardson v. Dunn (2 Q.B. 218). The marginal note of that case is, "Defendant, by letter, requested that plaintiff, a coal merchant at Stockton, would send to him at Southampton, as early, and as low, as possible, from 200 to 300 tons of coals, either by the Navigator or other vessel. Plaintiff, by letter, consented. The Navigator could not be obtained, and would not have carried 200 tons. Plaintiff, on 31st December, shipped 152 tons for Southampton by another vessel, and by letter of the same date informed the defendant that he had done so, stating, also, that he had drawn at two months for the price, payable in London. He also inclosed an invoice, and asked if he should engage another ship to make up the quantity. Defendant returned no answer. On January 6th the ship with the coals was lost. Plaintiff, according to the notice in his letter, drew a bill on the defendant, which was paid into a banker's at Stockton on January 4th, reached Southampton about a week after December 31st, and was presented to defendant for acceptance. Defendant, who had heard that the ship was lost, refused to accept. Held, that defendant was liable for the price of the 152 tons, as goods sold and delivered; for that if he meant to repudiate the past delivery by another ship than the Navigator, he should have stated so in answer to the plaintiff's letter; that he was not entitled to defer such answer till the arrival of the bill; and consequently, that if plaintiff had improperly departed from the terms of the contract, defendant had waived the right of objecting." He sent an order for a cargo to be sent in a particular vessel; the person who receives the order finds it impossible to send the cargo in that vessel; he sends a smaller cargo in another vessel; that was not a compliance with the order. In this case notice was given to him of the loss of the vessel, and also a bill for the price had been drawn on him. Now, a week elapsed, after he knew the order had been complied with, before he heard of the loss of the vessel; and it being soon after the loss of the vessel, he objected to the mode of compliance. The Court said, "Had the coals arrived and been accepted by the defendant, no doubt he must have paid for them; had he in terms assented to the mode in which the plaintiff had proceeded to execute the order, the same consequence would have followed. And it was contended for the plaintiff that defendant's conduct amounted to an acquiescence in what the plaintiff had done. The letter of the plaintiff inclosed the invoice, and informed him that a bill had been drawn; it therefore became his duty, it was said, without any delay, to inform the plaintiff that he dissented from this mode of executing his order, that no more coals were to be sent, and that he would not accept the bill. Silence for a week, and until he knew of the loss, was tantamount to assent. For the defendant, it was said that he was not bound to answer the letter, or express any opinion, until the bill arrived. We cannot agree to this; the fact of the bill having been drawn on him was, we think, an additional reason for a prompt communication." To the general rule an exception is hinted by Halroyd, J. namely, where a charge is made by the seller for the carriage. I apprehend that any such charge would not of itself operate to prevent the delivery in point of law; it might be evidence, but it would only be evidence that the carrier was the agent, or, in the words of Lord Mansfield, that "he had taken upon himself actually to deliver the goods to the buyer." The following case is cited: (Chaplin, 3 Q. B. 483.) The traveller of a trading firm in London (the Messrs. Moores), gives a verbal order for goods to a manufacturer at Paisley; the goods are sent by the railroad; was this a delivery? Two questions appear to be raised by the case, but not decided. You will observe, first, that the order was given by word of mouth, and that nothing else took place to make the contract binding within the Statute of Frauds. Secondly, that though the goods were ordered by the traveller of a London house, nothing whatever was said about their being sent. On the second point it was said by Patteson, J. "If the consignee had selected a particular carrier, it would have made a difference; perhaps, if they had ordered that the goods should be sent 'by some carrier,' the delivery to any carrier might have constituted a delivery to the consignee. But I do not see how the mere order can have the effect contended for. I do not see how delivery by a consignee, of his own accord, to a carrier, can be a delivery to the consignee." From this it would seem to follow, that, supposing the order to be in writing, and to be assented to in writing, if this order is silent about the sending of the goods, the party giving the order cannot bring an action for the non-delivery, without having gone to the manufacturer, ready to take the goods; that is to say, it will not be implied to be any part of the order that the goods are to be sent by the one or the other. If it is no part of the bargain, the other party cannot enforce it, and the only way of getting the goods would be to go and ask for them. Williams, J., says, "I cannot find any instance in which the right has been held to pass to the consignee, where he has not expressly directed the sending by some particular conveyance, or at least the sending by some conveyance or other." Mr. Justice Wightman says, "It has in no case been held that the property passed to the consignee, by the consignee's mere delivery to carrier, the consignee having given no order relative for the sending." Supposing that to be the point on which the Court proceeds, it would appear that if a particular carrier is named by the purchaser there is no doubt a delivery to him is a delivery to the purchaser, and if they are required to be by a carrier, the delivery to any ordinary common carrier will, under the circumstances, be a delivery to the purchaser; but that if goods are merely ordered and not ordered to be sent, then the sending is a delivery to the purchaser. Supposing the Court to have gone on that ground, that would seem to be the result. The judgment of Lord Denman is silent on this point, and turns entirely on the other point, which was only incidentally, if at all, noted by the rest of the Court. The argument was that there was no written memorandum within the Statute; the delivery to the carrier was certainly an acceptance by the purchaser within the Statute; there was therefore no valid contract within the Statute of Frauds; the mere sending of the goods without any contract valid in law did not take the property in question. According to Lord Denman's view, it would be immaterial whether carrier had been pointed out to the purchaser or not. Lord Denman likened this to a case in which goods are sent merely for approval, and there is held by Parke, B. no property would pass until they received and adopted the goods. It is, as if goods sent without being ordered, sent under expectation of sale; these cannot be deemed to be sold until they are received till the other party has acquiesced in buying the purchaser. (Swain v. Shepherd, 1 M. & S. 223.) The same principle is involved in the sale of goods at sea, of goods in the custody of a warehouseman, and of goods altogether in the possession of a buyer. The things sold at the time of the sale altogether out of the corporeal power of the seller; that he has to do is to make a transfer of the legal control from himself to the buyer; and that with respect to a ship at sea, it must go through the form required by the Registration Act. As soon as this is done, the delivery is complete. (Allen v. Maling, 2 T. R. 462; Mason v. Moore, 17 L. 67.) It was said by one of the judges, not having what other delivery there could have been—"I am bound to say that the possession depended upon the property." In these cases we must suppose sale such as that of a specific amount of goods, whereof the identity and individuality are complete. If, instead of selling you all the timber now lying on my land (which was the case in Mason v. Moore), I have sold so many loads, at so much per ton, there would have been no delivery till the goods were sent. (Kingsmill v. Southern, 9 L. & C. 895.) The reason of this is, that the possession depends on the property, and the property does not pass till the thing is individualised. And this is, perhaps, the reason why we sometimes find delivery and transfer of property used as convertible terms. It is so in this case of Swain v. Shepherd (1 M. & S. 900), where the term transfer was used, where delivery would have been used with more propriety. So, with respect to goods in a warehouse. I am a warehouseman, and have the goods of a merchant in my possession; he sells them goods to you; he gives me an order to deliver them to you. If the delivery was such as he describes, that is the same as if the delivery had been made directly to the merchant himself. But if more frequently happens that you, the buyer, leave the goods in my warehouse; in this case, although the goods are still in my keeping, they are deemed to be delivered to you. You may accept my duty to deliver to you, and it becomes my duty to deliver accordingly; and if I give a consent to hold them on your behalf, still, as you have accepted the order to hold the goods, the disposal of them is with you an accepting the order to deliver them to you—I execute this disposal that is made in your favour from that time homeward. It is material to observe that the assent or knowledge of the warehouseman is material; until he has given his assent, and has taken on himself to hold on behalf of the buyer, he continues to be on behalf of the seller, and would be justified in obeying any subsequent order of his. (Knowles v. Horsfall, 5 B. & A. 134.) So that until his assent is obtained the purchaser does not acquire the control over the goods; until he assents, his possession is the possession of the seller (meaning any sending as accepting the delivery order); on his assenting, the possession becomes the possession of the buyer. In such a case the warehouseman mes a trustee for the purchaser, and there is an actual delivery to the purchaser as much as if goods had been delivered into his own hands. Wall v. Burn, 3 B. & C. 423; Harmen v. Ames, 2 Campb. 243; Tinsley v. Turner, 2 Bing. 3. 161.)

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

BY WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

12. Traitors and Felons.

By attainder for treason or other felony, the traitor becomes incapable of holding any description of landed property whatever (Perk. s. 26; Stat. Shep. Touch. 232); but if he previously conveys it away, such conveyance will be good as against all persons but the Crown; for notwithstanding that it has been said (see Prest. Shep. Touch. 232) that such conveyance is not good as against the lord of whom the land is held, the latter doctrine is wholly unfounded in principle; hence Mr. Preston, with his usual learning and accuracy, remarks (Prest. Shep. Touch. 232; 3 Prest. Abs. 2), "The title of the lord is a title by escheat, and so can be no escheat in this case, since there is no actual tenant by the alienation. If," he adds, "an attainted person be disqualified to alien as against the lord, this disability is because he is radically mortuus; for treason there is a forfeiture of the inheritance; in felony there is not any such forfeiture." (See also Vin. Abr. Attainder (B), Forfeiture (P); Bac. Abr. Forfeiture (A); Com. Dig. Forfeiture (B).) To remedy also the extreme law respecting forfeiture (which, corrupting the hereditary blood of the offender, rendered his general heirs incapable of inheriting or transmitting their own property by bequest in all cases where they were obliged to derive their title through the attainted person, whether through himself only, or a more remote ancestor), an Act of Parliament was passed by which corruption of blood was confined to the crimes of treason, petit treason, and murder (54 Geo. 3, c. 45). And by a subsequent statute (3 & 4 Wm. 4, s. 106, s. 10), it is enacted, that when any person from whom the descent of any land is to be traced shall have any relation who having been attainted shall die before such descent shall have taken place, then such attainted shall not prevent any person from inheriting such land, who would have been capable of inheriting the same, by tracing his descent through such relation, if he had not been attainted, unless such lands shall have escheated in consequence of such attainder before the 1st of January, 1834.

Previously, indeed, to either of the last above-mentioned statutes, an heir in tail might have derived his pedigree through an attainted person; for, notwithstanding a tenant in tail forfeits all lands of which he is seized in tail at the time of the crime committed, or at any time afterwards, yet he does not forfeit that which he never had; viz. the right of succession by the next heir in tail, unless the attainted person be or become owner in point of estate or right. (3 Prest. 393; Bro. Des. pl. 1; Bro. Forfeiture, pl. 37; Mantell v. Mantell, Cro. Eliz. 28; Sheffield v. Ratcliff, Godb. 305, Hob. 347.)

Upon the whole, therefore, it seems that an actual conveyance after the commission, but before conviction of the crime, will intercept the title of the lord; but in case attainder should follow, such conveyance would be inoperative against the Crown (Co. Litt. 42; Prest. Shep. Touch. 232, n. 131; 3 Prest. Abs. 392; Vin. Abr. Attainder (B), Forfeiture (P); Com. Dig. Forfeiture (B); Bac. Abr. Forfeiture (A).) The lord's title by escheat would, however, overreach a devise by will, because a devise does not take effect until the death of the testator, whereas a deed takes effect immediately upon its execution.

13. Aliens.

Aliens are incapable of holding lands in this country, which upon office found become forfeited to the Crown; and it seems that the title of the Crown will prevail over that of a bona fide purchaser, to whom the alien may previously to such office found have sold and conveyed the property. (2 Blac. Com. 274; Vin. Abr. Alien (A); Com. Dig. Alien (C); Shep. Touch. 232; Co. Litt. 2, 8, 42.) But the conveyance of an alien will be good against all other persons except the Crown; and it has also been held that an alien tenant in tail may suffer a recovery which will be effectual as against him and his issue, and the persons in remainder or reversion; because until office found the alien is seized of the freehold, and if the tenant to the precipe has the freehold at the time when the recovery is suffered, it will be sufficient, though it be defeated afterwards (4 Leon. 84; Prest. Shep. Touch. 232; Golds. 82; 1 Prest. Convey. 257; 5 Com. Dig. xxxvi. ch. 2, pl. 11, 12); but under the Fine and Recovery Substitution Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), an alien is incapacitated from being the protector of a settlement of entailed property. (Sec. .)

14. Mortgagees.

A mortgagee, unless under a power or trust for sale, cannot, before the equity of redemption is barred, either by lapse of time or foreclosure, sell the mortgaged lands so as to defeat the mortgagor's equity of redemption; neither does a fine levied, or a recovery suffered by a mortgagee in possession, bar either the mortgagor or persons claiming under him (Weldon v. Dux Ebor, 1 Vern. 132; Patch on Mortgages, 118); unless in the latter instance the mortgagor were to come in upon the voucher. (Cro. Jac. 593; Stanhope v. Tucker, Pre. Cha. 435.) Nor will a lease made by a mortgagee in possession be binding upon the equity of redemption, unless there was an absolute necessity for it, (2 Com. Dig. tit. xv. ch. 2, pl. 19; Hungerford v. Clay, 9 Mod. 1); and then only at improved rack-rent. (Weldon v. Ralston, 1 Cha. Cas. 172.) But where the mortgage-deed contains a power or trust enabling the mortgagee to sell the mortgaged premises, he may undoubtedly do so (Corder v. Morgan, 18 Ves. 344; Clay v. Sharpe and Others, ib. 846, n.); and the mortgagee's receipts shall be a sufficient discharge to purchasers, the mortgagee may confer a good title without the mortgagor's concurring in the sale. Whether on failure of heirs of the mortgagor the equity of redemption will become absolute in the mortgagee, or escheat to the lord, seems to have been a disputed question; but the better opinion seems to be, that neither would be entitled in case the mortgagor should leave any personal representatives; because, as the mortgagor may demand payment of the money from the personal representatives, the Court would order a reconveyance to them, and would, if necessary, consider the estate reconveyed as coming in lieu of the personality, and as assets to answer even simple-contract creditors. (Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Blacks. 123; 1 Eden, 177.)

Sale by a mortgagee in possession without a trust or power of sale, when valid.—Where a mortgagee has been in the uninterrupted possession of the mortgaged lands for twenty years and upwards, he may convey away his estate so as to bind the equity of redemption. Mortgagees, it is true, were not within the old Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16); but yet courts of equity long since determined that by analogy to that statute, twenty years should be the time to bar the mortgagor of his equity of redemption (Jenner v. Tracey, and Belch v. Harvey, 3 P. Wms. 287, n.; White v. Ewer, 2 Vent. 340; Anon, 8 Atk. 313; 2 Fonbl. Eq. 264, 265; 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 313, n. a; Pearson v. Pullen, 1 Cha. Cas. 102; Cloddy v. Symonds, 1 Vern. 397; Sanders v. Hord, 1 Cha. Rep. 79; Chapman v. Bowyer, ib. 110; Frazer v. Moore, Bunb. 54; Corbet v. Barker, 1 Anstr. 138; Hovenden v. Amesley (Lord), 2 Scho. & Lef. 636; Hodde v. Hesley, 1 Ves. & Bea. 539; 1 Mad. Pract. 519, 2nd edit.; 1 Redes. Tr. 174, n. w); which rule of equity has been confirmed by the recent Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, by the 20th section of which is enacted, that the mortgagor shall be barred at the end of twenty years from the time when the mortgagee took possession, and from the last written acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title. But this will not operate as a bar to parties under the disabilities of coverture, infancy, lunacy, or absence beyond the seas, who are allowed ten years after the removal of their disabilities to assert their rights. (Sec. 16.) But when the time once begins to run, it will continue to run on unimpeded by any succeeding disabilities (sec. 18; see also Corval v. Sykes, 1 Cha. Rep. 1931; Floyd v. Mansel, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 185; Knowles v. Spence, Eq. Ca. Abr. 315; St. John v. Turner, 2 Vern. 418); nor will any claim be allowed after forty years. (Sec. 17.) Imprisonment, which was formerly ranked as a disability, is omitted in the recent Statute of Limitations; and, therefore, simply as such, can no longer be treated as a disability. And neither Scotland, Ireland, nor the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, or any of the adjacent islands (forming part of her Majesty's dominions), are to be deemed beyond the seas. And where a party has absconded beyond the seas to avoid or retard justice, he will not in such case be allowed to avail himself of this disability. (Jenner v. Tracey, and Belch v. Harvey, 3 P. Wms. 287; Patch on Mortgages, 284; 2 Mad. Pract. 519, 2nd edit.)

15. Trustees.

It is a rule of equity that no act of a trustee shall prejudice his cestui que trust (Lechmere v. Carlisle, Earl of, 3 P. Wms. 211, 215); but it contains one exception, viz. where the trustee is in the actual possession of the trust estate, and conveys it to a purchaser or mortgagee, who has notice of the trust, for a valuable consideration; in which case such purchaser or mortgagee, as the case may be, will be entitled to hold the estate against the cestui que trust (Finch v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 P. Wms. 279; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Ed. 195; Nullard's case, 2 Freem. 43; Mansel v. Mansel, 2 P. Wms. 681; Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 T. R. 171; Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Bal. & B. 318; Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 209), for by such conveyance the purchaser acquires the legal estate, and having by the purchase acquired an equal equity with the cestui que trust, the legal estate will be suffered to prevail. But it would be otherwise if the purchaser had notice of the trust, for in that case he would become merely a trustee for the cestui que trust, whatever amount of consideration he may have paid for the purchase. (Sanders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271; Langton v. Astrey, 2 Cha. Rep. 30; Mansel v. Mansel, 2 P. Wms. 681; Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 T. R. 171; Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Bal. & B. 318; Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 209), for by such conveyance the purchaser acquires the legal estate, and having by the purchase acquired an equal equity with the cestui que trust, the legal estate will be suffered to prevail. But it would be otherwise if the purchaser had notice of the trust, for in that case he would become merely a trustee for the cestui que trust, whatever amount of consideration he may have paid for the purchase. (Sanders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271; Langton v. Astrey, 2 Cha. Rep. 30; Mansel v. Mansel, 2 P. Wms. 681; Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 T. R. 171; Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Bal. & B. 318; Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 209), for by such conveyance the purchaser acquires the legal estate, and having by the purchase acquired an equal equity with the cestui que trust, the legal estate will be suffered to prevail. But it would be otherwise if the purchaser had notice of the trust, for in that case he would become merely a trustee for the cestui que trust, whatever amount of consideration he may have paid for the purchase. (Sanders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271; Langton v. Astrey, 2 Cha. Rep. 30; Mansel v. Mansel, 2 P. Wms. 681; Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 T. R. 171; Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Bal. & B. 318; Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 209), for by such conveyance the purchaser acquires the legal estate, and having by the purchase acquired an equal equity with the cestui que trust, the legal estate will be suffered to prevail. But it would be otherwise if the purchaser had notice of the trust, for in that case he would become merely a trustee for the cestui que trust, whatever amount of consideration he may have paid for the purchase.
